Mr. BLAINE. Does the chairman of the Judiciary Committee or the Senator who reports this bill know of any fund in any Department of the United States Government that has ever been held this way except those funds in the Interior Department which took wings unto themselves and flew away?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, there are heaps of them. But it is not necessary to go into that. This bill stands upon an entirely different principle, and that is the power of Congress, under these acts, and its regulating power, as States have, according to a dozen late decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, to regulate the transactions of people who are engaged in transacting public interests, for the benefit of their creditors, to establish sinking funds, or to accumulate money in order to do one of the things that their authority compels them to do, and that is to keep their promises to their creditors.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator is running beyond the point. I am not touching that point at all. I am not within a thousand leagues of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if the Senator asks me a question he should give me time enough to answer; it may take a week.

Mr. BLAINE. I want the Senator to answer my question, and not some other one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what I am doing. It is just possible the Senator cannot perceive it, but I am. The Senator wants to know why we do not consider this as a payment into the Treasury.

Mr. BLAINE. No; I do not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that if any bonds are lost or stolen it will not be the loss of the companies. Is not that it?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; practically.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; practically that is it. I say that the foundation of all legislative jurisprudence, (which I think is an apt term for this kind of business of compelling people engaged in public pursuits and under public power to keep their obligations all around,) is the regulation and control to compel them to do their duties to their creditors as well as to the public in carrying the freights and passengers, and so on. Now, then, everywhere, in every State, and in every civilized country, the ordinary method of accumulating money to pay off debts is a sinking fund of some sort. The sinking fund is required by courts and by Legislatures and by Congresses and so on, to be invested in the best securities that can be found to accumulate the most money where the debtor furnishes the money; but where, as under the Railroad Committee bill, the United States furnishes the money, it might be a little different thing. That being the case the people who furnish the money, and the Government or the courts that control its security, doing their best to preserve it, if there happens to be a loss, that loss, as in all such cases, must fall upon the fund, upon the debtor. That is a principle of universal jurisprudence. But in this particular case, let me say to my friend from Maine, there is not any practically conceivable danger of loss, because this investment in bonds of the United States or in the first-mortgage bonds of the company, as is now suggested by the Senator from Ohio, is an investment in bonds that as they come into the Treasury can be and should be (if you have a Secretary of the Treasury that is good for anything as we have now) so indorsed and stamped that if all the thieves in Washington, which is saying a good deal, were to get into the Treasury and carry them off, it would not do the companies a bit of hurt or the thieves a bit of good. That is a practical answer, I suggest, to my friend.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I must say that is just tantamount to keeping the books, because you do not put into the sinking fund a negotiable security.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We do not intend to do that.

Mr. BLAINE. You simply put in that which shall appear on the books as a credit, because you destroy the character of the security as a negotiable piece of paper at once. It occurred to me in this wise, that the money which is paid in under this bill, if it shall become a law, will be paid in at stated periods. It can be anticipated, I suppose, with as much certainty as any other source of revenue, for instance, though this I suppose is not to be regarded as revenue. We have a very large amount of 5.20 bonds, unhappily too large, 6 per cent. bonds in gold that are payable on call. We can call them in at any time we choose on numbers, so that every dollar the railroad companies would pay in might be used to destroy for the time being or immediately a similar amount of 5.20 bonds on which we are paying 6 per cent. interest in gold; and you might credit it to the company just as you choose. If you regard the 5 per cent. as a sufficient interest or the 6 per cent. as a sufficient interest, whatever it is you credit them with that and call it that; but it seems to me that is its state now if you put in the 6 per cent. bond of the company, which I think is a good suggestion, because there is no thing you can invest in so good as your own notes in the shape of protecting your credit. If you put that in and then the 5 per cent. bonds and then give the Secretary of the Treasury discretion, as this bill does, to run down through the 4½ or 4 per cent. bonds according to his discretion, which leaves the thing in a very uncertain attitude, you do not know exactly what it is going to be.

Of course while it is a very proper provision to put in the first-mortgage bonds, the Senator from Ohio knows even better than myself that that will at once very materially advance the value of those bonds. Nothing advances the value of any bonds so much as to have them bought for a sinking fund, and they may very soon of course be out of reach. It does seem to me that whatever you order it to be invested in, or whatever discretion you may invest the Secretary of the Treasury with in dealing with the question of the sinking fund, you ought as between the company that you are collecting the money from and the Government to agree upon a specific rate. You can very easily make it good. Whatever that rate may be in the judgment of Congress it should be specific and specified, and stand at that. Instead of hunting around for bonds at a premium, or this kind, or that kind, or the other kind, I think the wisest thing the Secretary of the Treasury can do when he receives this million or two million, or whatever it may be, semi-annually is to buy up the 6 per cent. securities of the United States, which are now out by hundreds of millions and which can be brought in on call any day you choose, and stop that much of gold interest. That is a privilege which will still be open to the Secretary of the Treasury for the next ten or twelve years, until the five-twenties are entirely exhausted. I do not know so valuable and so useful a mode in which the sinking fund should be administered, although I may be entirely mistaken in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the error, with great deference to my friend from Maine, into which he falls about this proposition is this: the duty of the United States as the trust company, so to speak, into which this sinking fund is to be paid, being the safest possible trust company, of course, is to make the most that it can as a trust company, so to speak, out of the money that is contributed by the debtor. That is a plain duty of right and of trust, as in the case of all sinking funds and trust.

Very well. Now, if my friend says then "Why do you not take the 6 per cent. bonds of the United States?" the answer is, that the Secretary, if he took those, would have the same right to call them as against the sinking fund and the companies that he has against the present holders. Just as soon as he can borrow money from the people at a reduced rate of interest he would be bound to call those very bonds. The consequence would be that you would drop down then to the lowest rate of interest at which Government securities can be got. The first business of a sinking fund is to have it absolutely safe, and therefore the duty of the person who holds the sinking fund, be he Government or bank or trust company, is to invest at the highest rate he can in a perfectly safe security, as far as human contrivance can make it safe, and of course the bonds of the United States are supposed to be that. Therefore, it does not do any good to the United States to take its 6 per cent. bonds and call them in, for the reason that just as soon as the Secretary of the Treasury can borrow that money at a lower rate of interest under existing laws he is to call them in; and it would be unjust to the United States to make the United States as the holder of this sinking fund pay a greater rate of interest to these companies than it paid to any other persons from whom it should borrow money; because in the attitude of a debtor, or a borrower, the United States has a right, and it is its duty, to borrow money at the lowest possible rate of interest. So the moment you separate the two ideas of the United States as a borrower of money upon bonds, and as the holder of a trust, and keep those two notions separate as they ought to be, there is no difficulty in the case. The money is paid in, as this bill provides, to be invested in the best securities you can, in order to make it accumulate the most. If they can be invested in the bonds of the United States which are the highest ones of safety, then invest them in those bonds that bear the greatest rate of interest that the United States is obliged to pay. But it is not obliged as we can all see now, unless we pass some more silver bills, and so on, to pay 6 per cent. interest. It can borrow money even now at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., as we are told by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. Since the silver bill passed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Since the silver bill. The Secretary of the Treasury says so. Whether he is correct or not, I do not know; I hope he is. I hope we can borrow it at 4; I hope we can borrow it at 3, at the lowest possible sum, no matter what it is. But in respect of these companies our duty as a holder of a trust fund is simply to invest it, first, in securities that are absolutely safe, that is to say, the securities of the United States or these first-mortgage bonds, because they must be paid; but there is another difficulty about that which I will come to presently; second, to invest it at that rate of interest which will get the most money. But if the Secretary invests in United States bonds he must practically invest in those that bear the lower rate of interest; but the United States can now borrow money upon those bonds to pay off those of a higher rate.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose he invests in the bonds issued to these companies, which are 6 per cent. bonds not payable until thirty years?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what the Senator from Ohio has referred to.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not mean the first-mortgage bonds of the companies. I mean the bonds of the United States issued to these companies which bear 6 per cent. interest and which are not payable until thirty years.

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator know what rate those bonds bear?

Mr. ALLISON. They are above par.

Mr. THURMAN. Let me tell the Senator that they are 118.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly the practical obstacle, if you take a piece of paper and figure out the interest, to investing in bonds ever so good, if they bear a very high rate of premium because you are obliged to charge your trust fund with the premium you pay and to reduce the profit to the debtor who is accumulating a fund by just that much; so that the only practical thing to do is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, as this bill does, to do the best he can in the public securities of the United States for the benefit of this fund, or in the first-mortgage bonds of the companies, which are paramount to ours.

The only practical objection that occurs to me as to the first-mortgage bonds is as to one contingency. Suppose there are now, in respect of these companies, about $50,000,000, in round numbers, or $54,000,000 or whatever it may be of these first-mortgage bonds. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury invests these securities in those, and at the end of the period, 1895 or 1900, no matter what, he has caught up half of them. They are in bonds, they are not in money. Some disaster that nobody can foresee comes upon all this railway business, and the companies cannot earn money enough to more than pay the running expenses and keep up the road; it is a failure as many railway companies have been. I cannot foresee that; I do not think it at all likely to happen; but if it should, where would we be then? Here would have been a sinking fund accumulated, which, in respect of one half of these bonds that had been brought into the Treasury was very well, but how is it in respect of the other half that were outstanding and for the benefit of the holders of which this fund is accumulated, as well as of the other creditors of these companies in due order? How are you to produce equality between the holders of these bonds? You cannot take the bonds that you have bought in, which will not sell for anything in the case I have supposed, and divide them around among the other people. The consequence is that the man who has transferred his first-mortgage bonds to the Government at this rate, the present rate, at par and above, gets his full pay; the man who has not transferred, and who is entitled to be protected by this sinking fund gets no practical benefit from it. So, if you are to have a liquidation at that time and a liquidation in cash, as every liquidation must be theoretically and practically in almost every case, you cannot make a division. That is the objection to investing even for a sinking fund, except where the company itself is buying up its own bonds in the nature of payment, which is another thing—but as a sinking fund, the objection to such an investment is the possibility that at the end you will be unable to do equal justice to the creditors of that class. It may be in this instance, I dare say it is, that that possibility is so remote that practically there is not much danger in running the risk.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, in regard to the last suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, it does not strike me as being any very serious objection against the amendment that I indicated I would offer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not suggested that it was, as I think the possibility very remote.

Mr. THURMAN. In the first place it is too remote a possibility, as it seems to me. I cannot conceive it possible that these two roads should ever be worth less than the principal of the first-mortgage bonds. My own opinion about them is that they will be worth a great deal more; but even if we were to suppose a case in which they were not, and in which their first-mortgage bonds would have absolutely no market value at all, and if at that time say one-half of those first-mortgage bonds constituted the sinking fund, I do not see that any particular injustice would be done by the cancellation of those bonds in the discharge of the sinking fund, because that would leave the road as a security for the remaining first-mortgage bonds, and those whose bonds had not gone into the sinking fund would be benefited and not be injured. But it is so remote a possibility that these companies would ever be unable to pay the interest on the first-mortgage bonds that I do not think it is necessary to speculate about it. If that time should ever come there will be a Congress here to take such steps as shall be necessary.

A word now in regard to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine. If I understood his suggestion, it was that the United States should take this money and not invest it in bonds or securities of any kind, but treat it as its own money and use it as its own money, paying it out for its own debts or liabilities or current expenses, but crediting it to the sinking fund and allowing a rate of interest upon it. That I understand to be the idea of the Senator from Maine. In the first place, it is perfectly plain that if the United States were to do such a thing as that, justice to the Government would require that we should fix the rate of interest at the very lowest rate that the United States can borrow money at. Anything else would be a gift or gratuity from the United States. That is one of the objections to the bill reported by the Railroad Committee. It in effect proposes two things: one, that we shall allow interest at 6 per cent., semi-annually compounded, on our own money; and secondly, that as to the portion of the money which the railroad companies are to pay in, and which is their money, we shall allow interest at 6 per cent., compounded semi-annually, on that until the 1st day of October, 1900, a period of twenty-two years and more. In other words, that the Government shall make a loan for twenty-two years and more, diminishing year by year in point of time, and pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. compounded semi-annually, when the Government can borrow every dollar that it wants at 4½ per cent., and can borrow in greenbacks, as the money is to be paid by these companies into the sinking fund, payable at 4 per cent., and the Government is now every day borrowing money at an average of nearly $100,000 per diem at the rate of 4 per cent. I do not know that Senators have paid attention to the fact that scarcely a day passes over our heads, Sundays excepted, when the Government does not borrow from $50,000 to $100,000 at 4 per cent. interest.

Mr. ALLISON. The 4 per cent. bonds are above par.

Mr. THURMAN. The 4 per cent. bonds are above par; they were above par in gold yesterday in New York, being at 100½; so that it is wholly inadmissible that the Government should take this money and credit it to a sinking fund and agree to pay a stipulated rate of interest upon it higher than the Government can borrow money at. But then suppose the Government should do that; suppose I am right in that and the Government takes this money and agrees to pay 4 per cent., at which it can borrow all the money it wants. The 4 per cent. compounded annually would not be equal to the 6 per cent. without rest that the companies have to pay; it falls a little short of it. Four and a half per cent. is a little above it; 5 per cent. is very considerably above it, as the amount of interest that the Government would have to pay; but we should be guilty of the injustice, if we were to take this money and credit it with 4 per cent. interest, of taking the money of these companies and not making as much interest upon it as they are compelled to pay to us. That would not be fair to them, and there is no necessity for it.

In respect to the danger which the Senator from Maine suggested, and which I undertook to answer jocosely, and I believe got the worst of the poker in that business, the hot end of it, let us see whether there is any danger. In the first place, I do not know that I quite agree with my leader, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, on the subject of the responsibility of the Government. I am strongly inclined to believe if the Government by the exercise of its own legislative power, per vim, as you may say, takes the money of these companies to invest in a sinking fund, that it becomes responsible for the sinking fund. It is rather my opinion that it becomes responsible for the safe keeping of that sinking fund, because the companies may be said to have paid it in inveitum, and where that has been the case, where we have by mere legislative power, and on that I rest this bill, and believe it as sound a foundation as the granite rocks of the mountains, on our power as a Congress of the United States; when we exercise that power and take this money and put it in a sinking fund in our own Treasury, it appears to me that we become guarantors for its safe keeping. I have not the least doubt in the world that the Government would make it good, whether the Government was absolutely liable or not; but there is no difficulty in making it safe, even where you invest it in bonds. What is to prevent every bond being stamped that is taken? What is to prevent your requiring it to be done, if necessary, by making a requisition in this proposed law to amend the bill so as to require that every bond which is thus purchased shall be stamped with the word "sinking fund," or any other appropriate designation, which would prevent its circulation, prevent its negotiation? Nothing is more common than to do that. I have seen with my own eyes, done with a machine, twenty millions of bonds and coupons stamped, every coupon stamped by a machine, so as to prevent their circulation, to show that they belonged to a court in which the litigation was pending. There is no difficulty at all about doing it. They can stamp all these bonds at the Treasury Department. They can stamp half a million of them in a day if they were to buy half a million. If any amendment is necessary to the bill to require that these bonds thus purchased shall be stamped and the coupons upon them too, so as to prevent their negotiation, and therefore to prevent their being stolen and used, I shall be very happy to join with the Senator from Maine, or any one else, in framing such an amendment to the bill, of course for the safety and security of the Government, and of the companies too, in respect of this sinking fund.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator who reports the bill and the Senator from Vermont differ a little as to the responsibility of the United States in case of loss in the sinking fund. Both Senators, I think, a little misapprehend me in my position. I was not speaking at the time in an adversary sense at all to the Senator's bill. I was trying to perfect the bill if I could.

Mr. THURMAN. So I understood the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. I will ask the attention of my friend from Vermont. I think both Senators leave out of view a consideration which has to my mind a great deal of what I may call equitable weight in this matter. I understand the theory of this bill to be that you establish a sinking fund out of the net earnings of this company for the protection of all the persons interested in it. Here is a first-mortgage bond, and a Government bond, and a land-grant bond, and a sinking-fund bond, and stockholders behind them all, and this bill proceeds on the theory, which I am not disposed to say is an unwise one, that the stockholders should not have the disposition of all the net earnings, and a wise provision should be made, which the stockholders are themselves quite ready to make, for the security of the other persons interested in the roads.

Now, the stockholders say that they desire to make a sinking fund; that if they were permitted or if it were regarded as judicious or on the whole advisable for them to make and continue and administer that sinking fund that they could realize upon it at least 7 per cent., certainly beyond doubt 6 per cent., and some of them claim 8 per cent. In regard to the 5 per cent. of net earnings and the half transportation which belong to the Government under the acts of 1862 and 1864, there is no dispute at all here in this argument. The sinking fund is taken beyond that, out of something which the law does not now provide for and which they, if permitted themselves to put into a sinking fund, could realize very much more than you propose to allow them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As they think.

Mr. BLAINE. As they think and as they believe, and they are very competent business men, whose opinion on that point probably would be better than that of the Senator from Vermont or mine—very much better than mine. They say that they could do it. We say that is not safe, because although we might be perfectly willing to trust those who are now administering these roads we have not the least idea who may happen to be directors and administrators of this great trust twenty years hence, and after forty or fifty or sixty millions or more may be accumulated in the sinking fund somebody may come in as successors and think they can devote it to wiser purposes, and it may take wings to itself just as the Indian trust bonds did in the Interior Department, and you would not find them when you come to look for them at the maturity of the mortgage.

Therefore it becomes of course a wise provision that the Government of the United States shall be and must be the custodian of this sinking fund; but does not there come in there just a grain of equity that we ought to pay some consideration to the fact that they could realize as business men far more for this fund if they were permitted themselves to administer it? If you confine the Secretary of the Treasury to a 5 per cent. or a lower bond in his discretion you really deprive him of doing that thing which is not only most advantageous to the sinking fund but which is most advantageous to the Government itself, because no one, I apprehend, will doubt that the very wisest use that can be made of any surplus that happens in the Treasury of the United States from any source is to buy the 5.20 bonds of the United States which are now bearing 6 per cent. interest. The Senator from Ohio, I repeat again, says if that should happen to be lost the Government is responsible. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] says it is not. The Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHRISTIANCY,] who is an able lawyer, says he thinks the Government would be responsible. Here is a difference as to the responsibility, but there cannot be the slightest doubt in the world that you are entirely safe if you agree to take this money from the company and treat it just as you do the Geneva award, which is in your Treasury, which is answerable for any appropriation Congress may make, but which is swept into the general hopper and ground in with the entire grist, just as the naval pension fund is. We have a naval pension fund of $13,000,000, but it is not in a separate safe, it is not in any separate bond; it exists as a credit to that fund, to be disposed of by Congress as they please. Why is it not the safest thing and the fairest thing both to the Government and to the sinking fund to treat that in the same way? That is what occurs to me.

One other thing, Mr. President. I am not disposed to think in looking at the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee that the sums which it exacts of the railroad companies are excessive. I do not think the sums included in that bill are more than the companies can fairly pay, but I wish to submit one thing to the consideration of those who are responsible for the bill and who are advocating it. The bill proceeds upon a theory which I will not here and now stop to discuss. It has been discussed, very ably and very elaborately, by the lawyers pro and con. The bill proceeds on the theory that under the reservation to alter, repeal, or amend Congress has the perfect right to dictate and direct what the companies shall do; that that rests in the discretion of Congress, and that in this bill which is now proposed Congress shall exercise that discretion. It is a "sic volo, sic jubeo." We have the power reposed in us, and, with the discretion which should of course characterize all votes and all actions in Congress, we are about to exercise that power. We take a white sheet of paper and we write down on it what these companies shall do, and, as I said, I am not disposed to say, for I have not examined as closely as I might, that what you demand the companies shall do is either excessive or oppressive. But in your discretion you say it shall be thus and so. Under your power to alter and amend and repeal you here demand and direct what the companies shall do. Then at the close of the bill—not willing to part in any wise with this power, not possibly exhausting it by any exercise of it—you still say that "nothing in this act shall be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress at any time hereafter to further alter, amend, or repeal the said acts hereinbefore mentioned." Therefore you do not know that this settlement which you order or the thing which you direct the companies to do will last a single year. You propose to leave this open, greatly, I think, to the detriment of the companies, which we are not possibly first bound to consider, greatly to the detriment of the interest of sound legislation, greatly to the detriment of the dignity and propriety of legislation; you propose, after you have written down exactly what you demand of them, that you will not say to them that that shall last over a twelvemonth.

Now I submit that in the full exercise of this power, which I am not debating and which I do not now assent to or deny, you yourselves, without asking the companies one way or the other, direct that they shall do this thing. Now, is it not fair, is it not a business proposition, is it not that which they have a right to expect and which we have a right to expect, that it shall for a time settle and remove this question from Congress? Do you want it here all the time? I ventured to say in a short debate last winter on a bill then pending somewhat similar to the present one, that for every one of the fifteen years I had had the honor to serve in either branch of Congress the Pacific Railroad had been, like the poor, always with us. It at least has that resemblance to the poor, that we have it always with us. I have some ambition to survive that condition of affairs. I want it away from here. I want it so directed, if you choose, that the Government shall get precisely what it thinks it should have, but that when you say that you shall also say to these companies "Do this as we direct, and you shall for a certain term have full power to operate your roads. Faithfully comply with all that we direct you, and it shall be held and taken, for the point at issue in reference to the debt, as a settlement between us."

Suppose you do not—I should like the attention of my honorable friend who reports the bill—suppose you do not do it, suppose you direct what is to be done here, and you pass the bill, but reserve the right at the next session of Congress, eight months ahead, to come here to reopen the question if you choose. You reserve to yourself the broadest power with the broadest possible intimation that you will exercise that power.

Now we are bound to take cognizance of current events; we are bound to take cognizance of what is likely to happen and in my judgment will inevitably happen. I think the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] said that the stock of these two companies was $91,000,000. You cannot have $91,000,000 of speculative stock, for it necessarily becomes such, on the stock boards in New York without every shade of interest growing up that is known to the technology of Wall street speculators. There will be "bulls" and "bears" and "puts" and "calls" and "longs" and "shorts" on it all the time; one side will be interested in putting the stock far above and another far below its real value, and the very first scheme they will seize upon to effect their interest will be to get some legislation started in Congress, and Congress will be used perpetually under that clause as the bob-tail to the kite of Wall street speculations on this subject. All the scandal that grew out of the Pacific Mail subsidy, which was so serious at the other end of the Capitol, arose entirely from a dispute in Wall street that was adjourned from there to Washington to see if they could not get some legislation to affect favorably one side and unfavorably the other side. You will have that just as certain as the first Monday in December brings Congress together each year.

Just leave that open; just say as you say in this bill that, although we possess plenary and absolute power to provide what these companies shall do, we do not propose to say anything further, that we do not propose to say that we will not do anything for any consecutive ninety days, and you declare to every person outside who is interested in the agitation, "If you want a real lively row got up over these Pacific railroad stocks, the Senate and the House of Representatives at Washington furnish the place to start the machine going; just come here, and here we can have it any day you choose;" somebody will put in a memorial, somebody, possibly imposed upon, will put in a bill, somebody will move one thing or move another; you will have it on the anvil to be hammered the whole time.

I do not believe that it is the least in opposition to the theory on which even this bill goes (a theory which I am not now discussing) to add to the end of it, to section 12, what I shall indicate. I propose to offer an amendment that shall at least get the sense of the Senate, and I shall at least acquit myself of any future trouble that may come from that source. I shall have that satisfaction. The bill says—

That nothing in this act shall be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress at any time hereafter further to alter, amend, or repeal the said acts hereinbefore mentioned.

Now I propose to add right there, striking out the remaining words of that section:

But so long as said Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railway Companies shall faithfully comply with the provisions of the said acts of 1862 and 1864, and of this act relating to payments to the United States on account of bonds advanced and of the sinking fund to be established as aforesaid, such compliance shall be deemed and taken as sufficient to meet the obligations of said companies on account of such bonds prior to the maturity thereof.

I limit it wholly to this question, limit it exactly to the point of the indebtedness on the bonds. Unless I have miswritten it or misconceived the meaning of it, I do not put it one particle beyond the case in hand, nor do I say what the Congress assembled here in the year 1900 shall do when the bonds mature. They will probably be as wise or possibly a good deal wiser than we are about that, and the companies will probably long before that have passed into other hands. Let the future deal with the future, but we have laid down what they shall do. Now let us say that, if they faithfully do it, the thing can run until the bonds mature. It will operate as a sinking fund. I think the Senator from Ohio considers it to go very near paying off the whole obligation. I have not made a calculation, but will take his figures.

Mr. THURMAN. Within about $40,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. That probably will not be very embarrassing; that can be dealt with as they of that day may choose; but, whatever you do, let us at all events not keep it as a running sore for the next fifteen or twenty years, as it has been for the last fifteen or twenty years.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I shall not go into an exhaustive answer to the Senator from Maine on his amendment to-day; but there are a few words that I want to say right on the spur of the moment.

The Senator imagines that if we do not make a finality from now until the maturity of the bonds, that is to say, for twenty years, for the average of the bonds will mature about July, 1898, there will be an eternal turmoil here in Congress; that men engaged in bullying or bearing this stock will come and pester Congress for more legislation and legislation inimical to the railroad companies. Now I want the attention of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. I will try to give it.

Mr. THURMAN. Experience is a complete answer to every word he said on that subject. For two years this subject has been before the Senate; for more than two years it has been before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate; and in all that time I have never seen or heard of one man hostile to the railroad companies lobbying Congress, not one. I have seen this Senate Chamber filled with the railroad lobby; I have seen the galleries filled; I have seen the corridors filled; I have seen the committee-room besieged; I have seen Senators besieged at their own houses by the railroad lobby; but never did I see one man or hear of one man here urging legislation hostile to these companies. The whole legislation on this subject has been the origin of the thoughts and feelings and sense of justice of members of Congress themselves in the discharge of their public duty, and there is not the least danger in the world such as the Senator from Maine supposes.

But now as to the proposition to tie us up for twenty years, if this bill should pass, irrespective of what change of circumstances may take place. If that is to be done, then I want a very different bill from this; I want a bill that will require a great deal more from these companies than this bill requires if our hands are to be tied for twenty years. Does the Senator know how much these companies will have to pay under this bill if it becomes a law, in actual cash in addition to the half-transportation account which we take? We put it in the bill that the Union Pacific shall pay $850,000 a year, and the Central Pacific $1,200,000 a year, or so much thereof as with the 5 per cent. and the whole transportation account shall make 25 per cent. of the net earnings of the roads as defined in the bill, and before we get net earnings we allow them to deduct from their gross expenses the interest on the first mortgage. I have had a calculation made to show how much they will have to pay in the future in addition to the half-transportation account which we take—how much additional cash they will have to pay upon the hypothesis that their earnings in the future shall be the same that they have been in the last six years on the average. The Judiciary Committee in their report show to the Senate that the half-transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings of these two companies upon an average of their six years' business last past would be about $1,166,000 per annum. I take it in round numbers at $1,200,000 per annum, and upon that I submitted to the chief of accounts of the Treasury Department, who is perhaps the best expert in Washington, this question:

Taking "net earnings" as defined in section 1 of Mr. THURMAN's bill, and estimating the "5 per cent. of net earnings" and the "half-transportation account" in the future as follows, namely: Union Pacific, $700,000 annually, and Central Pacific, $800,000 annually; together, $1,500,000 annually; what additional sum would each company have to pay into the sinking fund to make a sum equal to 25 per cent. of its net earnings?

Now, remember we only require 25 per cent. We put in the sum of $850,000 for the Union and $1,200,000 for the Central Pacific, but we only require so much of that sum as with the transportation accounts and the 5 per cent. of net earnings will make 25 per cent. of the net earnings of the companies; and how much do you suppose the companies will have to pay of additional cash beyond the half-transportation account which we retain? The Union Pacific only $100,000 a year, and the Central Pacific only $800,000 a year.

Now, are we to tie up our hands for twenty years, and as to the Union Pacific, no matter how great may be its gains, no matter how much its business and its profits may increase, say that if it will allow us to retain the half-transportation account which is now payable to it, about $400,000 a year, and pay us $100,000 more, making $500,000, we will continue to pay for it $1,600,000 every year in interest on its subsidy bonds?

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the difference, I want to ask the Senator from Ohio, between the amount then, if his calculation is correct, that is to be paid in by these companies under the Judiciary Committee's bill and under the Railroad Committee's bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I will tell the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Senator answers that, will he permit one other question? I understand the Senator that according to his expert the half-transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings amount to about $1,200,000 or a little less than that.

Mr. THURMAN. That is the estimate of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say according to the expert, under the Judiciary Committee bill, the amount of the 5 per cent—

Mr. THURMAN. No, the Judiciary Committee estimate that. This expert, this chief of accounts who has been detailed to the accounts of these railroad companies for the last two years, is of the opinion that the 5 per cent. and the half-transportation, instead of amounting simply to $1,200,000, will amount to $1,700,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. But the estimate of the Judiciary Committee is that it will amount to little less than $1,200,000.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Taking the companies' statement as evidence of it. He takes the companies' accounts.

Mr. MITCHELL. I simply wanted to understand the different estimates.

Mr. THURMAN. I put it to the Senate if they are willing to say that if this Union Pacific shall pay in the half-transportation account which we retain but which under existing laws it is entitled to receive and $100,000 more, a half million dollars a year, for twenty years, while we are paying for it $1,600,000 a year, we will not legislate any more on the subject; our hands shall be tied; we will not exercise the reserved power of Congress? No, Mr. President, that will not do. That proposition will not do at all. There is no necessity for it. These companies are in no danger from Congress if they will do what is right, and they know it perfectly well. The difficulty is even to get a bill that will make them do what is approximately right. That is the whole trouble. They are in no danger whatsoever. In the first place there is no hostility to them in Congress, and never has been. No measure has been proposed here in hostility to them. The only defect of the very bill of the Judiciary Committee—no, I will not say its "only defect," but its chief defect—is that it is too lenient to these companies; it is too conservative; it does not require what it ought to require. That is its chief defect; and to say that we shall take this measure, so lenient, so conservative, and abnegate the power that we possess to legislate as circumstances may require, tie up our hands for twenty years, is what I, for one, can never agree to. I would a great deal rather let the law stand as it is than agree to any such proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should like to add a word on this subject. The proposition of the Senator from Maine that Congress is to provide by law that these payments into this sinking fund shall be unchangeable for twenty years, is, in my opinion, founded upon an erroneous principle entirely. The attitude of Congress in respect of these great corporations and of their creditors, is not that of an adversary party who is making bargains with these people like a private citizen; it is not that of a hostile operator who wishes to speculate out of their stocks and their operations; but it is that of an impartial tribunal that, like a court of justice in respect of the subjects that it deals with, stands always ready to adjust its operations according to the condition of each particular case all the time. You might therefore, on principle, just as well require in a judiciary bill that a court of justice that had once made an order for the appointment of a receiver, or for an assessment upon stockholders when a case is in court that would warrant that, or whatever should treat it as a finality, and that never in the discretion of the court should it be changed according to changing circumstances and the necessities of justice as to make a provision of this kind. The principle that the Senator stands upon is a principle that was equally forcible when these very charters and acts of incorporation were passed. Why could it not then have been said "whatever you agree that these companies may do in your law as you have written it, let that be a finality; reserve no power to exercise future control according as public interest and public justice may from time to time require?" It would be the same principle exactly. That will not do, Mr. President. No State could live by such legislation as that; and the most that States in respect of corporations have found occasion to regret in the legislation of the last fifty years has been that they have been misled or entrapped into granting of privileges or conceding rights without a reservation of future control, by which the public interest and the rights of private creditors of such corporations have been greatly prejudiced and injured. Therefore, if I am right in my proposition—and I am sure it will commend itself to every Senator who hears me—that the attitude of Congress is that of perfect impartiality in the nature of a legislative tribunal controlling these great public corporations for the duties that they were designed to perform as well to their creditors as the public, that right of control is inherent all the time; and hence while we require particular things to-day, it may happen that in the near future it will turn out that the things which appear to be perfectly just and right now may need alteration and change even in eight months.

It may be that some great disaster will so affect these companies that even 25 per cent. ought not to be paid in; and, on the contrary, we ought to provide for giving them further aid in order to keep up the communication between the distant and still intimately connected parts of the Republic. It may be that their business will so develop or that their operations will be so carried on as that justice to the public and their creditors will require that this tribunal, just as a court would in a case it was administering before it, shall exercise its supreme and impartial power to require them to do more and different from what they are asked to do now. It is inherent in the administration of our duties in respect of all such subjects. The same argument might be applied, as is pressed by the Senator from Maine, to every law that we pass about national banks, to every law that we pass about tariffs and internal revenue. They affect private interests as directly as this legislation affects private interests; and yet who would agree for a single moment to provide that the tariff should stay so and so for a given length of time, or that any of the operations of the Government that affect the welfare of the public and the rights of private citizens should be foreclosed from the free judgment of this great tribunal, Congress, at any moment its own sense of justice should call upon it to interfere?

That is the principle, Mr. President; and then, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] has so well said, there is never any danger that private interests in corporations will be unduly pressed to the injury of those corporations by the action of either Legislatures or Congress. The pressure of the people for justice, for protection, for fair play, is always a slow and a diffused pressure. The pressure of corporations for favorable legislation, by bills, by lobbies, by subsidized newspapers, by that concentrated force that the Senator has alluded to and that has been seen here on more occasions than one, is always constant and is always ready. The danger, therefore, in respect of future legislation in this case and in every other is not the danger that the judgment of Senators representing the people and the public interests will lead them originally to propose injurious legislation; the danger is, as it always has been, that proposed legislation will come from this constant and concentrated selfish effort of corporations to press through Congress legislation favorable to them and injurious to the people and injurious to their creditors.

I have seen that in respect of these very companies when the danger to public interests and the danger to the credit of these companies in respect of all their creditors, including the United States, was first brought to the attention of this body, and a bill was about to be considered taking some first and mere initial step about it, I have seen the officers of the companies in this very Senate Chamber on the day a bill was to be up, distributing their passes with an ostentatious impudence that was amazing. I hope it did not affect any Senator; I suppose it did not. I have seen fifty cents a line paid to affect legislation in the editorials of newspapers. That is a very small price now. That was in old times. I suppose the present editorials are paid for at rather higher prices. But we shall find out by and by, by an inquiry, if the two Houses are willing to direct it—and perhaps the present Government directors may be able to look after it a little—how much money has been paid by these companies "to protect their rights," as they call it, at this present session of Congress; not to any Senator or Member of Congress—I beg everybody not to misunderstand me—but to pursue everybody to his house and appeal to his personal friendship for this director or that director, to appeal to his interest in protecting his constituent who sold some bonds or some other thing, to excite his prejudice, to mislead his judgment; everything that goes to make unjust influence upon legislation may have taken place to a greater or less degree.

So that the practical danger, Mr. President, in all cases of this kind is not the danger that after this bill shall have passed, as I hope it will, the Congress of the United States will suddenly take some steps which will embarrass these companies by new legislation unfavorable to them. That is a danger that never has happened and never will. The danger will be, as it always has been, that people interested in these great corporations that are said to control the politics of States and have been known to control the legislation of Congress in old times, when I could not muster a corporal's guard to vote for some of these earlier steps of inquiry and holding on until the Credit Mobilier exposure came out, and then everybody changed his views all at once. The danger is, I say, sir, quite in an opposite direction. There is therefore, in my judgment, neither sound principle upon which our hands can be tied up, nor the slightest danger to the real interests of these companies.

Mr. HARRIS. If there be no further discussion on the railroad bill—

Mr. SARGENT. I desire to say a few words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, in all matters of any importance it is worth while to consider the stand-point. Congress in 1878 and Congress in 1862 stood in a very different attitude with reference to the Pacific Railroad measures. I had something to do with the legislation under which these Pacific railroads were built. The great difficulty in the House of Representatives when the original bills were considered was in satisfying members of that House that the legislation proposed would build the Pacific Railroad. Any one who will look at those debates will find running all through them evidence of the incredulity of members of the House and afterward of the Senate that the grants made by Congress would build the road. That incredulity, notwithstanding the predictions of those who favored the road and thought that the legislation was sufficient, seemed to have some warrant in 1864, when additional privileges were given to the Pacific Railroad Companies, and under those additional privileges the railroad was built.

At that time it was urged that Congress would be liberal with the companies in final settlement for advances, and the bill which originally passed the House made no requirement for the payment of the bonds and interest except by the transportation and the 5 per cent.,

the words the company "shall pay said bonds at maturity" being subsequently inserted in the Senate. There was a vast tract of unsettled country between the Missouri River and California, and the Government was paying millions for transportation annually, while our Pacific possessions were subject to great danger in case of foreign war. The enterprise seemed difficult, gigantic, and Congress was in a pleasant mood, and ready to make almost any contract that would secure the national advantages springing from such a road. Now we hear only curses and threats, often as unjust as undignified, against those who then accepted our smiles and promises, and the Government resolves itself into a hard creditor that makes Shylock respectable.

Is it well now for Senators to ignore the fact—the Senator from Vermont blinks it out of sight; the Senator from Ohio entirely omits to give any value to the fact—that there has been saved in annual expenditures to the Government of the United States by the yearly operation of this railroad millions of dollars? A value like that conferred upon the Treasury, is it not worth while to consider when we are determining the question whether we will put the screws a little tighter and reserve the right to screw them up a little more by and by? Against the debit side in argument here against the companies should go the credit that there has been an annual value to the Treasury of the United States by saving expenses for transportation of troops, of mails, &c., ever since the last spike was driven upon the Pacific Railroad of over $4,000,000.

In 1862 it was provided that 5 per cent. of the annual earnings should be paid to the Treasury of the United States, and the whole transportation. Men who desired to embark in this enterprise came before Congress, and notably among others Horace Greeley, and represented that it was impossible for the enterprise to start. They had started it on the Pacific side and were toiling and working up toward the mountains under the original legislation; but upon the Atlantic side it was said that it was impossible to make an organization that could proceed with this work; and then Congress did what? It doubled the land grant by the legislation of 1864. It provided that one-half of the money for transportation might be retained by the companies, retained the clause still with reference to the 5 per cent., and made the Government bonds a second lien. Why was that? Was it understood by the companies and those who were enlisting in the enterprise that subsequently Congress should take back the original land which was given, or that they could subsequently make new conditions as soon as the road was built and was in operation, stating that the whole of the transportation should be paid to the Government and more than the 5 per cent. should be?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. I say it was not, and obviously it was not, and for this reason: capitalists were induced to put their money in there to go on with the enterprise. The Government did not build the roads, but these persons did upon the faith pledged that only one-half of the transportation should be required; and to say that it was understood by those men that that was the meaning of the congressional enactment, that this provision should only last until they had put their money into it and built the road, is the height of absurdity; and, as much respect as I have for the Senator from Ohio, I believe that, aside from a very strong feeling that impels him to push this measure through, in his cool moments or deciding upon it judicially he would say that the proper construction was that that was a contract to run until the maturity of the bonds, and not until the mere completion of the railroad; otherwise, where was the value of the inducement held out to capitalists? The question answers itself: there was none.

Now he comes in and says that Congress has a right to exact 25 per cent. of the net earnings instead of 5 per cent. "Why not fifty?" suggests the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] and I ask why not fifty? Why not proceed and, as was suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] the other day, reverse the priority of the lien of the bonds? For in the act of 1864 the Government lien was subordinated to what are now called the first-mortgage bonds. Why can you not erase that contract? The Senator from Ohio will probably say "why can you not do it?" in the same spirit that he replies to me when I ask how can you alter another part of the contract?

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator certainly does not wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. SARGENT. Not at all.

Mr. THURMAN. I have said nothing in the world that intimated that we could destroy the lien of the first-mortgage bonds and make the lien of the Government paramount under the right to alter, amend, or repeal. That exactly marks the line of distinction. Every holder of a first-mortgage bond has his vested right to that bond and to the lien created by it, and you can no more take it away from him than you can take away from a man to whom the railroad company sold a tract of land and made a conveyance for it, his land. That marks exactly the distinction. What I said in answer to the Senator's question was that it ought to have been understood, if it was not, that that provision in the act of 1864 that says one-half the transportation account shall be paid to the companies is subject to repeal. I did not touch the question of the lands; I did not touch the question of the lien of the first mortgage; but it is the right to repeal that provision which says one-half the transportation account shall be paid to the Government.

Mr. SARGENT. There is no distinction in the act and there is no distinction in morals between one part of that contract and another, and there is no distinction in right between the men who loaned their money to the men who built the road and the men who, building the road, put in their own money, as they did to a certain extent. I say there is no distinction in morals whatever, and there is no distinction in law, and to that point the logic of the Senator necessarily drives him. But if this obligation of these first-mortgage bonds is so perfect, why do we find in the whereases of this bill suspicion thrown upon them, that "if they are prior to the Government bonds," that "if they have priority," and phrases of that kind, the only effect of which can be to cast suspicion upon them in the public mind as connected with the reservation of power still to alter and amend contained in this proposed bill. It draws the supposition that your power to amend and repeal goes so far as to repeal the prior lien of these bonds.

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator want to know why that is in the preamble?

Mr. SARGENT. I do.

Mr. THURMAN. I think the Senator must have heard why it is in the preamble. Does not the Senator know that it has been asserted—I believe it has been sworn to—that more than two millions of these first-mortgage bonds never were issued by the companies at all, but were surreptitiously taken, or in plainer language stolen; that is, what would amount to stealing. I do not pretend to say who alleged it, because I do not undertake to show the fact was so. The draftsman of the preamble did not see fit to foreclose that business; but that the first-mortgage bonds lawfully issued are a paramount lien on the road has never been disputed and is fully admitted in the report of the Judiciary Committee. Out of abundant caution the Senator who drew the preamble used that language because of the fact I have stated; and if the Senator wants the evidence to be produced here, it will not be very difficult to produce the evidence; whether it is true or not I do not know.

Mr. SARGENT. A very practical question I think will arise from the explanation given by the Senator; and that is how, if the fact is as he states, that two millions of these bonds are surreptitious, what two millions are they? How are they to be segregated? How are you to arrive at them? Who swore to it the Senator does not state; nor who stole the bonds is not stated. Whether they were stolen or whether it has been sworn to or not, I do not know. Certainly the committee do not show it in any report which they have made on this bill; but the effect of it is, as I said before, to cast suspicion on the whole body of these bonds, and coupled with the further reservation of the power shows that there is an assumption on the part of Congress of a power to change the priority of the liens as between the Government and these parties, to take back one-half of the land, and why not? Why not take back one-half the land as well as reserve an additional half of the transportation? They are covenants running together, inducements for building the road, having exactly the same validity, found in the same statutes, and of the same nature. The courts will construe this legislation not by the Senator's speech or by mine, but by its language.

Mr. President, I am in favor of a sinking fund being created for these companies; I am in favor of legislation that will accomplish that object, but I am not in favor of a sinking fund being created of such a burdensome character that the commerce of the Pacific will be taxed beyond endurance, or that any inducement for the next twenty-five or thirty years to the men who have the road shall be held out to let it go into dilapidation and out of repair. The intention of Congress was that a first-class road should be built and maintained; and now comes in a provision, provisional, for the time being, that they shall pay 25 per cent. of their net earnings, provided the other 75 per cent. shall be sufficient to pay mere operating expenses and the interest on certain debts. If they are not able out of that 75 per cent. to realize one dollar on any investment they may have made in it, or one cent of compensation for their services or on their capital, nevertheless the 25 per cent. must be paid in to the Government, and the necessary effect must be one of two: either the road will go to dilapidation, will not be kept up, or commerce will be taxed so heavily that it cannot bear the burden. I do not know that it can be expected that the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Ohio would look upon this matter as I do, representing a Pacific State. I desire to divest myself of any prepossession for or against the men who have built this road, but I cannot justly dispossess myself of the inclination in favor of my own people, of those whom I represent.

This bill does not propose to keep down the rates which will be collected by these companies, and if the burden laid upon them is excessive, the necessary effect and consequence of it is that the rates of toll for travel and transportation must be increased, or else there is an insufficiency of revenue and the road goes to dilapidation and decay. Now, there is a medium which can be reached; there is a course which will be just to the Government and just to the companies, and the great object of the Government ought to be to safely secure the ultimate payment of its debt, and not to compel it necessarily to be paid by a certain time.

There are vast amounts to be handled, and the Government can well afford to require that a sinking fund shall be made of such a character that it will ultimately receive principal and interest upon its debt, but to shorten the time and increase the burden is to produce consequences which are not to be desired in a fair spirit by Congress, and certainly injurious to the companies. If a compromise of this kind can be arrived at—and I do not say it is the Railroad Committee bill, for there are things in that bill which I think should be changed for the benefit of the Government, and I do not think it is the Judiciary bill as it stands, especially with this further claim of power to increase exactions on the companies—but if a compromise can be arrived at which will avoid litigation hereafter, certainly a great point is gained. The Judiciary bill is full of litigation, from beginning to end. There is scarcely a section in that bill that will not necessarily be litigated before the courts, and especially with the threat held out in the speech of the Senator from Ohio to-day. If Congress shall assert that it can change from time to time, as it sees fit, the obligations of the companies, and compel greater and greater payments, even to the whole amount of the revenues of the road, even to the extent of violating everything that was supposed to be a contract in 1864, then the railroad companies are compelled at the very start by every instinct of self-preservation to contest with all their power in the courts the admission of any such principle. I myself believe that the courts will never hold that there is power to violate the contract which was made in 1862 and 1864. I believe they will hold further, that those acts, where they relate to the power of Congress to repeal, are to be construed in pari materia, and that no more under the act of 1864 than that of 1862 can Congress alter, amend, or repeal without having due regard to the rights of the parties.

But, Mr. President, I did not intend at this time to enter into this debate. I thought what I have said was necessary after the declaration of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BOOTH. One moment. Before the subject passes from the consideration of the Senate I wish to take the floor with a view of submitting a few remarks to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask that my amendment may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) That order will be made.

METHODIST CHURCH SOUTH.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the motion of the Senator from Iowa is put, I ask the Senate that the bill (S. No. 910) for the relief of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South may be made the special order for this day week.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course it is not to interfere with the bill which is now the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that Senate bill No. 910 be made the special order for Tuesday of next week. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think that had better not be fixed as a special order for any time, but let the matter be brought up upon motion when the Senate is full. The Senate should be full on an occasion of that kind.

Mr. BAILEY. I asked that it be made the special order for that day in order that the Senate might have notice of the time fixed for it, and I trust the Senator will agree to it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should not have any objection to taking it up at any suitable time, but I dislike to have it fixed as a special order for a particular day.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that the Senate may fix it for that day, so that all Senators may know when the case will be presented who take an interest in the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate bill No. 910 be made the special order for Tuesday of next week.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion requires a two-third vote; the negative prevails.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I now insist on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 2, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

RAILROAD AND TELEGRAPHIC LINE IN DAKOTA.

Mr. KIDDER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4226) for the construction of a railroad and telegraphic line from Bismark to Lake Kampeska, in the Territory of Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. GLOVER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution: which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas the clerk and experts of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, by an inadvertence, were not sworn into office at the date of their respective appointments and date of service, and for which reason payment is denied,

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and hereby is, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House said clerk and experts from the date of their respective appointments as though they had been sworn into office at the proper time.

Mr. GLOVER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4227) to provide for the auditing and adjusting of claims against the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION OF THE BLIND.

Mr. HASKELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1031, a bill (H. R. No. 4228) to promote the education of the blind, accompanied by a report in writing; which bill was read a first and second time, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and re-committed to the Committee on Education and Labor, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

P. S. RUSH.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4229) to place upon the pension-roll the name of P. S. Rush, captain of the Thirteenth Regiment of Kentucky Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF TARIFF BILL.

Mr. BALLOU. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration and adoption at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be, and hereby are, instructed to prepare and have printed for the use of the House 2,500 copies of House bill No. 4106, to impose duties upon foreign imports, showing the changes proposed to be made in the law as it now stands by placing the present and proposed duties on imports in columns opposite each other.

Mr. HALE. I think there better be a larger number printed. There is a great demand for the bill, and when these emendations are made there will be a still greater demand. I would suggest that the number be increased to 4,000.

Mr. BALLOU. I will modify the resolution as suggested.

There being no objection, the resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. BALLOU moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WORKS OF ART.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4230) to provide for the free importation of works of art in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. GAUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4231) to provide for the more economic sale and disposal of the public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. VANCE. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to ask unanimous consent to report for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the arguments and statements before the Senate and House Committees on Patents upon the bills to amend the statutes in relation to patents, and for other purposes, (H. R. No. 1612 and S. No. 300,) be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, as follows: 500 copies for the use of the Committee on Patents and 4,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDEN. Let that be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. VANCE. I think if the gentleman will hear me a moment—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to its present consideration.

Mr. VANCE. If the gentleman will hear me, I think he will have no objection. The Senate has ordered 2,400 copies to be printed.

Mr. EDEN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. VANCE. It is now in type, and it will cost very little to print these additional copies.

Mr. EDEN. I insist upon the regular order.
Mr. VANCE. Then let it be referred to the Committee on Printing.
There being no objection, the resolution was received and referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour begins at half past twelve o'clock, and the first business in order during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a public character. The call rests with the Committee of Ways and Means.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BONDS.

Mr. SAYLER. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back with a favorable recommendation House bill No. 1257, to prevent default or delay in the payment of the interest on the bonds authorized by an act of Congress approved June 20, 1874.

Mr. EDEN. I make the point of order on that bill that it contains an appropriation, and under the rule must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYLER. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that point of order.

Mr. EDEN. I certainly will.
Mr. SAYLER. This bill might as well be considered now; there is no reason why it should not be. I am willing to give the amplest time for discussion of the bill upon its merits in the morning hour as in Committee of the Whole. If that is the only purpose the gentleman has in view—

Mr. EDEN. I shall certainly insist on this bill going to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYLER. The gentleman means, then, that he will take every technical advantage to delay the bill. I am as willing to give as full opportunity for discussing it in the morning hour as could be had in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] makes the point of order that the bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I was about to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this bill takes no additional money out of the Treasury, because this interest is already guaranteed by law and by the terms of the bond. It must be paid, and the only question is as to the manner of payment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it not only takes money out of the Treasury for this year, but provides for taking it out for all time to come, until the principal of the bonds is paid.

Mr. BUTLER. The guarantee is as long as that.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SAYLER. I desire to give notice that at a very early day (not interfering with the business of the Committee on Appropriations) I will move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

PAYMENT OF INTERNAL-REVENUE OFFICERS.

Mr. BURCHARD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 105) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain officers of the internal-revenue service the amounts due them for their services as such officers previous to the time of executing their bonds and taking the oath of office as prescribed by law.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

*Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the cases of John C. Cartwright, of the collection district of Oregon; Clark Waggoner, of the tenth collection district of Ohio; Ellery M. Braxton, of the collection district of South Carolina; W. H. Wheeler, of the fifth collection district of North Carolina; William M. Woodcock, of the fifth collection district of Tennessee; Otis H. Russell, of the third collection district of Virginia; and Burt Van Horn, of the twenty-eighth collection district of New York, who were respectively appointed collectors of internal revenue for the districts mentioned during the recess of the Senate, which existed until the 15th day of October, 1877, and duly entered upon the discharge of the duties of such appointment, and were during the session of the Senate which began on the last-mentioned date nominated, and, upon confirmation by the Senate, appointed and commissioned as collectors for their respective districts, and continued in the discharge of their official duties, without having delivered the official bonds or taken the oaths prescribed by law, under the last-mentioned appointment, until subsequent to the adjournment of said session of the Senate, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay such collectors the compensation and expenses belonging to their respective offices, and which would, according to law, have accrued to them, had they, before entering upon the discharge of their duties under their last appointment, or before the expiration of the said session of the Senate, given the bonds and taken the oaths prescribed by law: Provided, Such bonds shall have been given, and such oaths taken, prior to the passage of this resolution.*

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a point of order. In the first place this is a private bill for the relief of certain gentlemen; and, secondly, it takes money out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The first point is not valid; the second one is. The bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. It will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL B. STAUBER AND OTHERS.

Mr. ROBBINS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1326) for the relief of Samuel B. Stauber and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CUSTOMS COLLECTORS AT PLYMOUTH AND NANTUCKET.

Mr. BANKS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1271) establishing the salaries to be paid the collectors of customs of Plymouth and Nantucket, Massachusetts.

The bill was read. It provides that there be allowed and paid to the collector of customs of the district of Plymouth, Massachusetts, a salary of $150 per annum, and to the collector of customs of the district of Nantucket, Massachusetts, a salary of $250 per annum from the 22d day of June, 1874, to the 27th day of February, 1877, provided that this salary shall not increase the maximum now provided by law.

Mr. BANKS. This bill makes an appropriation; but if the House will hear me one moment I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. EDEN. I will reserve a point of order till I hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BANKS. This bill is designed to correct a mistake in the revision of the statutes. The salary for the collector of Plymouth was established in 1799 and that for the collector of Nantucket in 1824. One was established at $150; the other at $250. In the revision of the statutes the provision for the payment of these salaries was unintentionally omitted. In 1877 Congress passed an act to remedy the error in the revision of the statutes by appropriating money for the payment of these salaries, but that act only took effect from the date of its passage. The salaries have been paid from that date; but there was an interval from June 22, 1874, when the revision of the statutes was enacted, till February 27, 1877, when the act authorizing the payment of these salaries was passed; and there is no authority of law for the payment of the salaries for that interval. This bill is to remedy that difficulty.

Mr. EDEN. Does this bill provide for paying these officers during that interval at the rate fixed in the last appropriation?

Mr. BANKS. At the rate fixed by law, whatever it may be.

Mr. EDEN. The act of 1877, as I understand, made an appropriation to pay these salaries; but there is a period of time back of that for which payment has not been provided. Is the amount fixed in this bill the same amount fixed in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. BANKS. The amount fixed in this bill is the same that it was by law during the interval between 1874 and 1877.

Mr. EDEN. I understand that. But the appropriation bill passed in 1877 fixed the compensation for these officers; but I want to know whether this bill changes that rate of payment so that they are to receive a larger amount.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that it does not.

Mr. EDEN. If it does not change the amount, and does not give these officers more than they were allowed by the appropriation bill, I have no objection.

Mr. BANKS. I am unable to say precisely how that is, because I do not know how much of the interval between 1874 and 1877 would be covered by the appropriation. But I do not desire that there shall be any increase of salary.

Mr. SAYLER. As I understand, this bill simply legalizes the action of these officers during that time, and provides for paying them the same salary they would have been paid if the formalities of law had been observed.

Mr. BANKS. I am willing that the bill shall be amended so that these officers for the interval referred to shall receive no more than the amount authorized by the appropriation of Congress.

Mr. EDEN. Then I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BANKS. On examining the bill, I find that it contains this proviso:

Provided, That this salary shall not increase the maximum now provided by law.

I think this covers the point suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN,] and no amendment is necessary.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ST. GEORGE SOCIETY, PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. KELLEY. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report a joint resolution (H. R. No. 151) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the Society of the Sons of St. George, established in Philadelphia, the sum of $1,440.25 in gold, being the amount paid by said society upon the colossal statue of St. George and the Dragon.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be refunded to the Society of the Sons of St. George, established at Philadelphia, the sum of $1,440.25 in gold, being the amount paid by said society upon a colossal bronze statue of St. George and the Dragon imported by them and specially designed for the ornamentation of the building of said society in Philadelphia.

Mr. EDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania why this exception is made? Why not allow everybody to import these things free of duty?

Mr. KELLEY. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury will explain the whole matter. I ask the Clerk to read the letter.
The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a petition from the Society of the Sons of St. George, established at Philadelphia for the advice and assistance of Englishmen in distress, representing that said society has paid as import duty the sum of $1,440.25 in gold on a colossal bronze statue of St. George and the Dragon, specially designed for that society, and which has been raised to its allotted place above the portico of the building of the society in Philadelphia, and praying Congress to remit and refund such duties.

I also transmit copies of certain papers on file in this Department bearing upon the subject matter.

The free list of the Revised Statutes exempts from duty statutory imported for the use of a society or institution incorporated or established for philosophical, educational, scientific, literary, or religious purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, and not intended for sale.

It does not appear that this statue falls within the language of this exemption, the Society of the Sons of St. George not being of the character mentioned, but it does fall within the spirit and general purpose of the act. The statue is a work of art highly praised by persons of taste, and was imported by a charitable society of long standing, composed largely of naturalized American citizens who would seem to be entitled to the benefits of the exemption granted to works of art imported by municipal corporations, and I therefore recommend that Congress authorize a refund of the duty referred to.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. COX, of New York. I understand this to be a proposition to remit the duty on the statue of St. George and the Dragon.

Mr. KELLEY. It is a proposition which has been sent to the committee through the Speaker from the Treasury Department.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is a free-trade bill.

Mr. KELLEY. It comes from the Treasury Department, recommending the refunding of the duty on the statue of St. George and the Dragon.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have no objection to any free-trade proposition.

Mr. KELLEY. Then do not make any.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not, coming from that quarter. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the proposition.

Mr. KELLEY. I am only the organ of the committee.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 34.

So (no further count being demanded) the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORT OF BATH, MAINE.

Mr. BURCHARD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3123) extending the privileges of sections 2990 and 2997 of the Revised Statutes, inclusive, to the port of Bath, in the State of Maine, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that the privileges of sections 2990 to 2997 of the Revised Statutes, inclusive, be extended to the port of Bath, in the State of Maine.

Mr. CONGER. What is this for?

Mr. BURCHARD. It simply provides that the privileges accorded to other ports by the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to of transportation in bond be extended to the port of Bath, in the State of Maine.

Mr. CONGER. That is one of the interior ports of entry, and I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURCHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported as a substitute for House joint resolution No. 76, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress providing for the completion of the Washington Monument; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that the joint commission created by the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for the completion of the Washington Monument," approved August 2, 1876, be, and they are hereby, authorized to apply a portion of the money appropriated by said act, not exceeding $36,000, to give greater stability to the foundation, if they deem it advisable.

Mr. CONGER. Is that joint resolution open to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he understands correctly the purpose of the joint resolution to be to change the manner of the expenditure of the original appropriation?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, it does not change it.

It merely directs or authorizes the joint commission to do what they have some doubts about their having the right to do; that is to say, whether they have any right under the original appropriation to use a portion of it to strengthen the foundation of the monument.

The SPEAKER. Has the appropriation already been made?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. This changes the manner of expenditure only, as the Chair understands, and does not contain an appropriation of any money.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all.

The SPEAKER. What point, then, does the gentleman from Michigan make?

Mr. CONGER. The original appropriation was for the erection of a monument, and this proposes to divert a portion of that appropriation to strengthen the foundation of the monument.

The SPEAKER. It does not embrace any appropriation or any increase of the amount already appropriated in any respect.

Mr. CONGER. By the original resolution the money could not be used at all, unless the foundation was found to be sufficiently strong. It has been found not to be sufficient, and it is now proposed to divert a portion of the money to make it sufficient. There was a limitation in the original act in this very direction. No appropriation was made for the foundation. The appropriation was expressly excluded from being used at all unless the foundation was found to be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that in the case of an appropriation, for instance for the collection of internal revenue, the number of collectors could be increased by law and yet the act increasing the number might not contain an appropriation and would not be subject to a point of order. Their compensation would be allowed to come out of a general appropriation already made for the purpose of the payment of the salaries of collectors, and that would not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. But if the appropriation sought to be diverted by this joint resolution was made upon the condition that the foundation was already sufficient?

The SPEAKER. That runs to the merit; and the merit seems to be in the view of the Chair that it would be very inadvisable to put a monument anywhere that the foundation would not sustain.

Mr. CONGER. That is why the appropriation was limited, not to be used if found insufficient; and being found insufficient, this bill proposes to use it contrary to the provisions of the law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to see that the joint resolution is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I move, then, that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. FOSTER. I move the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not when he reported the joint resolution make any demand for the previous question. The sense of the House can as well be tested in the one way as the other.

Mr. FOSTER. It ought not to go to the Committee of the Whole. If this thing is to be done it is important that it should be done at once.

Mr. CONGER. It ought not to be done at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Let the House determine that now.

The question being taken on Mr. CONGER's motion to refer the joint resolution to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, there were—ayes 59, noes 53.

Mr. FOSTER. I must ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentlemen from Ohio, Mr. FOSTER, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CONGER.

Mr. FOSTER. Let the joint resolution be read again, that the House may understand what it is voting on.

The joint resolution was again read.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 84.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question was on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, my objection to diverting the appropriation as required by this joint resolution is that it is in the opinion of the engineers very uncertain whether the foundation of this monument is sufficiently strong to hold the intended superstructure as it is now or whether it can in any manner be made sufficiently strong. It is finished now but about a quarter of the way with perhaps a third or a half of the weight resting upon the foundation; and it is claimed that it has already become a leaning tower.

Now, sir, if this sum of $30,000 or $40,000 is appropriated to strengthen the foundation, the remaining superstructure will be completed upon it whether it is sufficient or not. It is the opinion of many gentlemen in this House that the true way and the most economical way to complete this structure, which I think we all desire to have completed, is to take that material down; and inasmuch as the object of such a structure is elevation, eminence, position, where it may be seen from all the surrounding country, to remove it to some one of the high points around the city, some high point, for example in the grounds of the Soldiers' Home or in the neighborhood of the Scott Monument, where a good foundation can be obtained and where appropriations to build it can be secured in this House any day and any hour from all those who oppose the present transfer of this appropriation for this purpose, to build a monument worthy of the Father of his Country, and worthy of the American people to-day.

When the location down in the swamp was selected, it was supposed that the approach to this capital city would be mainly by water, on the Potomac. The modes of transportation and of travel since that time have entirely changed; and now the object in the construction of such a monument must be that it may be in view of the capital city, on some elevation which itself would be higher than or as high as the top of the monument where it is now being constructed. You should begin with an elevation as high as its top in its present situation, in full view of the city; and then the erection of a monument four hundred or five hundred feet higher would be a matter of pride to every American citizen, and it could be seen from every part of the city and from every part of the District, and for miles and miles around the country in every direction.

I desire, in common I believe with every patriotic citizen, that some monument to Washington may be erected and that it may stand while time lasts in memory of that great man. But the reason for fixing its location in the central view of the approach by the Potomac no longer exists. That never will be the great thoroughfare of approach to this city; and the effect of a massive monument which has only its massiveness and its height to commend it will be increased fourfold by placing it on some elevation. I believe it is the universal voice of those who visit this city when they see where that monument is situated that it is in a very inappropriate place; and I believe every member of Congress now or hereafter would vote for the completion of that monument, whatever sum might be necessary, if it should be taken out of the swamp and placed upon the hill.

That is my objection to the passage of this resolution, which proposes to divert a portion of the appropriation made by Congress and compel its use in completing the monument on this uncertain and insecure foundation, where it has been commenced. Now, the building of this monument was stopped years and years ago, because the engineers then believed, and still believe, those who have expressed an opinion upon it, that its foundation on the muddy bottom of the old Potomac where the land had once been washed out far deeper than has been reached now, was insecure. A foundation composed mostly of gravel, clay and mud, the mere filling up of the deposits from the river, cannot be made suitable for the foundation for a monument of this altitude of four hundred and fifty feet high.

Mr. HOUSE. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONGER. I will.

Mr. FOSTER. Has not the time of the gentleman from Michigan expired?

Mr. CONGER. It would not have expired; but for the interruptions.

Mr. HOUSE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Michigan this question: whether it would not cost more to take the monument down and remove it to some other location, than it would to strengthen the present foundation?

Mr. CONGER. I do not think it would cost more to take it down and remove if a proper temporary railway was constructed for that purpose, to the top of some elevation around the city than it would to strengthen the foundation.

Mr. FINLEY. Have not the foundations been found to be insecure?

Mr. CONGER. If gentlemen have visited the location they will know that around the monument the whole ground is honey-combed with borings to find what the material is upon which it rests, and the material brought up from those borings is composed of a filling in of gravel, clay, and alluvial deposits and decayed vegetable matter, such as fills up any place where there has been a washing out of a deep trench and its subsequent filling up with such deposits from the river as generally accumulate in such places.

I wish just to say this: that that is the sole reason why I have from time to time in this and former Congresses opposed an appropriation for the completion of this monument where it is. And I am very glad of the opportunity of saying that that is the only reason. I will join heartily with all other gentlemen in the House in any reasonable mode in securing a proper foundation for the erection of a monument which shall be an honor to the father of our country and an honor to all who may assist in its erection.

Mr. FOSTER. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. FOSTER. This attempt to build a monument was first commenced in 1789, in the Continental Congress, I believe. It was renewed from time to time, and I think some time in seventeen hundred and ninety odd, General Washington himself selected the spot where this monument now stands. It was then in the exact geographical center of the District. It was in full sight of Mount Vernon and of the vessels approaching the city up the river. The present purpose is to build this monument four hundred and eighty-five feet high. I think with that height it can be seen above the tops of the hills in any approach to the city.

Now the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] proposes to tear down this monument, carry it away, and put it on the top of some high hill in the neighborhood. Does he know that we have ceded jurisdiction over this ground on which the monument stands to the Washington Monument Society, and that every dollar that has been expended up to this time has been expended by that society.

We have no more control over the ground upon which this monument stands than we have over the ground across the river. It belongs to the monument society, and without their consent we are not able to touch it.

What I want to say further is this: that the society has gone on in good faith, and has honestly expended the sum of $250,000, and have erected the monument now over 200 feet high, and that is more than half the work done already to-day. Perhaps the $200,000 that we have appropriated may not complete it, but the question now arises as to whether the foundation is secure or not. I have read the reports upon this subject with great care, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is mistaken when he says that all the engineers in the past have condemned this foundation. That is not true, and that is not the reason why the Washington Monument Society have not continued on this work. The reason is the want of funds. If gentlemen will examine the reports of the engineers they will find that the weight of testimony is in favor of the sufficiency of the foundation to sustain the monument now proposed to be built upon it, but the board of commissioners, out of abundant caution, propose to use a portion of the money appropriated by Congress for the strengthening of the foundation.

Mr. CLYMER. Is it not a fact that the monument society have some $60,000 in their treasury?

Mr. FOSTER. No, sir; they have nothing in their treasury, or very little.

Mr. CLYMER. I was told that they had $60,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all. You will find, if you will take the trouble to look at it, in the speech which I made two years ago when this appropriation was made, a full statement of the whole transaction from beginning to end; and I undertake to say, although the conduct of the monument association has not been brought in question here, but I have heard it brought in question in private, that their action has been perfectly square and straight and they cannot be assailed in any particular.

Now, all there is of this question is this: will this House permit a portion of the $200,000 which we have appropriated, if in the opinion of the board of commissioners who have the matter in charge it is necessary to do so, to be used to strengthen the foundation of this monument? That is the whole question.

I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. The trouble with me about this matter is that I believe if we do not complete this monument we shall not have any monument to General Washington in this city. It is all well enough to say it would be better to have it somewhere else than where it is now located. That might be an argument of some weight if we were just starting upon the enterprise. But a great sum of money has already been expended upon this monument, and the contributions failing, the enterprise came to a stand.

This whole subject was considered and discussed very carefully and thoroughly in a previous Congress, and we then appropriated the sum of $200,000 to complete this monument. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] omitted to state just now that when that appropriation was made the then Washington Monument Association turned over to the Government the whole matter. So that if we go on and spend upon this monument the money which has been appropriated we will have the entire control of it and the advantage of all the benefactions which have been given by the people in the years past. The whole matter will be entirely under our control.

When the change of management was made under the appropriation the representatives of the Government believed it necessary to take extra pains in order to ascertain whether there was any truth at the bottom of the statements which have been made from time to time that the foundation of this monument was insecure. It was determined to have an examination made by skillful engineers, and it was made. The conclusion of those engineers, derived from examination and from borings, is not that the foundation is insecure. The conclusion derived from their investigation is that even as the foundation now is, (and it is remarkable that if the foundation is so bad, as has been claimed, there has been no jarring or leaning of the monument,) it is a good one and the monument, if completed, would stand upon it for ages. But, as has been said, it is proposed to spend a portion of this money from extra precaution to make what is already certain doubly certain.

Now you may turn this enterprise awry, and say that we will have the monument somewhere else; but as sure as you do that we will still have this unsightly structure, this unfinished monument, with its bald, ragged, jagged top, staring us in our faces, an offense in the sight of every citizen that comes to Washington for years and years. But if this money which we have already appropriated is allowed to be spent, after due consideration, as it is proposed to spend it, then the shaft will arise and the monument will be completed; and although it will not attain such a height and will not tower so loftily as if it had been placed on Capitol Hill, for instance, still it will be a magnificent monument and an honor to the country. Every man of us ought to feel ashamed that this monument was not completed years and years ago. I hope that the attempt, or perhaps the inclination only, to stop this enterprise and leave it where it is, for that is what it really amounts to, will not be permitted to prevail.

Mr. ITTNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. ITTNER. Has it been conclusively demonstrated that this monument does not lean? I have seen it repeatedly stated in the press of the country that it does lean, and it seems to me that if this monument does lean in the least degree, it would be unwise to progress further in its construction.

Mr. HALE. The engineers find, after examination, that there has been no material inclination of the monument, perhaps not even in the slightest degree; and even if there is the slightest inclination it is not of any account as indicating an insecure foundation. In fact it is claimed by some that there is no inclination whatever from the original design. And even by those who claim that there has been an inclination it is not claimed to amount to more than the seven-eighths of an inch.

Mr. FOSTER. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I believe that it is generally conceded that all the ground in that part of the city, formerly called "the swamp," is made up of alluvial soil, and is very uncertain as a foundation. Not long since an attempt was made to test the soil down here in the Botanical Garden for the purpose of ascertaining if it would afford a proper foundation for the erection of a Congressional Library building; but it was found that it was oozy and wet and would furnish no stable foundation.

Now I have no doubt myself that the foundation of the Washington Monument is at best very insecure and uncertain; and anything which is uncertain will always call from me a negative vote on appropriations. One thing is very sure, and that is that if that monument is ever finished, it will still be almost as unsightly as it is today. It is not the kind of monument which we should erect in this city to the memory of George Washington. The proper monument would be an arch; and the material which is already collected there, if properly used, would make a splendid monument to Washington, a decoration to the city of Washington in every sense of the word.

We have already appropriated $200,000 for the completion of this monument. The very fact that this bill is now brought in here indicates that these engineers are uncertain about the foundation of the monument, else why should they ask for this sum of money to be devoted to this special purpose? They are not sure of the foundation. And in fact no one can be sure in the strict sense of the word of the foundation of anything, either of ethics, philosophy, or politics, as gentlemen on both sides of this House have found out.

But, Mr. Speaker, I simply rose to say that if it were possible today I would vote to repeal the law giving $200,000 for the purpose of completing this monument. I would vote to remove the material to one of these eminences around Washington, and there erect an arch or something else that would be a decoration to the city and an honor to the Father of his Country. But if we go on in this uncertain sort of way, if we divert a portion of this $200,000 for a foundation, we shall find when the structure has been carried one hundred feet higher that we shall have nothing but a mere unshapely mass, having no significance in connection with the memory of George Washington. Therefore, without intending in any sense to impinge on the rights of the Appropriations Committee, I will move to lay this bill on the table, and at the proper time I will ask that the bill of my colleague [Mr. EICKHOFF] be taken up and considered, and that we shall provide that no more money shall be spent upon this matter until we are sure of our foundation.

Mr. BUTLER. With the leave of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] I want to call attention to one point that seems to have passed sub silentio. It is assumed that this monument is down in a hole or a swamp. Now, I submit that any gentleman who will step out here to the west side of the Capitol and look out will find that the monument is on a very considerable elevation, the third or the fourth in height within the limits of the city of Washington. Although viewed from some points there may appear to be a depression, gentlemen will be very much surprised to find how high the base of the monument is.

There is another consideration. Washington knew where he wanted his monument a great deal better than I do, and I think he should be gratified, even at this late day, in having his monument on just the spot that he selected, and where he made a reservation for the purpose in laying out the city. If it is only going to cost $26,000 to make a good foundation, I think we should certainly authorize the expenditure.

Some gentlemen have referred to the statement that the structure already built leans. One of the engineers told me that in a height of two hundred feet there was a variation of seven-eighths of an inch from a vertical line. Now, if any man who is building (and I have had some experience in that matter) has workmen engaged during twenty years and finds that in an elevation of two hundred feet the variation from a plumb line is not greater than seven-eighths of an inch, his workmen will have been better mechanics than are usually found.

But all this matter is to be left to the judgment of the commissioners. If they find that with this expenditure of money they cannot make the foundation sufficient, they will not go on and complete the structure. What is wanted now, as I understand, is to put a concrete wall around on the outside of the monument, a circular, brace-like abutment, so as to prevent any possibility of any washing or giving away hereafter. This is what is wanted, as the engineer told me. I cannot conceive of any reason why we should not allow those to whom we have intrusted this matter—one of them at least a good engineer—to go on and build this monument, without undertaking here in this House to decide questions of civil engineering.

Mr. CLYMER. In the Forty-fourth Congress it was determined, in a fit of patriotic fervor, that we would give $200,000 for the completion of the Washington Monument on condition that the foundations were found to be sufficient. Examination has demonstrated that the condition has failed; that the foundations are not sufficient to justify carrying that structure to the height originally contemplated.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not a settled matter.

Mr. CLYMER. It is so far settled that those to whom we have intrusted the determination of the fact have reported to us that they need $36,000 to make good the condition without which we said we would not make the appropriation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that at any other time than in that exceptional year, the centennial year of which we have heard so much, Congress would ever have given one dollar to complete that monument. For thirty years it has been building. For thirty years the patriotism of the people has been appealed to; and while a considerable part of the original design has been accomplished, yet the structure has stood for twenty years untouched, and in the minds of many a disgrace and a shame to the American people. I am sorry to say that in my judgment and in that of many with whom I have held intercourse regarding this subject the structure, if finished, would be unworthy of our great nation as a monument to him who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." It is meaningless; it is a mere shaft. There is nothing in the past like it; and I do not believe that the future will ever repeat an experiment of this kind. In the judgment of those in whose taste I have great confidence a monument to Washington should be something that would have a meaning; for instance, an arch, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has suggested, on which there might be a colossal equestrian statue of Washington.

The difficulty is that the present monument belongs to an association, the Washington Monument Association, composed of excellent gentlemen, many of whom have devoted much time and attention to its erection and completion. And we, representing the Government, have no right to come in and say what shall be done with that pile. If the association cannot complete it, there it will stand always a disgrace, and they can only complete it by appealing to us. Therefore it is to be decided by this House to-day whether we will consent it shall so be completed on that spot and in that shape. If there was a condition annexed to the appropriation of $200,000 that it should only be available provided the present structure should be razed to the ground and its material used for the erection of a memorial which would be approved by those who have refined judgment and taste in matters of art, I think this House would be doing what would be best. It should be removed to some higher point; and I have the judgment of others, sir, when I say it would cost less to take the present monument down and use the material in the erection of an arch upon some high point within this District than to complete the monument in its present shape.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLYMER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. It is whether in the history of the world any arch can be found built over a place where nobody goes? Can any arch be found anywhere at a place which leads nowhere? [Laughter.] I do not know of any place we want an arch over. And let me ask the gentleman another question, whether he wants any exhibition of modern taste in the building of a few monuments like the exhibition of taste we have in the present calico fence at the foot of the hill near Pennsylvania avenue? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLYMER. If mistakes are made it is not to be assumed we are to continue to make them. As to whether we have any place which would be appropriate for the construction of an arch, there may be a difference of opinion. I would suggest the approach to the eastern front of the Capitol, three or four squares off, and if we should there build a grand arch one hundred or one hundred and fifty feet high, with an equestrian statue of Washington, it would have a meaning, it would tell a story, it would be an honor to his memory and a credit to the generation which erected it.

Mr. HALE. Is there any objection to finishing the monument, and then if you want an arch building that afterward? There is no incompatibility between the two. I agree with what my friend from Massachusetts has said.

Mr. CLYMER. I have no doubt the gentleman will agree with me it would be impossible after completing the one to build the other, for if you waste money on the present monument we will never appropriate money for another.

Mr. HALE. It is just as easy to build the monument and then build the arch afterward, if we want it, as to take down the monument and build the arch now. It would cost no more to get the arch with the monument than without it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will detain the House but a moment. I rise, Mr.

Speaker, for the purpose of vindicating history, the history connected with that monument. I was a member of Congress when the foundation-stone was placed under that monument. I was there, sir. The foundation is of hard, cemented gravel. I saw men testing the gravel-bed with crowbars, making an effort to enter the gravel at the bottom of the pit, and they could not effect it. The foundation of the monument itself is of huge rocks that weigh separately ten and fifteen tons. I saw one of the first of those huge rocks placed at the bottom of that monument.

Now, so far as regards the foundation, I will tell you what I know: I have no doubt in regard to the sufficiency of the foundation to support and sustain that monument. That is not the trouble, sir. The trouble is whether the material can stand the crushing weight of the designed height of the monument. I saw them making experiments at that time in crushing the material put in the monument to see what power of resistance it possessed and what weight it would sustain. That was the question when the monument was started, whether the material composing a single column five hundred feet high, of the size and dimensions proposed, could sustain the pressure brought by the accumulation of weight as the monument went up toward its full height.

That was the difficulty at that time. I have no doubt in my own mind, after the experiments made at the time which I saw, and from the opinion of experts then given, the monument can sustain itself; that is, the material of which it is composed will sustain the monument, notwithstanding the great pressure brought upon it.

I am in favor, Mr. Speaker, of completing the monument. I have no idea of abandoning it. If we now abandon the appropriation of $200,000, that will be the end of it. If we could be sure the object would not be abandoned, I would be willing to yield the appropriation of money; but I believe if that be done it will be the end of this monument. And I got up for the purpose of telling, not what I read in the newspapers, not what scientists have said, but what I saw and what I know in regard to the beginning of this monument.

If I am a reliable man, I hope what I have said will be taken, therefore, as authority.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does not the gentleman know some time ago a convention of engineers was held in Baltimore, and that, after taking this matter into consideration, they decided the present monument was unstable?

Mr. FOSTER. No such thing ever happened.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have heard there was such a commission, and that commission recommended Baltimore as the spot where this monument should be placed. [Laughter.] I have so been informed. I cannot vouch for the truth of the assertion. [A VOICE. It is so.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I have an idea that there is solid ground in other parts of these United States as well as in and around Baltimore; and I believe the spot where that monument stands to-day is good enough for all the purposes it is designed to be used for, and the strength of the foundation is as I have stated. Is the gentleman from New York satisfied?

Mr. COX, of New York. I am so much satisfied that I will make a motion to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. FOSTER. I demand a vote.

The question being taken on the motion to lay the joint resolution on the table, there were—ayes 51, noes 88.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. Would it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered so that this matter could be referred again to the committee?

The SPEAKER. The motion was not made to reconsider the vote ordering the main question and to lay that motion on the table. The motion to reconsider is therefore in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I make that motion.

Mr. FOSTER. And I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. COX, of New York. Before I yield the floor I desire to say just a word.

Mr. FOSTER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not propose to debate, except to say to the House I propose to move to send this matter back to the committee that we may have this whole question as to the monument reconsidered in every way.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 94, noes 59.

So the motion to reconsider the vote ordering the main question was laid upon the table.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FOSTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 142) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the morning hour ended?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. SCALES. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. And I give notice that when we get into Committee of the Whole I will ask the committee to take up the bill to transfer the office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

Mr. DURHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment for explanation?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir.

Mr. DURHAM. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations gave notice that on to-day he would call up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Mr. ATKINS is sick and unable to be here. He has been in bed now for eight or ten days; and I ask the House on his behalf to be quiet about this bill for two or three days till he can be here as I hope he will be. It is a matter of justice to him as chairman of the general committee and of the subcommittee which prepared this bill, together with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and myself, that he should be here and take charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has a continuing privilege and right.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to report from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service a report which was recommitted to that committee on the 19th of March, reserving, however, its privilege to be brought up at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already reported from that committee, the Chair thinks. The Chair will examine the Journal to see whether that be so or not.

Mr. HARRISON. The report was recommitted, and when I asked to have it brought up the other day the House would not consider it. I now move to take it up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed, when the matter was up the other day, the question was whether the House would consider the report; but the Chair will not cut off any rights from the gentleman. The House has the right to do that, not the Chair.

Mr. HENDEE. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. As to what?

Mr. HENDEE. As to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] to consider the Polk business. I desire to have the unfinished business, which is the District of Columbia bill, taken up.

Mr. HARRISON. If the House determines not to hear a report from one of its own committees in regard to one of its own officers, charged with doing wrong, then let it go to the country and let the country understand it.

Mr. HENDEE. That is very eloquent; but let the gentleman wait a moment until I state—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The Chair listens to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that he did not make the report the other day when the question of consideration was up; but the Chair has sent for the Journal, to see what are all the facts.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I had risen to controvert that statement. The gentleman from Illinois has exhausted his privilege. He did report to the House, and the House refused to consider.

Mr. HARRISON. The Chair stated, and most emphatically, that the report did not lose its privilege.

A MEMBER. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, it is on the Calendar and before the country. The SPEAKER. The entry in the Journal of March 28 will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HARRISON, as a question of privilege, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to which was referred the resolution adopted January 31, 1878, directing it to inquire into the matters and things alleged against John W. Polk, the Doorkeeper of the House, submitted a report, accompanied by the following resolutions, viz:

Resolved, That the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and hereby is, declared vacant; and

Further resolved, That, until the appointment of a new Doorkeeper, the duties of the office be, and hereby are, devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms.

When

Mr. SCALES raised the question of consideration;

And the question being put, viz:

Will the House now consider the said report?

And it was decided in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The Journal shows that the gentleman from Illinois made the report; and the report went upon the Calendar. The entry on the Calendar will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

1878, March 28.—Mr. HARRISON.—Reform in Civil Service.—Report 422.

Resolved, That the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and hereby is, declared vacant; and

Further resolved, That, until the appointment of a new Doorkeeper, the duties of the office be, and hereby are, devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, the resolution was not read. I simply asked that the matter be brought up. The RECORD will show what was done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like the gentleman from Illinois to direct his attention to any statement of his on that day in which he said that the gentleman did not lose his rights.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I do not think the Chair made any such statement, nor will it be found in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago said that the Chair had stated to him that he did not lose any rights, which would seem to be an intimation that the Chair would recognize him again to make this report.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Chair so to state; but I do not know whether it got into the RECORD or not.

Mr. FINLEY. That statement was made at the time the report was recommitted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never altered anything connected with this matter, and the Chair will now facilitate the gentleman from Illinois in any way that the rules will permit to reach action on his report if the House so desire; but the gentleman from Illinois stated a few moments ago that the Chair had assured him that he would not lose any of his rights to report.

Mr. HARRISON. I so understood; but if I made a mistake, of course there is an end of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to have that alleged statement of his pointed out, because it is very material.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If the Chair will allow me, I think I can state from recollection the way in which the matter occurred. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] made the report he moved to recommit it, and, as I remember, the Speaker stated that he would lose nothing by the motion to recommit, because he could bring it back before the House. Afterward, when the question came before the House on a motion to reconsider the committal, the question of consideration was sprung on him by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] and others; whereupon in exercising what he deemed to be his right he abandoned the motion to reconsider and reported the resolutions to the House as a question of privilege, and in that way they came before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to have read from the RECORD exactly what he did say.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The report was made and recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed; and the Chair supposes that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] now intends to report it back to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read another paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARRISON,] from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, presents the report of that committee touching on the matters referred to it, as to the Doorkeeper of this House, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] raises the question of consideration, and he gives notice that if this subject be not considered by the House he will move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to lay aside the bills upon the Calendar until the committee shall reach the bill relating to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the Clerk reading from; the Journal or the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. I find upon page 2109 of the RECORD, proceedings of March 28, the following:

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to a privileged question, and it is to call up the report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, in the matter commonly known as the Polk matter.

Mr. BLAIR then said something, and after that I find this:

Mr. EDEN. I submit that the report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service has not yet been made.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. EDEN. My understanding is that the report was ordered to be printed and recommitted to the committee, and that therefore it is now in the committee.

I do not therefore know how it lost its privilege.

The SPEAKER. The report has not lost its privilege, but it has got into another position before the House as the report of a committee or bill undispensed of.

Mr. HARRISON. The RECORD does not show that it got into a new position, as will be shown if the Clerk will read what I have marked in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had a right under the rule to make the report at any time, and the report was presented by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HARRISON. On the 29th? I tried to present it, but the House refused to receive it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had a right to report at any time, and it was received, and the only question was one of priority of business, but the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] raised the question of consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. Did not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] take the position that the report had been recommitted, and was in the hands of the committee? That was the gentleman's position. I saw that the friends of Mr. Polk did not want the report brought up then, and therefore I yielded and made no antagonism.

A MEMBER. You called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. No, the yeas and nays were called for on the other side of the House; I never asked for them.

Mr. FRANKLIN. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service had a right to report at any time. When the subject was recommitted he made the report, and he has now exhausted his privilege.

Mr. HARRISON. I would simply ask the Chair to decide whether I made the report or not. The gentleman from Missouri cannot decide it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit to the Chair that the question of consideration could not be raised if the report was still in the committee.

The SPEAKER. Certainly not.

Mr. SPRINGER. It could not have been raised unless the report was before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

When any motion or proposition is made, the question "Will the House now consider it?" shall not be put unless it is demanded by some member or is deemed necessary by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. As stated by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] if the report had not been made, the question of consideration could not have been raised upon it; but having been made the question of consideration came up and the House voted that it would not then proceed to consider it. The House refusing to proceed to its consideration at that time, under the rules and practice of the House the report of necessity went to the calendar of reports of committees and bills undispensed of.

Mr. HARRISON. I appeal to the Chair to state if I did not several times ask him if the report was not of a privileged character, such that I could make it at any time, and the Speaker said that it was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, on the very day after the House refused to consider the report, could have moved a reconsideration.

Mr. HARRISON. No, I could not; I voted with the noes and could not have moved a reconsideration. I am always voting wrong, it would seem. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not disposed to deny the statement that the gentleman from Illinois repeatedly came to him in regard to this subject; but the Chair is bound by the record of the proceedings of the House. The Chair will listen to anything that will facilitate the purpose of the gentleman to have the House proceed to the consideration of this report. It occupies the same situation exactly as a contested-election case in which a report has been made.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to say to the Chair, in the language of Mr. Pennington, of New Jersey, that I have not sense enough to understand the rules and I must rely entirely upon the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair certainly has not said anything that would warrant the statement by the gentleman that the Chair has intimated that the gentleman did not understand the rules.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, no; I say that myself. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If the House desires to proceed with the consideration of the report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, it can do so by voting down the other proposition, so as to enable the gentleman to reach it by proper motion. The remedy is not with the Chair, it is with the House.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I desire to ask the Chair a question in regard to the provisions to be found on pages 287 and 289 of the Digest in relation to questions of privilege. At the top of page 289 will be found as one of the questions of privilege "alleged misconduct on the part of an officer of the House."

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not a doubt that this is a question of privilege, and the committee had the privilege of reporting upon it at any time. The committee did so report, and therefore their privilege, as alluded to in the report, is restricted in that respect to the right to report. When once reported, such report is in the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Was the vote taken upon the report?

The SPEAKER. The vote was upon the priority of business.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Would it be in order now to move to proceed to the consideration of that report, so that a vote of the House can be had upon it?

The SPEAKER. It would, exactly as in a contested-election case, both being recognized as questions of privilege.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Then I make that motion.

Mr. HARRISON. And I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. SCALES. I believe I have the floor, have I not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to have the House express its wish upon the question. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] has moved that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole; and he states that in case that motion shall prevail he will ask the committee to lay aside all bills on the Calendar as they are reached until he can bring the committee to the consideration of the bill to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Department of the Interior to the War Department. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] gives notice that in case the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina is voted down he will then move to proceed to the consideration of the report he has indicated.

Mr. BURCHARD. Pending the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] is not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] entitled to make his motion as a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that he is, if he insists upon that course.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. That is what I desire to do.

Mr. BURCHARD. And in that case the House will be first called upon to vote upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The House has and always should have within its power the right to say what business it will proceed to consider.

The Clerk will read from the Digest one of the questions of privilege as stated in the Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alleged misconduct on the part of an officer of the House.—Journal, 1, 44, p. 862.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] that he is mistaken in saying that the Chair informed him that he lost none of his rights. If the gentleman will look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he will find that that statement was made on a prior occasion, to wit, on the 19th ultimo, in the following language:

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] wishes that the two reports shall be printed and recommitted. The gentleman is not divested of any of his rights by the recommittal. All he does now is to give notice to the House of his intention to call up the report.

Mr. HARRISON. I beg the Chair's pardon. The Chair misunderstood me.

The SPEAKER. That is all right. The gentleman has confounded my language on March 19 with the language used on the 25th ultimo.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. My point of order is that the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] must be first put.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair proposes to do, the gentleman having insisted on having his motion first voted on. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] moves that the House now proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, in the matter of the charges alleged against the Doorkeeper of the House. The resolutions accompanying the report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and hereby is, declared vacant; and

Further resolved, That, until the appointment of a new Doorkeeper, the duties of the office be, and hereby are, devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Cox,] that the House proceed to consider the resolutions just read.

Mr. SCALES. In case that motion is voted down, will my motion be regarded as pending?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider that question when it occurs. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] has indicated his desire to submit a proposition to the House antagonistic.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 79, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—148.

Aeklen,	Cutler,	Keightley,
Aldrich,	Davidson,	Kelley,
Bacon,	Davis, Horace	Kenna,
Bagley,	Deering,	Ketcham,
Baker, John H.	Denison,	Landers,
Baker, William H.	Eames,	Lathrop,
Ballou,	Eickhoff,	Landsey,
Banks,	Evans, James L.	Lockwood,
Bayne,	Evins, John H.	Lynde,
Bell,	Felton,	Maish,
Bisbee,	Fort,	Marsh,
Blackburn,	Foster,	Mayham,
Blair,	Freeman,	McKenzie,
Blount,	Frye,	McKinley,
Bouck,	Fuller,	McMahon,
Boyd,	Gardner,	Metcalfe,
Brentano,	Giddings,	Mitchell,
Brewer,	Glover,	Monroe,
Briggs,	Harris, Benj. W.	Morgan,
Brogden,	Harrison,	Neal,
Browne,	Hart,	Norcross,
Buckner,	Hartzell,	Patterson, G. W.
Burchard,	Haskell,	Patterson, T. M.
Burdick,	Hazleton,	Peddle,
Calkins,	Hendee,	Phelps,
Cannon,	Henderson,	Phillips,
Caswell,	Henkle,	Pollard,
Claffin,	Hewitt, Abram S.	Pound,
Clark of Kentucky,	Hiscock,	Price,
Clark, Rush	Honae,	Pugh,
Clymer,	Humphrey,	Rainey,
Cobb,	Hunter,	Randolph,
Cole,	Ittner,	Rea,
Conger,	James,	Reed,
Cox, Jacob D.	Jones, Frank	Roberts,
Cox, Samuel S.	Jones, John S.	Robinson,
Cummings,	Keifer,	Robinson, M. S.

NAYS—79.

Atken,	Cook,	Garth,	Joyce,
Banning,	Cravens,	Gause,	Knapp,
Bicknell,	Crittenden,	Goode,	Knott,
Bland,	Culbertson,	Gunter,	Ligon,
Bliss,	Davis, Joseph J.	Hardenbergh,	Luttrell,
Boone,	Dibrell,	Harris, Henry R.	Manning,
Bright,	Dickey,	Harris, John T.	Martin,
Butler,	Dunnell,	Harridge,	Morrison,
Cabell,	Durham,	Hatcher,	Muldrow,
Caldwell, John W.	Eden,	Henry,	Muller,
Caldwell, W. P.	Ellis,	Hewitt, G. W.	O'Neill,
Campbell,	Ellsworth,	Herbert,	Page,
Carlisle,	Ewing,	Hooker,	Reagan,
Chalmers,	Finley,	Hunton,	Rice, Americus V.
Clark, Alvah A.	Forney,	Jones, James T.	Riddle,
Clark of Missouri,	Franklin,	Jorgensen,	Robbins,

Ross,
Scales,
Shelley,
Singleton,

Smith, William E.
Sparks,
Tucker,
Turney,

Vance,
Whitthorne,
Williams, A. S.
Williams, Jere N.

Wilson,
Yeates,
Young.

NOT VOTING—64.

Atkins,
Beebe,
Benedict,
Bragg,
Bridges,
Bundy,
Camp,
Candler,
Chittenden,
Collins,
Covert,
Crapo,
Killing,
Dean,
Douglas,

Dwight,
Elam,
Errett,
Evans, I. Newton
Garfield,
Gilson,
Hale,
Hamilton,
Hanna,
Harner,
Hayes,
Hubbell,
Hungerford,
Killing,
Kimmel,
Lapham,

Loring,
Mackey,
McCook,
McGowan,
Mills,
Money,
Morre,
Oliver,
Overton,
Potter,
Powers,
Pridemore,
Quinn,
Reilly,
Rice, William W.
Robinson, G. D.

Sapp,
Saylor,
Schleicher,
Slemmons,
Smith, A. Herr
Southard,
Steele,
Stenger,
Stephens,
Stone, Joseph C.
Swann,
Thornburgh,
Tipton,
Veeder,
Walker,
Watson.

So the motion of Mr. Cox, of Ohio, was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. STEELE, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HAYES.

Mr. DIBRELL. On political questions I am paired with my colleague, Mr. THORNBURGH. As I do not consider this a political question, I feel justified in voting "no."

Mr. BEEBE. I am paired generally on all questions with my colleague, Judge LAPHAM.

Mr. HISCOCK. My colleagues, Mr. CAMP and Mr. BENEDICT, are paired. Mr. CAMP, if present, would vote "ay" and Mr. BENEDICT "no."

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman from New York, Mr. CHITTENDEN, is paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. STEPHENS.

Mr. TUCKER. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, on political questions; but not regarding this as a political question, I vote "no."

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from New York, Mr. DWIGHT, is paired on all political questions with my colleague, Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. DWIGHT, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleagues, Mr. OVERTON and Mr. REILLY, are paired. Mr. OVERTON, if present, would vote "ay" on this question, as he did the other day.

Mr. PRICE. My colleague, Mr. SAPP, is detained from the House on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks consent of the House that he may insert in his remarks this morning a quotation from his remarks of March 19, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] somewhat confused with what occurred on March 25.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTTRELL. When does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] propose to call for a vote on this question?

Mr. HARRISON. I propose to allow four hours' debate, two hours on each side, before calling the previous question.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Does the gentleman propose to have a vote to-day or to-morrow?

Mr. HARRISON. That depends upon whether members are willing to stay here to-day until the vote is taken. My friends who concur in the report of the majority desire to occupy at least two hours and I wish the other side to have an equal time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands from the gentleman from Illinois that the majority of the committee desire to occupy two hours in debate and that he proposes to allow the minority of the committee to control two hours.

Mr. YEATES. Perhaps some others than members of the committee would like to speak on the question.

The SPEAKER. If the House desires to hear them it will vote down the call for the previous question.

Mr. EDEN. I do not understand that there is any arrangement being made; it is merely a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. That is all. The gentleman from Illinois states that at least four hours' debate will be allowed; that two hours will be claimed by the majority of the committee and that he desires to place two hours under the control of the minority, so that the debate shall cover at least four hours. Of course, if the House desires further debate, it will be within its province to vote down the previous question if that should be asked.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to record my vote on the question just taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can state how he would have voted.

Mr. GIBSON. I would have voted "ay."

Mr. LUTTRELL. We are anxious to have the gentleman having charge of the matter state at what hour he proposes to demand the previous question on this report. Many of us have business outside of the Hall which we would like to go and attend to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the power to say when the vote shall be taken. It is for the House to determine that.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The gentleman from Illinois can give notice when he proposes to call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can give notice when he proposes to make an effort to have a vote.

Mr. LUTTRELL. That is all I suggest: that he shall give notice now when he proposes to call for a vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall call the previous question at the end of four hours' debate.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Does the gentleman propose to call it to-day or to-morrow?

Mr. HARRISON. That depends upon how long the House sits here to-day. If the House adjourns before the debate has been concluded, I will call for a vote then to-morrow.

Mr. YEATES. Four hours' debate will only give opportunity to four persons of the committee to make speeches on this question. If the gentleman wishes every one of the facts to come out, then let us have a free debate.

The SPEAKER. If the House wants a free and long debate the remedy is to vote down the previous question.

Mr. FRANKLIN. The understanding is that the chairman of the committee will not call the previous question until after four hours of debate.

Mr. HARRISON. If I have the floor I now wish to say—

Mr. FRANKLIN. I believe I have the floor, and I only wish to state what I deem to be the understanding. It is that the chairman of the committee will not call for a vote until after four hours of debate, and it may be longer, but he certainly will not call for the previous question until after four hours of debate.

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I think that is clear.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The sooner we get to work the sooner the previous question will be called.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to say to gentlemen I have no desire to restrict debate on this matter. I was asked how short a time would be required, and I stated four hours as the shortest time. Beyond that I do not care how long the House takes.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to make a personal explanation. I understand my vote is recorded "no." I voted no by mistake and ask that it be changed to "ay."

Mr. BROWNE. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HAMILTON. When the last vote was called I inadvertently voted. I desire now to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

29. No member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is immediately and particularly interested, or in any case where he was not within the bar of the House when the question was put. When the roll-call is completed, the Speaker shall state that any member offering to vote does so upon the assurance that he was within the bar before the last name on the roll was called: Provided, however, That any member who was absent by leave of the House may vote at any time before the result is announced. It is not in order for the Speaker to entertain any request for a member to change his vote on any question after the result shall have been declared, nor shall any member be allowed to record his vote on any question, if he was not present when such vote was taken.

The SPEAKER. The subject of pairs does not come within the province of the Chair at all. They are matters of personal convenience.

Mr. BROWNE. My vote would not change the result. I will be content to have it put on record that I voted inadvertently. I would not have done it had it occurred to my mind I was paired with my colleague.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen have accomplished their purposes by the statements they have made.

CHARGES AGAINST THE DOORKEEPER OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HARRISON. I now ask that the Clerk read the report which I have submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Your Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to which was referred the resolution adopted January 31, 1878, directing it to inquire into the matters and things alleged against John W. Polk, the Doorkeeper of the House, having had the same under careful and patient consideration, most respectfully reports:

That it has caused to be brought before it all persons whose testimony it has reason to believe would bear materially upon the subject, (see Mis. Doc. No. 36,) and has come to the following conclusions:

First. That during the extra session of this Congress the said Doorkeeper did employ or permit to act as messengers, pages, and laborers in and about the House of Representatives, in excess of the number authorized by law, and over and above the so-called cloak-room men who clean this Hall, sixty-odd persons. (Mis. Doc. 36, page 392.) This was done with the full knowledge that such excess was without warrant of law, (pages 77 and 78,) and was not discontinued even after he had learned that the Committee of Accounts would not justify his acts in the premises, and would not make provisions for the payment of such illegal force. (Pages 361-395.) His manner of making appointments was such that he did not know the number employed or who had claims for services; the result whereof was that the sum of money voted by the House December 16th to pay this extra force, and which was based upon data furnished the Committee of Accounts by him, proved insufficient to pay all who had claims under him for services rendered, and they were forced to submit to a reduction of 20 per cent. from the pay they supposed themselves entitled to. (Pages 93, 95, 363 to 365.)

In extenuation Mr. Polk pleaded the necessity of an increased force, the practice under former Congresses, and specifically under the Forty-fourth Congress, and the pressure brought to bear upon him by members of Congress, (page 77.) In his testimony, however, he finally admits his mistake as to the necessity, admits that he was aware that the extra force under the Forty-fourth Congress was authorized by resolution, (page 315,) and corrects his statements as to pressure from members. (Page 106.)

Second. That up to a late day in this session he has authorized or permitted persons to perform services who at the time were borne on no roll, and continued others in service after striking them from the rolls, promising or suggesting that they would be paid under resolution or that they should be placed on a roll when his force should be increased. (Pages 59, 210, 212, 354.)

Third. That he employed on the floor of the House during the session in December fifty-six pages, just double as many as the law warrants, and although he had made up his page-roll on the 3d of the month, (pages 87, 88,) the boys thereon being notified of the fact, (pages 88, 277,) yet when the House took its recess he made a fictitious pay-roll, (page 96,) placing thereon twenty-eight pages as serving from the 1st to the 15th, and the other twenty-eight as serving from the 16th to the 31st, (pages 67, 87, 88;) the first twenty-eight being paid $37.50 each, and the last twenty-eight being paid $40 each. To justify this anomalous roll to the Committee of Accounts he represented that the boys on the roll for the last half of the month were to be his regular pages, (page 372;) yet on the January roll are found eleven of the pages who had been dropped on the 15th of December. (Page 71.) In extenuation, Mr. Polk pleads the poverty of the boys, the urgent appeals of parents and friends, the consent of the pages to their being so paid, and that it was "a work of charity." (Pages 303, 308, 312.)

Fourth. That he has continuously employed one mail and two riding pages over and above the number authorized by law, stating that they were indispensable, (pages 88, 371,) and that "the gentleman who framed that law" (the one fixing pages) "probably knew nothing about the management of the pages of the House or the necessities of the case." (Page 127.)

Fifth. That the Doorkeeper placed upon the soldiers' roll men who had never been in the Army, (pages 98, 43, 180;) one of them, "a boy," put on the roll for January "in order to give him his pay," and because there was "a vacancy on that roll for that month," (pages 44, 101, 316;) and yet one soldier, serving continuously from December 1, got no pay for the first half of January; another was dropped on the 15th, and a third was dropped on the 10th, and his name was replaced on the pay-roll the next month to enable him to draw the pay, which he did, and on the request of Mr. Polk paid it over to the man who had taken his place, but who was not qualified for the roll. (Pages 34, 50, 51, 35, 183.)

Sixth. That the Doorkeeper did receive money from two of his employes to be paid over to a third, who had been promised one or the other of their places, for the purpose of making his salary equal to the one promised. The testimony is that this was a voluntary contribution, and was afterward repaid. But the fact that Mr. Polk had let these parties know of his intention to make up this salary out of his own pocket taints the transaction. (Pages 157, 175, 178.)

Seventh. That while complaining of the insufficiency of his labor force he detailed some of his laborers to do other than laborer's services; and permitted several of them to hire substitutes to perform their entire work, they drawing the full salaries and paying their substitutes about one-fifth thereof. (Pages 190, 193, 135, 236, 249, and 325.)

Eighth. That he "created an office" at a high salary, without precedent, on the Doorkeeper's rolls, for the purpose of making a place for a gentleman who could not accept a $1,200 place, for "it would not support him."

Ninth. That his manner of making up his rolls was such, that employes would find out only at the end of the month that their names were not on any pay-roll. One man appointed December 1, for the soldiers' roll, found at the end of the month that his name was left off the pay-roll for the first seven days; and, at the last of January, that he could not get his pay for the first half of the month, although his service was continuous. (Page 84.) The Doorkeeper gave divers persons notice of appointments, who, after performing services as they supposed under the law would find at the end of the month that they could not be put on any pay-roll. One colored man was employed by Mr. Polk and set to work by his assistant in October, was shown his name on a roll by the janitor, yet he was never put on a pay-roll. (Pages 143, 144.) These irregularities grew to a great extent, out of the habit of making up the regular rolls at the end of the month, and worked great injustice.

Tenth. That the testimony does not show that Mr. Polk is positively interested in any claims now pending in Congress. The Newfangled Paving Company owes him an unsettled balance, and has a bill for its rent before the House, (pages 116 to 118,) but he claims to have no interest in it. In connection with this company, prior to the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, Mr. Polk seems to have employed, or continued in employ, a man because of his pretended claim to influence with a congressman. (Pages 118 to 120.)

Mr. Polk does not deny the major part of the things herein set forth, but in extenuation pleads the necessities of his department, his rawness in position, the clamors of needy applicants, and past custom.

Your committee believes that, with proper handling, the lawful force under the Doorkeeper has been quite sufficient, and that it was his duty to find out as early as practicable whether or not it was sufficient, and in no event to add to it until authorized so to do by resolution of the House; but that no rawness in office and no custom can be set up in defense of a palpable violation of known law.

The utter disregard of legal restraint shown by Mr. Polk, his open violation of known law, to say nothing of his inefficiency, as shown throughout the testimony, (only the more glaring instances being herein cited,) render him, in the opinion of your committee, unfit for the responsible and delicate position of Doorkeeper.

Your committee, therefore, recommends the adoption of the following resolution: Resolved, That the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and hereby is, declared vacant; and

Further resolved, That until the appointment of a new Doorkeeper, the duties of the office be, and hereby are, devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms.

GAETHER H. HARRISON,
Chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now ask that the views of the minority be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, feel constrained to differ from the majority in the report made upon the resolution offered by Hon. JOHN H. BAKER, and referred to the said committee on the 1st of February, 1878. After long and tedious investigation and due consideration given the testimony, we find, as to the first allegation, that John W. Polk, Doorkeeper, did employ many persons in excess of the number authorized by law, who, together with others serving without employment or appointment by him, amounted to the number of sixty-three, and all of these were paid by resolution of the House adopted December 15, 1877, under the supervision of the Committee of Accounts; that this employment was notorious and public, Polk, on the 9th of November, 1877, having communicated the fact to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

As to the second, that men had been employed by said John W. Polk, Doorkeeper, who were not borne on the roll of employes, as appears from the finding as to the first allegation; and that William H. Holt, and perhaps some others, were continued in service after being dropped from the roll, in expectancy of pay by the action of the House, or in lieu of others.

As to the third, that said John W. Polk has not been guilty of corruption in office or guilty of other malfeasance than the employment of persons in excess of the number required by law; and he is expressly exonerated from the charge of requiring employes under him to pay to other employes a part of the salaries to which they are entitled by law as a condition of their appointment or retention in office.

And as to the fourth and last, that they are unable to find from the evidence that John W. Polk, Doorkeeper, is interested in claims and bills pending or about to be brought before the House for action.

The evidence is voluminous and discloses numerous mistakes by the Doorkeeper, especially in the earlier part of his service, arising from inexperience, a desire to comply with the demands and supposed necessities of the House and its committees, and the belief on his part that his paramount duty was to perform and cause to be performed such services as were to his mind apparently necessary, trusting to supposed precedents for appropriations to pay such force as he might employ for such purpose. Many of these are attempted to be magnified by the majority, and declared of the grossest class and character, but we feel confident in the assertion that the closest scrutiny of the testimony will fail to disclose a sordid motive underlying any of them, but, on the contrary, disclose the fact that they arose from a generous disposition to accommodate others. Moreover, the testimony shows that instead of any act being done by said Doorkeeper to unlawfully deprive the Treasury of a dollar or to fill his own pockets, he has undertaken in one case, at least, to pay from his own pocket for services rendered the House. The Doorkeeper's department we find at present in very good practical operation, being run on about as economical a scale as is usual.

We, without any sort of fear of the correctness of our position, unqualifiedly dissent from the resolution of the majority, because the committee was not authorized to so report by resolution, and for the manifest inconsistency of trying an officer upon a charge of corruption and finding him guilty of, and recommending a removal for, incompetency. It would be far more consistent to charge a party with larceny and find him guilty of an assault and battery; and a bench especially created for reform in the law would not be likely to do this, although in that case the offense charged and of which the party is found guilty are both criminal offenses defined by statute.

Incompetency, we are free to admit, is good ground for removal from office by the appropriate power, and the power of the House to remove any of its selections for such cause is not denied; but regarding each and every man's character entitled to as much protection by the law and law-makers as his person or property, we cannot, with the light we have upon the great subject of civil-service reform, agree with the majority that corruption and incompetency are equally criminal, so that a conviction may be had for the latter upon a charge of the former. The gravamen of the resolution of Mr. BAKER is corruption and malfeasance in office, from which it would be inferred by almost every one, if the Doorkeeper is found guilty, that an offense defined by law, common or statutory, had been committed, and at least by all that he had been guilty of illegal action from corrupt motives. No corruption being shown, nor even charged, in the report of the majority, directly, it would be a grievous wrong against Polk to adopt the majority report.

Respectfully submitted.

PHILIP COOK,
JORDAN E. CRAVENS,
WM. W. GAITH,
DAN'L M. HENRY.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, when the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service it was so referred without any solicitation whatever on the part of that committee or of any member of it. It was a source of regret, as far as I have since been able to learn, to every single member of that committee that this investigation should have been sent to them.

Sir, seven of the eleven members of the committee are democrats, believing that the success of the democratic party is conducive to the success and prosperity of our country. We knew, whatever verdict that committee should render, there would be used by the party press of the country in opposition to us the fact that these charges had been made, to injure the party to which we were attached. We entered upon that investigation as a matter of duty, and not as a labor of love. Mr. Polk had from the beginning to the end as kindly, as fair an investigation as it is possible for any man to have by any committee not pledged to acquit regardless of the testimony. If there was one single feeling of party prejudice felt by any member of the minority of that committee, I have been wholly unable to discover it. I was present, sir, at every meeting of that committee. I presided over it at every single meeting and during every moment of time. I do say, if there was one single question, one single vote, one single conclusion arrived at by the republicans of that committee which was influenced by partisanship, I was too blind to discover it.

One of the first questions raised before the committee by Mr. Polk and by his very able counsel, Judge HANNA, was that the committee should confine itself to the resolution of Mr. BAKER as a petit jury should be confined to an indictment: that we should inquire and consider only into the technical charges made in that resolution and that we should give Mr. Polk the benefit of every technicality; that we should weigh no testimony which would not bear strictly upon the matters and things alleged in the resolution, and render a verdict simply upon the matters charged.

Sir, the resolution which gave that committee its existence is in these words:

Resolved, That a select committee of eleven members be appointed by the Speaker, whose duty it shall be to consider the civil service of the United States and measures to promote its efficiency, and that the committee shall have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Now, sir, we believed and still believe that under the very resolution which gave us birth as a committee, we would have had the right and it would have been our duty to move in this matter as of our own motion. The only additional strength that was given us by the resolution was the power to send for persons and papers. We held and hold, that if during that investigation matters and things should have been proven against the Sergeant-at-Arms or against the Clerk of the House it would have been not only our right, but our duty to report to the House the facts as they came before us.

Therefore, sir, we did not feel that we were confined, as the minority say, in such a way that we could not report an assault and battery under an indictment for larceny. Sir, what a spectacle it would have been before this country if a committee on reform in the civil service of the country should have found proven before it facts showing that Mr. Polk had been guilty of some other wrong-doings or of crimes, other than those alleged, and we should have come in here and reported on the resolution referred to as not guilty and remained silent as to the facts brought out. Sir, we did not believe that that was our duty, and so we made our report.

What, sir, do we find? We find that Mr. Polk did, during the extra session, employ a large number of messengers, laborers, and pages, in excess of the number authorized by law. The minority do not gainsay this, and admit even more than the facts justify: that there were sixty-three. In truth, however, by analyzing the pay-roll, on page 292, it will be found that a part of that pay-roll—some fifty—were employed at one time—

Mr. COOK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question? Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOK. Did not Mr. Polk report that fact to the Committee of Accounts on the 9th day of November?

A MEMBER. What fact?

Mr. COOK. That he had put sixty-three men on the pay-rolls, and asked the Committee of Accounts to take action in regard to them.

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; he did not make such a report, for he did not have them at that time. I am sorry that the gentleman who was rarely present in the committee and yet signs the minority report shows he knows so little of the testimony.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Was there no member of the majority who signed the report who was not present at the meetings of the committee?

Mr. HARRISON. I am not aware of it.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Was the gentleman from New York [Mr. PORTER] present in the committee?

Mr. HARRISON. Ask him.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I am asking you for information.

Mr. HARRISON. Ask the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I did not expect to get much information from you when I put the question.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANKLIN] seems determined to get me off my balance. I tell him he cannot move me just now. I am not under discussion; it is Mr. Polk.

Now, the facts are that fifty-five or fifty-six of this extra force were in employment at one time—not sixty-three, as the minority report admits—and we found that Mr. Polk was aware when he made this illegal employment of messengers, pages, and laborers that it was an illegal act. At page 77, in a written statement prepared with the advice of his counsel, not brought out in the excitement or heat of interrogatories put to him, but coolly and calmly made a part of his testimony and sworn to, Mr. Polk says this:

When I entered upon my position I found the force in my department, as authorized by the appropriation act, inadequate to an efficient management of it, and having from the 15th of October to the 1st of November to consider the matter, and having determined to make no general changes in the employes before that period, I had ample time to examine into the needs of my department, study its history, and consult with the democratic members as to the policy that should govern me. I found—

Not "find;" but that between the 15th of October and the 1st of November, the two weeks taken by Mr. Polk to study the history of his department, he "found"—

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question right there.

Mr. HARRISON. I am reading now from the testimony, and the gentleman will get more information if he will listen to it calmly than he will by asking me questions.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I am perfectly aware that if the gentleman continues reading I will get more information than I possibly can from himself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER.) The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Will gentlemen please remember that my time is being extracted from me by this sort of process. I continue reading the statement by the Doorkeeper:

I found that the Doorkeeper's department of the House had never been worked with so small a force as was then and is now authorized by the law, and that the Forty-fourth Congress, which had fixed, in the legislative and civil appropriation bill, the number, character, and pay of the force, authorized by resolution of the House the employment of forty-seven extra employes under the Doorkeeper for the second session of that Congress.

Mr. Polk knew, during the two weeks taken by him to study up this matter, that he had so many employes assigned him by law, and he concluded to make a law unto himself. That is not all, sir. We found that Mr. Polk did not stop this matter when he found that the Committee of Accounts would not justify his acts. To prevent taking too much time I will simply refer to the testimony without reading it all. Mr. McMAHON, page 361, says that Mr. Polk came to the committee to get a justification of his acts. There was a question as to when exactly this thing was done. Mr. McMAHON says between the 1st and 8th; certainly between the 1st and 9th, because Mr. Polk, finding that the Committee of Accounts would not justify his acts, went to another tribunal, to another committee to have an appropriation made, the Committee on Appropriations. A letter addressed to its chairman, Mr. ATKINS, on the 9th of November, is given at page 78. At the time when he addressed that letter, Mr. Polk, in his own testimony, page 301, states this, speaking of this letter:

This letter was addressed to the committee on the 9th of November, after I had begun employing this extra force, and really before I had employed the whole of it, because the employment extended along through the month of November.

The Committee of Accounts would not justify him up to that time, so he goes to the Committee on Appropriations, and still continues to employ these men throughout a month more.

Mr. Donovan states on page 266:

On the 1st day of November this apportionment of Colonel Polk's was sent out, on which there were eleven men in excess of the law. During the month of November that excess was considerably increased by appointment of parties to places

On page 298, Mr. Polk, in speaking of the fact that a larger number were added to the list of his employés who were not regularly employed, in answer to the question how many persons were included in that statement that were not on the extra force said, "I think there were ten or eleven."

On page 299 he says:

I started out by not making many appointments on the 1st of November, probably not more than fourteen or sixteen all told.

Now, sir, there were fourteen or sixteen all told on the list, yet, says the minority of the committee, Mr. Polk has not robbed the Treasury. Now, by referring to page 392 you will find that he paid fifty-one employés from the 1st of November and two from the 2d of November. Only fourteen or sixteen were on the roll when he started out, and afterward (page 298) ten or eleven were added. This is from his own statement, and by Mr. Donovan's statement only eleven in excess were employed on November 1, (see page 266,) and yet he reports to the Committee of Accounts fifty-one men from the 1st of November, and the Government has to pay men for time not spent in its employ.

Let me recapitulate, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Polk says on November 1, or about that time, he had employed fourteen or sixteen extra men. Mr. Donovan, his assistant, says that on November 1 there were eleven on the rolls in excess of law. Then Mr. Polk and Mr. Donovan say he added to this list during the month. Yet fifty-one are paid from the 1st, and two from the 2d, on and through or partly through the month; afterward he says that ten or eleven were added to the pay-roll after the resolution of December 15 was passed. Now, give him the advantage of these ten or eleven and it gives about thirty who were paid from November 1. We know not when these twenty-nine or thirty went to work, anywhere during the month of November; yet they were paid from the 1st. And yet the minority say the Government lost nothing. It certainly lost what was paid to these men for the time they were not in its employ. Mr. Polk told the committee that he considered a promise to a member of a position the same as an employment, and thus accounted for the employment of part of this illegal force throughout November. This pay-roll looks as if he dates pay also from time of the promise being made.

Mr. Polk is a kind man, sir. I will say here in my place that when I went into that committee I went in with the resolution, if possible, to save Mr. Polk. I was desirous of saving him. I wanted to be not only fair, but I leaned toward the employé of my party. I had voted for him, not only on this floor but in caucus. He was my candidate. I was friendly disposed toward him. But Mr. Polk has employed men outside of the law; making a law to himself; disregarding the law. The democratic party has pledged itself by its platform to civil-service reform, and are they going to the country to tell it that our pledge and our platform was but a promise to be broken; that we will punish a republican for guilt or wrong, but we will spread whitewash over our own friends? I do not believe it; I never have believed it. If the party does that I am not one of them. I am not schooled in the whitewash business. I read our platform as an honest expression of my party. I read it as an honest promise to the people, a promise to be fulfilled to the letter, and I will do what I can to fulfill that promise, whether it be a democrat or a republican who gets hit, whether the wrong-doer be high or low. Never while I am a member of this body will I consent to cover up or overlook violation of law in any officer of the law.

Again I find Mr. Polk employing on the 31st day of December fifty-six pages. Twenty-eight of them he put upon the roll. On page 87 he says:

The Assistant Doorkeeper had a list of the twenty-eight pages that were intended to be employed all through.

33. Question. When did he have that list?

Answer. From the beginning of December.

34. Q. Were those boys then set at work by your authority?

A. Yes, sir.

35. Q. Which boys are they?

A. I cannot name them exactly. They are the boys that are now on the roll.

On page 88 he says:

106. Question. Then I understand you that on the 1st of December all the pages except twenty-eight were notified that they were discharged, and these were kept? Answer. All of them were discharged on the 1st of December, and I selected the twenty-eight that I expected to retain permanently as pages on the floor.

107. Q. Were they notified of that?

A. Yes, sir; and then there was a great scramble.

He had notified these little boys, twenty-eight of them, of the fact of their appointment. He notified these twenty-eight, the number that the law allows, but he had fifty-six here. The Government is rich, and Mr. Polk was the almoner of the party, and thinks that we employed him for that purpose, when I thought we employed him to perform duties around this House, as one of its officers. You will find by Mr. Polk's testimony on pages 87 and 88 and Mr. Donovan's on page 277, that he notified these boys who were on the regular roll for December, notified them December 3; yet, when this House went into recess on the 15th of December, weeping mothers and their little orphans came around him, and his heart could not stand it, and so he says that—

You have all the facts about the page-roll for December before you in the testimony. I have but little to say on that subject. When I discharged all the boys on the 15th of December, one-half of them finally, the other twenty-eight with the promise of reappointment on the 1st of January, it would have been just as easy for me to have made up my roll with the twenty-eight pages for the full month and appealed to them to divide their salaries with their little comrades (who had no hope of reappointment) as it was to arrange the roll in the manner I did; there would have been no objection or murmuring on the part of the boys, as there has been none; but I preferred to have my public acts on record. I believed it was right and just, and I still believe so. I am persuaded that there is not one gentleman on this committee who, if he had witnessed, as I did, the tears of these sad-hearted little representatives of widowed mothers and orphan sisters and brothers, would not have taken some responsibility to comfort them, when he was doing no harm to the Government, costing it no more, and doing them great good.

Sir, I appreciate the kindness of heart which prompted him to take the pay which belonged to twenty-eight and to divide it with fifty-six, the pay of twenty-eight legally employed pages and to give the half of it to another twenty-eight who were not legally employed.

Sir, it is a good thing to be kind, but when a man is in an office and has sworn to obey the law, it is a better thing to be obedient to that law. It is a good thing to be charitable, but when a man gets into a position where his example may be followed all over the country—for the people are only too prone to look to persons in high places for example—when he is in such a position, charity is not the question; it is the performance of his duty and obedience to the law.

Mr. BRIGHT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly, if it does not occupy too much time.

Mr. BRIGHT. Do I understand you to say that fifty-six pages were upon the roll at one time?

Mr. HARRISON. No; not on the proper roll, but on the floor at one time, and then put on the pay-roll, half of them the first half of the month and the other half the latter half of the month.

Mr. BRIGHT. On the floor? I understood you to say that they were borne on the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. I said that twenty-eight were put on the roll, and were notified of their appointment, while fifty-six were actually employed upon the floor until the House went into recess.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then there were twenty-eight more that were upon the roll for the same month, but not for the same time?

Mr. HARRISON. The testimony is that the whole fifty-six were on the floor doing duty from the 1st of the month.

Mr. BRIGHT. The question is, were they on the floor at the same time?

Mr. HARRISON. All on the floor at the same time.

Mr. BRIGHT. And all on the roll at the same time?

Mr. HARRISON. All upon the pay-roll, but not from the same date. By reference to the pay-roll it will be found that Leonard Nackman was paid from the 1st to the 15th of December $37.50; T. K. Hackman was paid from the 16th to the 31st of December $40. So the roll goes on all the way through, a boy from 1 to 15, then a boy from 16 to 31; one-half of the boys were paid $37.50 each from the 1st to the 15th of December and the other half were paid $40 each from the 16th to the end of December, (I hold the roll up so you can see it), although the House was in recess. But the plea was charity; weeping mothers and sad-hearted little representatives of widowed mothers.

Mr. ELLIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLIS. Does the evidence show that the Government suffered at all by that arrangement?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir. His intentions may have been good, but there is an old saying that hell is paved with good intentions.

Mr. ELLIS. I understand that. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. ELLIS. Does not the evidence further show that that arrangement was by consent between the pages?

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman asks if it was an arrangement consented to by the pages. These little minors were generous, but they were also powerless. Who were the boys entitled to a place on the regular roll? The twenty-eight boys who were on the roll on the 3d of December, and Mr. Polk says the same who were on the roll in January and February, those were the boys the Government had employed. But because of some weeping little boys, the sons of widowed mothers, he took the pay of these and gave half of it to other boys. Who was the widowed mother of John W. Polk, jr., who drew pay from the 1st to the 15th of the month, and has not been on any roll since? If you will go to the testimony you will find that Mr. Polk says that he never put his son on any roll, never had him on any roll.

Mr. YEATES. What page is that?

Mr. HARRISON. Pages 114 and 294. On page 294 he says, "My son has been continuously at work since about the 1st of December. He has worked two months and a half without any pay at all." He was testifying on the 28th of February. That was in answer to a question put to him by his own attorney. He says "My son has been continuously at work since about the 1st of December. He has worked two and a half months in my office without any pay at all." Then he says that his daughter has received one month and twelve days' pay, and that this was for the work of son and daughter.

Now, when I think of the little boys who were clustering around him, of the little boys who have widowed mothers, who were regularly on the roll on the 3d of December, I am constrained to think their tears ought to have been heeded. He says, in answer to the question who these boys were, that they were the boys who are now on the roll; that is when he was testifying; but his son has not been on any roll since December. On page 294 I find this:

By Mr. HANNA:

Question. Tell the committee about your daughter being employed by you as a clerk and your son as a page.

Answer. All there is about it is that my daughter did the work, and worked for a longer time than she was paid for. My son has been continuously at work since about the 1st of December. He has worked two months and a half in my office without any pay at all, and the two together have received—that is, my daughter has received—one month and twelve days' pay. She did all my work that I did not do myself. That is all there is of it. I considered that having both in my service one of them was entitled to some pay.

And he further says the boys who were on from the 16th to the 31st of December were to be his regular pages, (see Mr. McMAHON's testimony:)

Question. You understood distinctly that twenty-eight of those boys were discharged and that twenty-eight more were employed, and that those twenty-eight were considered by the Doorkeeper as his regular page force?

Answer. Unquestionably. I said to him, "Now I understand that these boys that are on this roll, from the 16th to the 31st, are your regular force; because, of course, we don't want to approve their pay in advance unless we know that they are your permanent pages," and he said, "Yes, they are my regular force." He made one reservation which I thought perfectly proper. He said, "Of course I don't feel bound to keep all these boys, if, on trial, I find any of them unfit for the service. I reserve the usual right to make a change here and there in my roll."

And yet, by looking at this page roll you will find eleven of the boys discharged on the 15th of December again on the roll for January. The twenty-eight pages notified on the 3d of December of their being on the roll were the lawful pages. Who are they? Mr. Polk says they were the pages who were on the roll in February when he was testifying, (see his answers on page 87:)

94. Question. Were those boys then set at work by your authority?

Answer. Yes, sir.

95. Q. Which boys are they?

A. I cannot name them exactly. They are the boys that are now on the roll.

96. Q. Are they the identical boys that are now on the roll or did you make changes afterward?

A. I think I make some changes in January.

97. Q. Did not you make some in December?

A. Perhaps I did. I make frequent changes.

His son is not one of them, for he says he was never on the roll. Therefore twenty-eight regularly employed boys were robbed of half of their pay, and that half was given to boys who were not properly employed. The Government is indebted to those regularly employed boys.

You shake your head, [turning to Mr. ELLSWORTH.] I will put a legal question to you. These little boys worked from the 1st to the 15th of the month, while the House was in session; the House then took a recess and were not in session for the remainder of the month. What right had these boys to be on the roll from the 15th to the 31st of the month and to be paid for that time? Was it not because they had been at work from the 1st to the 15th, while the House was in session? Yet we find that other twenty-eight of these boys were put on the roll and received the pay from the 16th to the 31st of the month.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Now look here—

Mr. HARRISON. My time is running out fast.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Then you ought not to fire at me.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, I did not know that I was firing at you at all. However, what is it that you want to say?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I say that there is nobody on that roll but who was paid for the month of December; and the Government is not liable to any one who was not on the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. No? A member of my committee, who for, I think, twenty years was a judge of the supreme court of New York, thinks that these boys are entitled to pay, because they performed the work and were told that they would be paid. I do not know how it is; I do not claim to be much of a lawyer.

Mr. Polk first put the blame on the Committee of Accounts. He said that they made up the rolls, and he put the blame on them. One day he says that the members of Congress are responsible for his extra roll, then he says the Committee of Accounts is responsible for the manner in which he makes it up, and, with a remarkable facility for correcting his testimony, he comes in the next day and corrects it and says he takes the responsibility.

Mr. YEATES. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. HARRISON. Well, if you will look over the testimony you will find what I mean.

Mr. YEATES. I thought the gentleman was speaking as the chairman of a fair committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Polk says in his written statement, on page 77 of the testimony:

The foregoing considerations, backed by the incessant demands and importunities of the House for appointments of their friends, and the repeated assurances from them that my force should be increased to the necessary number, and all my appointments thereby legalized; the urgent requests of chairmen of the leading committees for special messengers for their committee-rooms, &c.

And then on page 103 is this testimony:

Question. There has been an impression given out that it was from pressure from members of Congress that all this difficulty arose in your department. Now, was not part of the difficulty owing to the fact that you appointed your own friends, and that then, having no ability to make the other appointments that were requested, you allowed this large pay-roll to grow up?

Answer. No, sir; that did not influence me. I believed that the force was insufficient, and I believe so yet.

Q. Then it was not the pressure of Congressmen that made you employ this extra force?

Mr. CRAVENS. Who asked that question?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. CRAVENS. Exactly.

Mr. HARRISON. (reading:)

Answer. Well, sir, there was a great deal of pressure by a great many persons, and a great many promises made. It is not to be expected that I am going to mention the names of any members of Congress here, but I say generally that there were requests and promises made. You see it was in the nature of an argument all the time. I said to them, "I am not authorized by law to put these men on, but the precedent justifies me," and the universal reply, with hardly an exception, was—

Question. You do not mean to say, then, that the cause of your putting on these extra appointees was the pressure from members of Congress?

A. No; but I will tell you one cause, the promise that I would be justified by Congress, that they would confirm and legalize my acts.

Now, in another place—

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Will you let me ask you a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I want to know whether you did not bring some pressure to bear on Mr. Polk yourself in regard to these appointments?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. You say here that you did not apply to him—

Mr. HARRISON. Ah!

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Oh! answer my question. Will you say to me that you did not apply to Mr. Polk for an appointment and did not succeed?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. You say you did not?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Will you swear to that?

Mr. HARRISON. I applied for an appointment and got it.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. It was given to my delegation. I asked Mr. Polk the question on page 104, "Did you ever intimate to me that he was on an illegal roll?" And he told me he did not, and that he did think me entitled to an appointment.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Then you did apply to him?

Mr. HARRISON. I applied to him, of course, and got the position.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Why did you say you did not?

Mr. HARRISON. I did not say so. I would advise the gentleman, as he cannot understand—

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Yes, I can understand.

Mr. HARRISON. I said "that I did not apply and not succeed." I also said, "I did not press Mr. Polk;" nor did I. Sir, it has gone out from this floor through the friends of Mr. Polk—

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Well, if the gentleman wants to ask me a short question I will listen.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. It will be very short. Did you not apply for the appointment of one Whalen?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir, and had him appointed.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Have you not had him on a committee since?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Then you did bring a pressure to bear on Mr. Polk, did you not?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir. Mr. Polk notified my committee that to Illinois so many appointments would be due; and my delegation indorsed this appointment.

Mr. SPARKS. Oh, now, HARRISON, allow me! [Laughter.] Was not your man already appointed when we met? I simply want my colleague—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will come to order. Gentlemen standing in the aisles will take their seats. The gentleman from Illinois will not proceed until order is restored.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he has not as many offices to give out as the Doorkeeper had? Members seem to be as thick around him as they were around Mr. Polk. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I would like to ask another question.

Mr. HARRISON. Go on.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Did not Mr. Polk discharge your man, Whalen, and since then have you not had him waiting upon the Committee on Civil Service Reform?

Mr. HARRISON. Now you have found a "mare's nest," have you not? [Laughter.] I think the gentleman had better go to the other side of the House. He does not get on well here. This side does not agree with him.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Answer my question.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Whalen was appointed by Mr. Polk. During the examination of Mr. Polk I asked him the question—

Mr. ELLSWORTH. He was appointed at your request?

Mr. HARRISON. Wait a moment. I asked Mr. Polk the question, "You appointed a friend of mine, didn't you?" His answer was, "Yes, sir." I then asked, "Did you ever tell me or intimate to me that?"

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I did not ask you—

Mr. HARRISON. I am answering as I choose.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I did not ask you what Polk said, but what you did.

Mr. HARRISON. (reading:)

Did you ever tell me or intimate to me that he was not on a force authorized by law?

Answer. I do not know. I know I felt that you were entitled to the appointment. I don't remember that I did tell you that; I don't think I ever did.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I did not ask for the reading of the testimony.
Mr. HARRISON. But I am reading it. I have the floor.
I do not think that I did.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan will not interrupt the gentleman from Illinois save by his consent.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, I can stand a good deal of this sort of thing. [Laughter.] The gentleman has got over on the democratic side and feels so happy at being here that he is trying to stir up a little fun.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Is that the way to answer a question?

Mr. EDEN. I insist that my colleague shall not be interrupted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Whalen was appointed by Mr. Polk. When the extra session ended Polk dismissed him. After that Whalen came to me and I went to Mr. Polk, who told me his reappointment depended on an increase of the force. I went to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] and asked him if the Committee of Accounts intended to give any increase of force. He replied that it did not. I then told my man to go home. Then when my committee met Mr. Thompson appointed him a deputy sergeant-at-arms to summon witnesses before that committee, and Mr. Polk requested Thompson so to appoint him, so I was informed.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that done at your request?

Mr. HARRISON. You have come over here too, have you? [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I remember seeing the gentleman from Ohio just after the election last fall when he came on in a director's car all to himself. [Laughter.] He rode from the interior of Ohio to the city of Washington, now and then coming out upon the platform for some of us democrats to look at him; but the election was over, sir, and he did not invite any democrat into that car. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELLSWORTH rose.

Mr. HARRISON. Just sit down for a while; I am now talking to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER.] [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. Did you pay to ride in that car?

Mr. HARRISON. No, and you did not either. [Laughter.] It was given to you to ride in to the city of Washington, you and your friends. We poor democrats could not get into it; we had not done anything for the railroads by which we could get such a favor.

Mr. FOSTER. Was this man appointed at your request or not?

Mr. HARRISON. I rather think I told Mr. Thompson if he had a place I would be glad to have a man there whom I could trust. [Laughter.] I did not want some of those whom you said were not to be trusted.

Mr. CHALMERS. Did you refuse to speak to Mr. Polk because he dismissed your man?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; that is not true. I remember speaking to Mr. Polk the very day or the day before Mr. BAKER's resolution was offered.

Mr. CHALMERS. I am told it is true.

Mr. HARRISON. Let the gentleman from Mississippi take my word for it, as a man and a gentleman, that it is not so.

Mr. CHALMERS and Mr. ELLSWORTH rose.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the preservation of order and that the Chair is desiring to do. Members will take their seats and order will be preserved in the Hall. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Now let me read the testimony of Mr. Polk:

Question. Did not you say that the extra force was employed by the pressure of members of Congress?

Answer. No; I didn't mean to say that. If I did say it, I correct it.

Mr. BRIGHT. In justice to Colonel Polk I ask the gentleman from Illinois to continue to read what Colonel Polk said.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well; I will continue to read what Colonel Polk states:

I have tried to say this: that the force fixed by law is inadequate, and when I took charge of my department I found that the force was inadequate for the efficient and proper management of the department, and I had the precedent for employing some additional help.

I do not see that adds to it.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is only fair to read everything that Colonel Polk said in response to your interrogatory.

Mr. HARRISON. I will try to be fair. I know I have that disposition. We found, in addition to the page roll, that Mr. Polk continuously employed three riding-pages, or two riding-pages and one mail-page. It is unnecessary to refer to the precise page as to this, for it is not denied. We have shown now that Mr. Polk had disregarded law by his extra force. He disobeyed law when he put these fifty-six pages here and paid them in the way he did.

Now, let me read what he says in answer to a question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

By Mr. COX:

Question. The statute explicitly provides for three riding-pages on the regular list; how then can you say that you are authorized to put other people in their places, and then insist upon their being retained as extra force because of the necessity?

Answer. The law simply says, "three of whom shall be riding-pages." Q. Yes; but if you, as the officer in charge, say that certain pages shall be the riding-pages; that brings them within the statute, does it not?

A. Well, I think it is impossible to do the work with that force. The gentleman who framed that law probably knew nothing about the management of the pages of the House or the necessities of the case. Twenty-eight pages are not enough.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. What page is that?

Mr. HARRISON. That is on page 127. Mr. Polk was a law unto himself. He was above law.

Now, before going further, I believe it is understood, as I have yielded to these interruptions, that my time will be extended beyond the hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can recognize no agreement. Every interruption of course comes out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. HARRISON. It has been agreed, I believe, that my time shall be extended.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Let the gentleman proceed until his hour has expired, and then an extension will be granted to him.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. Now, sir, these riding-pages were put on continuously. Mr. Polk put himself above law. He disobeyed law. We are asked to retain a man in place to whom law is no restraint. Sir, in a monarchy obedience to a king may be loyalty, but in a republic obedience to law is the only loyalty. The law demands this on the part of a citizen, and the citizen has a right to it on the part of an office-holder. How does Mr. Polk look upon law? Let me read from page 127 two questions and Mr. Polk's answers:

Question. The statute explicitly provides for three riding-pages on the regular list; how then can you say that you are authorized to put other people in their places, and then insist upon their being retained as extra force because of the necessity?

Answer. The law simply says, "three of whom shall be riding-pages."

Q. Yes; but if you, as the officer in charge, say that certain pages shall be the riding-pages; that brings them within the statute, does it not?

A. Well, I think it is impossible to do the work with that force. The gentleman who framed that law probably knew nothing about the management of the pages of the House or the necessities of the case. Twenty-eight pages are not enough.

Now, sir, when an officer rides over the law he sets an example to the people which the evil-disposed and the weak too readily follow, and which should not be set by one in position. He has no right to be kind at the expense of duty. His duty is to be just and to obey the law. Now, sir, Mr. Polk went on after this, and employed persons outside of the law, and disobeyed and violated the law. How?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me one question? I want to ask him a question as a lawyer?

Mr. HARRISON. Do you want me to answer as a witness?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I want you to answer as a lawyer.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. SPARKS. Then you can answer as a gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON. Ah! Very well, for I am one.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Then you are all right. [Laughter.] My question is this: Do you hold this Government liable to pay for extra labor put in here by Mr. Polk or anybody else in violation of law? Was anybody liable but Mr. Polk himself?

Mr. HARRISON. I hold this—

Mr. ELLSWORTH. If you do not know anything about the law, then no matter.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not answered the gentleman's question yet.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. If you do not know the law I do not ask for an answer.

Mr. HARRISON. But you asked me a question as a gentleman and I will answer it as a gentleman, and will teach you a little law and a good deal of ethics.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. You said you did not know.

Mr. HARRISON. Not at all. I did not say so.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Well, I will take your answer.

Mr. HARRISON. When the Government puts in a position a man who apparently has the right to employ others to labor, to work, under him, whether or not the Government is legally bound it is equitably bound to pay for the services those men rendered.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Equitably, not legally.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not say legally. Therefore, a man placed in office should be doubly careful to guard against doing anything in excess of his authority, anything that is wrong.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I desire to ask the gentleman another question. Could the Government be held in equity for the payment of that extra labor?

Mr. HARRISON. For some of it I think the Government could be held not only equitably but in law.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Could they be held liable in any court by the rules of equity?

Mr. HARRISON. You cannot sue the United States in a court.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Yes you can; in the Court of Claims.

Mr. HARRISON. Ah! you are learning.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. And that is the very place where they can be sued.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman from Michigan comes over here and argues as a lawyer. He ought to know you cannot sue the Government of the United States except upon a claim on which this Congress has passed.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I say the Government can be sued in the Court of Claims.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman is right, then I acknowledge my law is bad. Now, sir, let us go on.

There is what is known as the soldiers' roll. In the first place it consisted of disabled soldiers. This continued for years. Appropriations were made to pay fourteen soldiers, the defenders of the country, as messengers on this floor. That is a law. Mr. Polk testified that in his own opinion the soldiers' roll meant disabled soldiers. A few weeks ago we had that question up on this floor and my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] declared that we had democratic soldiers put in the place of republican ones. My colleague stated properly that there were democrats enough to fill the roll; that the North was full of democrats who had fought for the Union.

Mr. SPARKS. Was not that the fact?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; and we have got them. But it seems Mr. Polk could not find democrats enough coming from the Army.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I desire to ask the gentleman just one question.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the gentleman will keep his seat. I will not be interrupted any longer.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I have a right—

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman has a right let him enforce it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is out of order.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Will the gentleman not allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I want to ask you about those republican soldiers.

Mr. HARRISON. I have been exceedingly courteous and I think the gentleman has rather taken advantage of it. I am a very good-natured man except when moved. But I am like Othello—

Being wrought,
Perplex'd in the extreme.

Well, sir, the soldiers' roll is a law. Mr. Polk says he has thought it was more of a sentiment than anything else. (Page 101.) But he does not deny that, while a sentiment, it is a law. The law appropriates so many thousands of dollars to pay fourteen soldiers as messengers. In the first instance, soldiers who were disabled. Now, the law does not say "disabled;" but Mr. Polk says he admits that he considers it means disabled soldiers. Yet we find that Mr. Polk, in his testimony, (page 101,) says that he put on a lad by the name of Fitzhugh:

I had that vacancy, and as Fitzhugh had done this service in the folding room, and as he was very essential, I, under the impression that I was entitled to my full roll, without ever having appointed him on that roll, or notifying him in any way that I should appoint him on it, just took advantage of the fact that I was entitled to the full roll, and put him on it for that month in order to give him his pay.

And at page 316 you will find some interesting reading on that question. Here he says again:

Therefore, without ever appointing Mr. Fitzhugh on the soldiers' roll—that would be an absurdity, for he is a boy—I just had that vacancy there and I put him in there to pay him for his services.

Now, the Government had appropriated a hundred dollars to be paid in the month of January to a soldier. But this man had a vacancy and he just put this boy in to fill it.

If you will turn to the February roll in this book—the Clerk's book of pay-rolls—you will find this: Mr. Polk commenced his testimony on the 11th or 12th of February, just after Fitzhugh had been put on the soldiers' roll because there was a vacancy, for he put him on the last of January.

But when the roll comes to be made up in February that vacancy very conveniently remains, and Fitzhugh remained on the roll from the 1st to the 12th of that month.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOK. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. LUTTRELL. For one hour.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Indefinitely.

Mr. SPARKS. My colleague has been very much interrupted, and I trust there will be no objection to extending his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Illinois? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. Speaker, this vacancy occurred and it continued to occur, and young Fitzhugh was a valuable boy; he was the best workman in the document-room and was indispensable, but there were plenty of other places where he could have been put. There were other places on other rolls. But Mr. Polk had no right to put him where he would take the place appropriated by law for a man who has periled his life for the cause of the Union. Sir, this law may be a sentiment, but it is a sentiment which goes to the heart of countless millions of Americans.

Sir, Mr. Polk is a kind-hearted man, but he cannot learn that the law of the land ought to prevail. He cannot see or understand that disobedience to law in the simple citizen entails a penalty only when the disobedience works an injury to some other person. But disobedience in an officer is itself a wrong and should be punished.

Now, sir, let us see some other case—some other persons that he has put on the soldiers' roll that were not properly soldiers.

Mr. Polk, when asked the question on page 316, "At that time were there any applications made for appointments as soldiers on that roll under the apportionment to delegations," said "No, sir."

He says that there were no applications under the apportionment, but Mr. Alcorn was here from Ohio, a gallant soldier who fought for three years and nine months. He was the man who fired the first shot across the Potomac River during the war; he was here applying for a position, but because Ohio had already two employees Mr. Polk took a boy from the South, who was only nine years old when the war ended, and put him on the soldiers' roll. He could not put Alcorn on the roll, because he had given only one place on that roll to Ohio, so he put the boy in to fill a place which the law said a soldier should fill. Sir, will this House say to the country that there are not democratic soldiers to fill fourteen places? Will this democratic House forget that it is our boast that for every republican in the late war there was at least one democrat; that in the North-west the democratic soldiers were largely preponderating? Will this democratic House say its officer may violate the law with impunity?

But let us look still further. He put Mr. Prescott on the roll, but on the 10th of January Mr. Prescott was dismissed and Mr. Holt was put in his place, Mr. Holt who came to us and testified that he was a soldier. He was asked, "How long did you serve?" and he said "three years," and yet he stated on cross-examination that his campaigning was in a Boston militia company and never out of Massachusetts. He was a soldier in the militia of Massachusetts during the war, and he has been kept in employment when what he had sworn is known to Mr. Polk to have been false.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Has not the Doorkeeper since removed him?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; but he continued to work, and Mr. Polk got Prescott to let his name remain on the roll and to draw the pay and give it over to Holt.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Did not this man at the time of his appointment write to Mr. Polk that he was a soldier?

Mr. HARRISON. He told him he was a soldier; but what I am objecting to is that Mr. Polk continued him in office after he had thus deceived him. What I am blaming him for is keeping this man here drawing pay and turning away disabled soldiers who have come here qualified to fill the place and making a disabled soldier draw pay and hand it over to this valiant warrior who never smelled powder.

Mr. CRAVENS. I would ask the gentleman whether the appointment of these men from New England was not controlled by the members from that section and not by the Doorkeeper?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I understand that he keeps his own control. He may give patronage to members; but he never gives them the control of appointments.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Cannot a man be a soldier in Massachusetts? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. But he was merely a militia man.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Was not this man employed by request of the democratic delegation from New England?

Mr. HARRISON. Read Judge PHELPS's speech made in this Hall last night, and you will find that he denies the statement made by Mr. Polk. He stated that it was not so; that Mr. Polk was mistaken. Holt, it seems, had helped Mr. Polk in his election, and therefore he gave him a position.

Now, Prescott was put on the roll and discharged in ten days afterward and Holt put on in his place, as a soldier, as he claimed to be, and the ink was scarcely dry with which his appointment was written when it was found that he was not a soldier, and Prescott was told about the 16th of the month that he would be replaced in February, and on the last of the month Mr. Polk went and told him, "I have left your name on the roll drawing pay." And he did draw pay, not to keep, but to hand over to Holt. Why did he do this? Because, as he swears, Mr. Polk requested him so to do.

Again, sir, Mr. Knight, of Wisconsin, was here seeking for one of these positions. He was a soldier and was appointed in December and continued to work through January; but the last of the month, after he had been working all that time, he was told that, owing to some mistake or pressure, his name was dropped from the roll for the first fifteen days of the month; and yet Mr. Polk appointed this beardless boy from Texas to a place on the soldiers' roll, while this soldier was turned away. Alcorn was here idle, a gallant soldier. Knight was here, a good soldier, working and getting only half of his pay. Schulties was here, a soldier, and discharged on the 15th. But Mr. Polk's "attention was called, in the Clerk's office, to a place on the soldiers' roll that he was entitled to." So he just put this boy on it, and that place continued conveniently vacant in February, and the same boy was put on it, and not dropped from it until the second day Mr. Polk was on the stand before us, and the very day he gave this testimony about it.

Now, sir, let us look at another man, Mr. Dulin. His testimony is that he was an apothecary's clerk, or an apothecary in the Navy. His testimony is on page 180. Now this Mr. Dulin was put on the soldiers' roll, and continued on the soldiers' roll until in March. Who is this Mr. Dulin? He was appointed an apothecary of the first-class July 2, 1869, and served honorably under the following officers: Lewis J. Williams, medical director; William Johnson, medical director; Minian Pinckney, medical director; and soon, five years. An apothecary four years after the war was over. You will find it on page 181 of the testimony. That apothecary is put on the roll as a soldier. Mr. Polk put him on that roll, and he is on the roll for March. That is not all; there is Mr. Rodgers.

Mr. SPARKS. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKS. Who appointed Mr. Dulin on the soldiers' roll?

Mr. HARRISON. My understanding is that Mr. Polk makes appointments of all the men under him.

Mr. SPARKS. Do you not know that the testimony shows that Mr. Patterson appointed Mr. Dulin, and he was in the place when Mr. Polk came into office.

Mr. HARRISON. This testimony to which I refer was taken in February. Why had Polk continued him?

Mr. SPARKS. I asked you the question whether or not Dulin was not in the place when Polk came into office?

Mr. HARRISON. He was.

Mr. SPARKS. And Polk simply kept him there.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but because Mr. Patterson did wrong that does not justify Polk for continuing the wrong.

Mr. SPARKS. Do you want to turn Polk out because he kept in a man that Patterson put in?

Mr. HARRISON. If Patterson violated the law, that is no excuse for Polk to continue the violation. It is no excuse for a man who is being tried for theft to say that somebody else before him has been stealing.

Mr. SPARKS. Does not the testimony show that this identical man who was put on the roll and kept there for a year or more by Patterson, Polk's predecessor, had been five years in the Union service?

Mr. HARRISON. An apothecary in the Navy from July 2, 1869, to September 2, 1874. Here is the testimony; he had been an apothecary.

Mr. SPARKS. Does not the testimony show that fact?

Mr. HARRISON. I am reading the testimony to you.

Mr. SPARKS. Does not the testimony show that he had been five years in the Union Army?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. In the Union service, I mean; in the Navy?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh! in the Navy, as an apothecary. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPARKS. For five years.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us see what the gentleman, my colleague, himself thought about this matter awhile ago. Let us see what he thought in November. I read from his speech, November 22, 1877:

In a word, he has turned out some republican soldiers, who have been feeding at the public crib for many years, for the purpose of filling their places with crippled Union democratic soldiers, whose claims have been disregarded by former republican Houses. This much he has done and no more.

And further down he continues:

I know Colonel Polk well, and pledge myself, and I am responsible for the pledge, not only to that side of the House and to this side of the House, but to the country, that he will fill these places with Union soldiers. But I shall insist upon it that he fills them with solid, uncompromising democratic soldiers. We have abundant material to do it. The country is full of them.

Mr. SPARKS. That is just it; that is what I meant.

Mr. HARRISON. Ay; is this apothecary a "crippled Union democratic soldier" that you made that fine speech for?

Mr. SPARKS. He says he served for five years.

Mr. HARRISON. And you say "he has dismissed republicans"—that is your speech—"to put on crippled Union democratic soldiers." Was this apothecary in the Navy a Union democratic soldier?

Mr. SPARKS. I do not know whether he was a democrat or a republican.

Mr. HARRISON. Was he crippled?

Mr. SPARKS. I do not know.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I know he was not.

Mr. SPARKS. He served for five years.

Mr. HARRISON. Now let us go on a little further. Not satisfied with this, you will find on the February roll, page 189, H. M. Rodgers as a disabled soldier. Now, Mr. Rodgers was before some of the committee this morning and said that he had never been in the Union Army.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Did you say "this morning?"

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, this morning.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Did the committee take testimony this morning?

Mr. HARRISON. He was before the committee this morning.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I thought the case was closed.

Mr. HARRISON. I am stating facts.

Mr. FRANKLIN. We thought the committee had closed the case.

Mr. HARRISON. I am stating facts.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Did you advise Mr. Polk that the case would be reopened this morning?

Mr. HARRISON. He was not there at that moment, though he was there part of the morning.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. This was a secret session and you did not advise Mr. Polk.

Mr. HARRISON. There was no secrecy at all.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Did you advise Mr. Polk that the case would be opened?

Mr. HARRISON. It was not opened.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. You said awhile ago that the case was opened this morning.

Mr. HARRISON. I said nothing of the sort. But I am stating facts.

Mr. FRANKLIN. You acknowledged that you opened the case.

Mr. EDEN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. I insist that my colleague [Mr. HARRISON] has no right after the case has been closed and submitted to the House to come in here and state what took place in his committee this morning.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a right to open this book.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The committee has been a prosecuting body. Mr. FRANKLIN. Oh, he is a fair man, he would not do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot say what the gentleman shall say in his speech.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON. There are some gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to hear what my colleague [Mr. HARRISON] is saying; and I insist that he shall be allowed to proceed without these interruptions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will please come to order.

Mr. HARRISON. I believe I can halloo them down.

Mr. FINLEY. There is a point of order pending.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the point of order?

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to say a word on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to speak upon the point of order now pending. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] made the point of order that his colleague [Mr. HARRISON]—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided that the point of order was not well taken; that the Chair cannot undertake to decide what the gentleman from Illinois shall state in his speech.

Mr. FINLEY. I did not understand that the Chair had decided the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had so decided. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire, then, to make another point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FINLEY. My point of order is this: I ask to have excluded from the RECORD the statement of the gentleman from Illinois as to what took place in his committee this morning. It does not appear in the evidence as presented to the House by the committee, but the gentleman is giving it as evidence.

Mr. HARRISON. I am giving you facts.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not know whether they are facts. I know what appears here in the record before us. I ask that so much of the gentleman's statement as purports to represent what was given in evidence before the committee this morning, but which does not appear in the evidence as it lies before us, be excluded from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair in deciding the point of order will say that it is not usual for any gentleman in debate to state what has occurred in committee, and it is against the rules to do so; yet the Chair cannot enforce the rule on this point and cannot exclude from the speech of the gentleman anything that he chooses to utter on this floor.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Then the gentleman from Illinois did act in an "unusual" manner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed, and other gentlemen will not interrupt him without his consent.

Mr. HARRISON. "The gentleman from Illinois" is acting in so "unusual" a manner that he does not get offended at gentlemen getting up here and trying deliberately to confuse him.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman how many members of the committee were present at the meeting this morning.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman had waited, he would have heard me state that.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. We shall be glad to know all about it.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state the matter precisely. I heard Mr. Rogers was not a soldier—

Mr. EDEN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I am giving the information which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has asked for.

Mr. EDEN. My colleague certainly does not intend to violate the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not the province of the Chair to interfere with any statement that the gentleman from Illinois may choose to make.

Mr. EDEN. But the gentleman has no right to make a statement of what occurred in committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a right to make a statement upon my own information on this floor.

Mr. EDEN. I do not object to that; but I object to a statement of what took place in committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Very good. I am giving my statements; and if you will only take care of your own honor, I will take care of mine. It is not for you to read me lessons of duty.

Mr. EDEN. I am trying to take care of the rules of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman has no right to try to catechise me as to my duty in committee. I state here that Mr. Rogers is on the February roll. I take the book from the Clerk's office. I state that Mr. Rogers is not a soldier.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. What proof have you that he is not a soldier?

Mr. HARRISON. I will state it on my own assertion, and support it by his own statement, that he is not a soldier—

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Where and when? Tell us all about it.

Mr. HARRISON. That he was never in the Union Army.

Mr. CRITTENDEN rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I am giving my statement; believe it or not, as you choose. If you do not believe it, the majority of this House will believe me when I say that I know from this man's own statement that he is not a soldier.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I want to know whether the evidence that he was or was not a soldier was not developed only this morning.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to know whether it is in order for more than two gentlemen from Missouri to interrupt my colleague at one time. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is not in order for any gentleman to interrupt the member upon the floor without his consent.

Mr. HARRISON. I will answer this question. Mr. Rogers is found on the soldiers' roll. When he was put there I do not know. I found him there for February. I went to Mr. Rogers to know whether he was a soldier.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. When?

Mr. HARRISON. Some time ago. Mr. Rogers told me he was. This morning he told me he was not.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Which statement did you believe?

Mr. HARRISON. The last. In addition to that, Mr. Rogers is no longer on the soldiers' roll for March; but Mr. S. J. Rogers, who is not here, is on the roll; and Mr. H. M. Rogers is filling his place with a power of attorney to draw his money. There are your books; the books from the Clerk's office containing the pay-rolls. Do not talk to me about my testimony. The books show what your Doorkeeper is doing and what he is continuing to do.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Is that in the testimony?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I raise the point of order that the prosecuting attorney has no right to testify in a case. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, I am not an attorney, my friend. I am a Congressman of the United States, who is sworn to do his official duty, and who has not yet learned to shield any public officer because he is a member of his own party. I come here sworn to do my duty as chairman of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform; and I care not whether a man be of my party or of another, he shall not do wrong with my knowledge without my bringing it to the attention of the House.

I present to you a part of the records of this House, the pay-rolls of this House. They are testimony. These are facts which have transpired since the testimony closed. They are the pay-rolls for February and March. And there are the names of men who were never in the Union Army on the pay-roll of "disabled soldiers." These things show that Mr. Polk is continuing to violate the law in February and March, as he did violate the law in January.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I make the further point of order that the chairman of the Civil-Service Reform Committee has no right to go outside of what the committee has done and come into this House with evidence that he has gathered himself, without any action of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON, (holding up a book.) There is your own record.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That record was never submitted to the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I am making a speech, my friend, and I have the right to appeal to such documents as I please. I am not speaking as a lawyer.

Mr. FRANKLIN. It is not necessary for the gentleman to state that he is no lawyer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In response to the point of order of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HEWITT,] the Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois is speaking on his own responsibility and he has a right to proceed without interruption.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, sir, I am making a speech; I am arguing this question, and I have a right to bring in the facts. I have a right and it is my duty to tell this House anything I have of information which will enable them to come to a just verdict. If I heard this morning some facts having an important bearing upon this case I would be derelict to my duty if I did not tell the House those facts.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Would it not be your duty, then, if information came to you concerning this case since your committee closed the testimony and made its report, would it not be your duty to ask the House to allow your committee to reopen the case and to take further testimony? I do say here, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Illinois has no right, as chairman of a committee of this House, to drag in information from sources other than the sworn testimony taken in the case which was delivered to him and to his committee to try and a just verdict render on the evidence.

A MEMBER. And when the Doorkeeper had no chance to cross-examine.

Mr. FRANKLIN. The gentleman from Illinois has no right to bring any facts here outside of the testimony in the case and when the Doorkeeper has had no opportunity to meet and disprove those statements.

Mr. HARRISON. I have the floor and I will go on.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The gentleman, however, promised to answer my question.

Mr. HARRISON. In a moment I will answer the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, which I hope he will answer. He has stated to the House that Mr. Polk had employed a larger number than he was authorized by law to employ. I now ask him whether he, as chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, has examined into what was done in the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses on this very question, and whether he has made comparison between the expenses under Colonel Polk and the expenses under previous Doorkeepers in preceding Congresses—whether he has made a comparison between Mr. Polk's administration of this office and that of his predecessors, to see whether Colonel Polk's administration has not in reality been more economical than that of his predecessors? At least will the gentleman tell us what is the difference?

Mr. HARRISON. The committee of which I am chairman has not the dead past to rake up. We think it our duty to act within the living present and to remedy the wrongs which have now been done and which it is our duty to correct.

Mr. LUTTRELL. But that is not an answer to my question. My question is a legitimate one.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, it is not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor, and the gentleman from California will not interrupt him unless by his consent.

Mr. LUTTRELL. But the gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. HARRISON. I yielded to the gentleman, but he takes up the whole time.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I wish an answer to my question, and it is this: the gentleman says the Doorkeeper has violated the law in employing a larger number than the law authorized him to employ. I wish to know whether the Doorkeeper in employing a number in excess of the law has expended a larger sum than was expended by his predecessors in the doorkeepership for a smaller number of employees?

Mr. HARRISON. Now, I should like to know whether it is any defense of Mr. Polk, and that he is to be justified in doing wrong, because somebody else has done wrong.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Oh, no; answer my question.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to ask the gentleman whether if John Sherman were to pay money out for which there was no appropriation—

Mr. LUTTRELL. The gentleman is not answering my question. He proposes to put a question to me instead.

Mr. HARRISON. Suppose Mr. Sherman should pay a bill for which there was no appropriation—suppose he should pay a just claim even when there was no law providing for its payment, would not the gentleman have an investigation committee on him at once?

Mr. LUTTRELL. No, sir; that is not an answer to my question.

Mr. HARRISON. I tell the gentleman from California that if John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, had paid out the people's money in defiance of law, even if the claim were really a just one, the gentleman would have been one of the first to send articles of impeachment against him to the bar of the Senate.

Mr. LUTTRELL. That is an entirely different sort of affair. The gentleman dare not answer my question. He dodges the issue. Why not come up like a man and try this officer on his merits?

Mr. HARRISON. Why, sir, I should like to know whether it is a defense which can be set up in any court where a man is accused of stealing that he is to be acquitted because it is done in some other country by some other man?

Mr. HUBBELL. I would like to ask the Chair whether, when the gentleman from California puts a question to the gentleman from Illinois and he refuses to answer it, the gentleman from California can force him to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. He can lead me to the branch to drink, but he cannot make me drink.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California must confine himself to the legitimate purpose of asking a question, and he disregards the rule of the House when he retains the floor against the desire of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I did not intend to be out of order. [Cries of "Order! Order!"] I simply asked a question, and wanted an answer to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order at this moment.

Mr. HARRISON. I will just say this, in reply to the gentleman from California, that it is no defense for misconduct on the part of Mr. Polk that he had had predecessors.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I do not say it is.

Mr. HARRISON. It is no defense for violation of law on his part that he has saved money by illegal acts. Why, sir, a year ago, when Captain Eads was entitled to his pay for opening and deepening the mouths of the Mississippi River, he came to the Treasury of the United States to get his pay, but there was no appropriation made, and the Secretary of the Treasury refused to pay it. In the end we had to pay it, and we had to pay it in bonds which bore a large premium. And no one thought the Secretary of the Treasury wrong.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Did you not vote against paying Captain Eads?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir. It is no defense on the part of any man that somebody else has committed an equally heinous offense. It is no defense on the part of Mr. Polk that Mr. Patterson or Mr. Buxton did wrong. It is true Mr. Buxton testified that in the Fortieth Congress, and before, the hiring of substitutes was notorious. Is the same thing to be justified on the part of Mr. Polk by this democratic House of Representatives, when the democratic party put in its platform at Saint Louis a civil-service reform plank?

Mr. LUTTRELL. Oh, yes, they put hard money in their platform, but they went back on it.

Mr. HARRISON. Because the republican party has done wrong, is that any excuse for us to do wrong?

Mr. LUTTRELL. Is the gentleman to go back on the hard-money platform?

Mr. HARRISON. Sir, I contend that it is the duty of the democratic party to carry out civil-service reform. We have gone to the people with a plank adopted by that party, that we would have civil-service reform. And as long as I am able to help the cause and to strike a blow for civil-service reform, whether it hurts a democratic Congressman, a democratic Doorkeeper, or anybody else, I am ready to do it. I do not believe in using whitewash. I do not believe it is the interest of the country or the party to cover up the wrong-doings of one of our own men. We have gone before the country with our honest pledge. I believe it was honest. It is for this House to determine whether it was honest or not. We have gone before the country pledged that we will uncover wrong and unearth iniquity wherever it is found, whether in high places or in low. We chased Belknap last year for doing illegal acts, and only illegal acts. We have now found that Mr. Polk has been guilty of illegal acts. I do not charge Mr. Polk with putting one dollar in his own pocket. That is not necessary. An officer of the law is amenable, not for making money out of his office, but for disobeying the law under which he is there to act; for disobeying the laws he has sworn to uphold. He may be pure, he may be kind, he may be charitable; but if he violates the laws he is unfit to hold office. I am a democrat because I believe the democratic party to be the party of law. It knows the Constitution and the laws of the land, and it believes in no doctrine of "higher law." When I find that party not the party of law I shall cease to be a democrat.

The democratic party, now springing into power and asking the people for a lease of power during the next four years, cheated out of its President at the last election and not likely to be cheated the next time, has pledged itself to the people that it will give an honest administration of affairs. And yet we are told this man, who has violated the law, who has despised the law, who has disregarded the law, and who disobeys the law, shall not be put out of this office because he has not taken money himself. Sir, you might as well say that the man who steals my purse for the sake of building up a church with it has committed no crime because his act was intended for a good purpose. You might as well tell me the man who robs my house and takes from it my furniture or my goods for the sake of giving them to a charitable institution is immaculate because his intentions were good. I appeal to the democratic party. We have gone before the country pledging ourselves to give civil-service reform. Do not let it be said that the first democrat who is caught in its clutches is going to escape because he is a democrat or because he is kind and charitable. You put out Fitzhugh because he spelt "bigger" with one single "g." But here is a man who is robbing the soldier of the pittance the Government has given him and putting in his place a man who is not a soldier, who is disobeying the law willfully because the law hampers him in his management of the affairs the law has devolved upon him. If you pass these things over, then I ask you if you can go to your constituents and justify the act.

Mr. Speaker, I have not covered half the testimony, but I have already wearied the House and I thank it for its kind indulgence.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Before the gentleman sits down will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I will hear it.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I want to know whether the gentleman, after making this speech and after proving to this House that he went outside of his duty on the committee—

Mr. HARRISON. I deny it.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. And took this case into his hands without notice to Mr. Polk—

Mr. HARRISON. I deny it.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Whether he still persists in being considered a friend of Mr. Polk.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; I am a friend of Mr. Polk and his family; but I am a friend to my country and to its laws.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Then you do not deny it.

Mr. HARRISON. I would do as much for him as any man on this floor; but I would never consent to drag my party down to save any man, it makes no difference however kind and good he may be.

Mr. CRAVENS obtained the floor.

Mr. COOK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

T. W. SEGAR AND T. F. ALEXANDER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the chief clerk of the War Department, transmitting the military history of Thomas W. Segar and Thomas F. Alexander, Eightieth Illinois Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FUEL AND QUARTERS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the chief clerk of the War Department, transmitting report of the Quartermaster-General in relation to fuel and quarters; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

J. E. QUENTIN.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the chief clerk of the War Department, transmitting petition of J. E. Quentin for correction of his record in the volunteer service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NEWTOWN CREEK AND EAST RIVER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the chief clerk of the War Department, transmitting reports relative to deposit near the junction of Newtown Creek and the East River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REMOVAL OF ROCKS IN GEORGETOWN CHANNEL.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the chief clerk of the War Department, transmitting report of Engineer Abert on cost of removal of rocks in Georgetown channel; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BOONE, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of M. Cook & Co., of Paducah, Kentucky, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 333) for the relief of Thomas J. Choate, Erastus Foster, Milton Ladd, Clarence E. Haney, William A. Hill, Kneeland F. Huckaby, and William Blackburn, late privates in Company F, Third Regiment Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers;

An act (S. No. 378) for the relief of William L. Hickam, of Missouri, guardian of the minor children of Hillary J. Jenkins; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 22) providing for a place of deposit for the records and proceedings of the commission appointed under the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877, approved January 29, 1877."

JAMES A. GUTHRIE.

Mr. DEERING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4232) granting additional pension to James A. Guthrie; which was read a first and second time, with a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa relating to the same subject referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. HARTZELL. I ask leave to present and have printed in the RECORD the petition and memorial of 346 citizens of Union and Pulaski Counties, in the State of Illinois, asking Congress to pass the bill recently introduced in the Senate by Senator COCKRELL, providing for the appointment of a commission to devise plans for the survey and improvement of the Mississippi River and for the protection of such portions of the great Valley of the Mississippi as are now subject to inundation.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, your petitioners, citizens of the State of Illinois, and others, interested in the navigation of the Mississippi River, recognizing the improvement of said river as of great national importance, and believing that the bill introduced by Senator COCKRELL providing for the appointment of a commission, under whose supervision the survey of the river and construction of the works for said improvement shall be carried on, will effectually provide the means for said improvement, respectfully request that your honorable bodies will, without delay, enact said bill into a law with a view to a speedy removal of the grievous burdens now imposed by the uncertainties and dangers of the navigation of said river and to a speedy protection of such portions of the great valley of the Mississippi as are now subject to inundation.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE APALACHICOLA RIVER.

Mr. DAVIDSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4233) making an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Apalachicola River, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. CUMMINGS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4234) to provide that all pensions on account of death, or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, which have been granted or which shall hereafter be granted, shall commence from the date of death or discharge from the service of the United States, for the payment of arrears of pensions, and other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ISSUE OF ARMS TO TERRITORIES.

Mr. FENN, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 153) providing for issue of arms to Territories; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DENNIS LOONEY.

Mr. GUNTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4235) for the relief of Dennis Looney, of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF RESERVATION.

On motion of Mr. WREN, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 373) to amend an act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the Confederated Ojibwa and Missouria and the Sac and Fox of the Missouri tribes of Indians, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. CONGER. Are all these references subject to that order?

The SPEAKER. Yes, except those that come back under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which these various references have been made; and move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COOK. I now insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BLAIR: The petition of A. J. Shepard and 235 other citizens of Raymond, New Hampshire, for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of distilled liquors after the year 1900, and for a commission of inquiry—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUCKNER: The petition of R. H. Porter, for compensation for services rendered the United States—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. CASWELL: The petition of Mrs. George M. Harrington, for the removal of her political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHALMERS: The petition of Mrs. Nora Walsh, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHITTENDEN: The petition of 60 citizens of Brooklyn, New York, against reviving the income tax—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLAFLIN: Resolutions of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Marine Society, favoring the introduction of Courtenay's automatic signal buoy—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey: The petition of Robert Brown, for the extension of letters-patent numbered 32556—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CLARK, of Missouri: The petition of C. J. Walden, Thomas S. Carter, Kilby & Freeman, and H. E. Smith, against the adoption of the proposed tariff on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. DANFORD: The petition of William Armstrong and others, citizens of Belmont County, Ohio, against any change of the tariff on wool—to the same committee.

By Mr. FULLER: The petition of the Evansville, Cairo and Memphis Packet Company, to be reimbursed for money expended in lighting, buoying, and staking the Ohio River in the interests of commerce—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GARTH: The petition of William D. Parks, John K. Childress, and other citizens of Jackson County, Alabama, in regard to the additional bounty land granted by the act of 1855—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HATCHER: Memorial of citizens of the fourth congressional district of Missouri, for the distribution of the sales of the public lands among the several States in aid of popular education—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. HENDEE: The petition of James W. Ryan, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Mary L. Hubbard and Ellen Smith, of Guilford, Vermont, for the removal of their political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of Mrs. A. P. Walters, Mrs. E. B. Wilson, and other citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, for an amendment of the Constitution prohibiting the several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex—to the same committee.

By Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama: The petition of W. P. Webb and other citizens of Eutaw, Alabama, for Government aid to the Texas Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on the Pacific Railway.

Also, the petition of J. A. McLester, S. J. Gaines, and other citizens of Northport, Alabama, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of R. P. Hulbert, Horace A. N.

Todd, and 75 other citizens of Mackinac, Michigan, against the passage of the bill for the protection of fisheries—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JONES, of Alabama: The petition of Eliza W. Ogden, of Mobile, Alabama, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOYCE: The petition of citizens of Bennington, Vermont, for the amendment of the bounty laws—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of Washington County, Vermont, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. LANDERS: The petition of J. Francis Goodrich, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LIGON: The petition of citizens of Rockford, Coosa County, Alabama, to raise a fund for popular education from the sale of public lands—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. MCGOWAN: The petition of Mrs. F. L. Wright, Sarah E. Dart, and other citizens of Lansing, Michigan, for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, against the revival of the income tax in any form—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. PATTERSON, of New York: Resolutions of the Legislature of New York, opposing the sale of the arsenal at Watervliet, New York—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of 23 citizens of Deadwood and vicinity, Dakota Territory, for a charter for the Whitewood Flume Company—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. RIDDLE: Papers relating to the pension claim of David McComb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRAIT: The petition of Lizzie Bailey, Albert Allie, and other citizens of Reynolds, Minnesota, for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TUCKER: The petition of citizens of Richmond, Virginia, for the establishment of export tobacco warehouses—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of citizens of Richmond, Virginia, against the establishment of export tobacco warehouses—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of H. H. Sibley, for leave to prosecute his claim against the Government under contract, in respect to the Sibley tent—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of J. E. Merrill and others, postal clerks, route agents, and other postal officials, for an increase of their salaries—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WALSH: The petition of Levi Price, for relief from payment of liquor tax, charged in excess of production—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WIGGINTON: The petition of L. Snodgrass and 42 other citizens of Ventura County, California, against the passage of a bill authorizing a resurvey of the Rancho El Rio de Santa Clara ó La Calonia, of that State—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon: The petition of Mrs. Lydia A. Carter, Angela Brown, and others, of New Era, Oregon, for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIS, of Kentucky: Papers relating to the claim of Calhoun Benham—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILSON: The petition of L. Caywood and others, against any reduction of the duty on wool—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 3, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of the Board of Trade of Boston, praying that a law may be enacted for an equitable rule to authorize the correction of errors in the assessment of duties. I wish to say in regard to this petition that it not only comes from a very highly respectable body of men, but men of great experience in the matter to which it alludes, and who have as ardent a desire as anybody can for not only the honest collection of the revenues, but also for simplicity and the removal of all difficulties in adjusting questions which may arise between the Government and the importer. The need of such an act as they suggest here has long been felt by the merchants of Boston and of New York and all engaged in the import trade. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance, whose attention to it I invoke.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS presented the memorial of George B. Chandler and others, citizens of Manchester, New Hampshire, remonstrating against the passage of any act imposing a tax on incomes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of Buffalo, New York, and a resolution of the Board of Trade of Oswego, New York, against the proposed transfer of the life-saving service from the Treasury to the Navy Department; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of J. H. Wolcott, executor of the last will and testament of Abbott Lawrence, deceased, praying the passage of an act authorizing the Secretary of State to pay to him interest on a certain sum of money exacted from Mr. Lawrence in violation of the treaty of 1815, as is alleged, by Great Britain between the years 1815 and 1822; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERNAN presented the memorial of Peter Cooper, W. H. Webb, A. A. Low & Co., and 70 others, of New York, merchants, ship-owners, and members of the New York Maritime Exchange and Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the proposed transfer of the life-saving service from the Treasury to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa, in favor of the passage of an act granting a pension to James A. Guthrie on account of services rendered the United States during the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON presented a resolution of the board of aldermen of Jersey City, New Jersey, in favor of the passage of an act making that city a port of entry; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of the Seneca Nation of Indians, praying for the passage of an act providing for the appointment of a commission to ascertain the value and divide the lands in the Cattaraugus, Allegany, and Oil Spring reservations, in the State of New York, between the individual Indians belonging to the Seneca Nation as their rights may appear; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of the Lowery Industrial Academy for the instruction of colored youths, of Huntsville, Alabama, praying for an appropriation for endowing that institution to aid in the growth and culture of silk; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of December 11, 1877, copy of correspondence and reports on the subject of the construction of a dry-dock on a portion of the United States property at Fort McHenry, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 14th ultimo, a copy of the report of Special Agent J. F. Evans in relation to the claims of laborers and material-men arising out of the construction of the revenue-cutter Corwin, recently built at Albina, Oregon; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 834) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret A. Spencer, have considered the same and instructed me to report it back asking that the bill be indefinitely postponed and this report agreed to. I hope the Clerk will make the proper entry, so that it will be a bar to the subsequent presentation of the same thing.

The report was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely. Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1031) for the relief of the estate of E. Rouff, deceased.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 951) relating to the Pagossa Hot Springs, in the State of Colorado, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 907) granting a pension to Louis Koerth, to report adversely thereon and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, the application not having been made to the Bureau of Pensions.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Anthony Schworer, late private of Company G, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, praying for an adjustment of their claim for a pension, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, as the Pension Bureau have since the pending of the petition here allowed the pension.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 889) granting a pension to John Etzell, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 43) providing for taking testimony and collecting information to be used by Congress, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 487) for the relief of Mrs. Maria B. Wolfe, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 337) for the relief of Thomas H. Halsey, paymaster United States Army, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 622) for the relief of workmen employed in the construction of Poverty Island light-house, Lake Michigan, have instructed me to report it with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. I am authorized by the committee to ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 690) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases," approved February 19, 1875, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 288) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James C. McBurney, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Georgia, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1033) for the relief of J. C. McBurney.

This bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 319) for the relief of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 178) to remove all restrictions now existing in regard to enlistments of the colored citizen in any arm of the United States Army, to report it with amendments. After the conclusion of the morning business I shall ask for the immediate consideration of this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the report is just made and the bill as amended has not been printed, and as the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] and another Senator interested in the bill are not here, I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that the bill be printed as reported and that it be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Very well.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3822) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHAFFEE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1032) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KIRKWOOD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1034) granting additional pension to James A. Guthrie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1035) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SPENCER (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1036) to incorporate the United States Commercial Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1037) for the relief of John B. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF MISSOURI.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 596) to amend section 540, chapter 1, title 13, Revised Statutes of the United States. The bill is reported from the Committee on the Judiciary favorably. It merely changes one county in Missouri from the eastern to the western district.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to amend section 540 of chapter 1 and title 13 of the Revised Statutes, so as to read:

SEC. 540. The State of Missouri is divided into two districts, which shall be called the eastern and the western district of Missouri. The eastern district includes the counties of Schuyler, Adair, Knox, Shelby, Monroe, Pike, Montgomery, Gasconade, Franklin, Washington, Reynolds, Shannon, and Oregon as they existed January 1, 1857, with all the counties east of them. The western district includes the residue of said State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORRECTION OF ERRONEOUS ASSESSMENT.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1012) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to abate a certain tax erroneously assessed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the commissioners of the District of Columbia to cause to be made, by the proper officers, a readjustment of the assessment of taxes upon property situated about two and one-half miles north of the Capitol, being the property of the estate of the late Chief-Justice of the United States, Salmon P. Chase, known as Edgewood, upon a valuation not to exceed $18,000, including the property and improvements; which readjustment, when so made, shall be, to all intents and purposes, as effectual as if made at the date of the original assessment; and the commissioners are to abate so much of the taxes now due and unpaid upon the property as are in excess of such valuation, together with the interest and penalties for the four years prior to the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM L. ADAMS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 997) for the relief of William L. Adams.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the proper accounting officer in the settlement of the accounts of William L. Adams, formerly collector of customs for the district of Oregon, to credit him with the sum of $13,257.30.

Mr. McDONALD. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. There is. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] made the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana desire the reading of the report?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, or a statement of the grounds on which this relief is proposed.

Mr. MITCHELL. The report is rather lengthy.

Mr. McDONALD. For my part I should like to have a statement of the grounds on which the bill rests. It directs the credit of a pretty large sum of money.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from West Virginia understands the case thoroughly, and can make a statement perhaps briefer than the report.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will state briefly the facts in the case. This claim has been before Congress since 1866. Three reports have been made upon it, two by the committee of the Senate and one by the committee of the House of Representatives. A report was made from the Committee on Claims by Mr. Pratt, of Indiana, May 25, 1874, which report in its main statement of facts has been adopted by the committee in this case. The facts are briefly these: In 1866, Mr. Adams was instructed to carry from Astoria, in Oregon, to San Francisco, in California, for the purpose of depositing there with the United States assistant treasurer, the money belonging to the United States then in his hands as collector. The Senate will bear in mind that he was instructed to carry these funds from Portland to San Francisco in person. The amount that was in his possession then was $46,500 in gold coin and a thousand dollars in currency. He obeyed those instructions and went on board of the steamer Oregon at Astoria on the 3d of February, 1866, and made the voyage to San Francisco. He placed the money in a trunk securely fastened and engaged a stateroom by himself, so that no other person could have access to it but himself. He was cautious in taking care of the money thus intrusted to him and which he had been ordered to carry in person to San Francisco. There is no allegation and no proof that there was any negligence or any default of any nature or kind whatever on his part. The trunk was taken from the steamer and carried to his hotel in San Francisco. When he went to take the money to the proper officer in San Francisco he found that there had been abstracted $20,500. The detectives were informed of the fact and search was immediately made.

Without occupying the time of the Senate to go through all the details, I will state that it was ascertained beyond any doubt that this $20,500 was taken from his trunk while he went to one of his meals a few hours before his arrival in San Francisco. A part of this money was recovered, some of it from one of the parties while in San Francisco and a part of it in New York. Mr. Adams now asks that the proper accounting officer be instructed to credit him with the balance. There is no pretense whatever that he had any complicity in the robbery or that he did not use due diligence in carrying the money from one place to the other. He was instructed, as I said, by the Department at Washington City to carry the money in person, not being allowed to send it by express. It is true that under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States he is not in law entitled to relief, and he and his sureties would be responsible upon their bond for the amount. Neither I nor the committee have any fault to find with the law or any fault to find with the construction of the law as placed upon it by the various decisions of the Supreme Court. We think the law is wise and that the construction placed upon it is the true construction; but, on the other hand, the committee think that in a case of this kind, where the money was taken from him without any negligence on his part whatever, the officer of the Government should be relieved.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to ask the Senator from West Virginia if the bill credits him with just the amount of the actual loss and covers nothing for his expenses.

Mr. HEREFORD. It is exactly the loss that he incurred.

Mr. McDONALD. I understood that the bill provided a credit of a larger amount than the sum stolen. There was a certain part of the stolen funds recovered.

Mr. HEREFORD. A certain part of the stolen funds was recovered, and the bill is to instruct the proper accounting officers to allow him credit for the balance that was not recovered. The amount recovered was passed to his credit and the bill is to allow for the difference; in other words, for the amount of money that was never recovered.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that if he will look at the facts I am inclined to think he will find that $1,000, or some such amount, expended in San Francisco at the time the loss was first discovered, is allowed in this credit, and that therefore to that extent his expenses are included.

Mr. HEREFORD. About $1,000 was paid out to employ detectives.

Mr. MITCHELL. But no part of his expenses in going to New York and in arresting the robbers is included.

Mr. HEREFORD. No part of his own expenses is included in the bill whatever; simply the money paid out to detectives in San Francisco and the money paid out to certain detectives in the city of New York. Part of the money was taken by the thieves to New York. They made their escape and went to New York, and part of it was recovered there, while part of it was recovered in San Francisco. Detectives had to be employed and were employed to hunt up this case, and he is allowed by the bill the money that was thus paid to them in detecting the thieves and in recovering this amount. In round numbers, about $6,000 was thus recovered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest to the Senate and to the Senator from Indiana that this bill has passed the Senate twice heretofore, and in precisely the shape it is in now.

Mr. HEREFORD. If the officers of the Government in a case of this kind are not to be relieved, I do not see how the Government is to get along at all, because, under the law and under the decisions of the Supreme Court, if Mr. Gillfillan, the Treasurer of the United States, and every officer in the Treasury were gagged to-night and confined, and every dollar in the Treasury taken from it without any fault whatever on his part or that of any of his subordinates, the Treasurer would be responsible in law for the untold millions that are in his charge. The committee think that in a case of that kind the officers of the Government should be relieved, and that is just this case. As all the testimony shows, Mr. Adams is in no way culpable. If anybody is to blame, certainly it seems to the committee—at least it did to me, who had the examination of the case and reported it—that the Government is more to blame than this officer for instructing him to carry that amount of money in person from Portland to San Francisco. A few days afterward they issued an order to him that he might send the money by express. If they had allowed him to do that, it would have been safe. There was an express company carrying money from Portland, Oregon, to San Francisco. But they would not allow him to do that. They directed him to carry it in person. If he had been left to exercise his discretion either to carry it in person or to send it by express, that would have made a different case; but that was not this case. In this case there is the order of the Department at Washington to carry this money in person from one of these places to the other, and also without delay. We say then, in a case of this kind, that the officer certainly should be relieved. As I said a moment ago, as the statutes of the United States now provide and under the decisions of the Supreme Court which I have examined in this connection, if the Treasury of the United States were robbed to-night of every dollar in it, the Treasurer of the United States would be responsible for it. I do not believe there is a Senator on this floor who would not say that a bill should be passed for the relief of the Treasurer in such a case as that.

These, Mr. President, are the salient points in the case. There is a report here which if Senators desire can be read. In making my report I adopted the report of Mr. Senator Pratt, made on a former occasion while a member of the Committee on Claims. I have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by him, although we do not disagree about the facts.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, it is perhaps due to myself that I should say that while there is no minority report in this case, as I did not think the facts called for that, I did not concur in the report as made.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say in reference to this claim simply that I could not concur in the opinions of the majority. While the facts as stated by the Senator from West Virginia are accurately and well stated, I was of opinion that this collector had not used that degree of care and diligence in the matter of putting twenty-odd thousand dollars in a trunk and depositing that in a state-room on a steamer that custodians of the public money should be held to by this Government, and as a general policy I am opposed to relieving custodians of public moneys unless it is shown that they have not only been diligent, but have used the highest degree of diligence and care to take care of the funds intrusted to their hands. For that reason I did not concur with the majority of the committee, and I cannot vote with the majority of the committee upon the proposition to pass the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong this discussion, but in view of what has been said I feel it my duty to say a word at least in response to what the Senator from Tennessee has just said.

The facts in reference to this matter of the robbery are simply as they have been very fully stated by the Senator from West Virginia. The collector of the port at Astoria, Oregon, Mr. Adams, the claimant here, was ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury to take a large amount of money—some $50,000 or about that—in person and carry it from Astoria to San Francisco to the subtreasury there. In pursuance of that instruction he took the money in gold coin, placed it in large bags, put it in a trunk, a good solid trunk securely fastened, took it to his state-room and staid with it all the while, according to the testimony, with the exception of the time when it was absolutely necessary for him to leave his room in making the trip on the steamer from Astoria to San Francisco. On his arrival at San Francisco it was discovered, after the trunk had been carried to his hotel, that the parties who had charge of his room, as it was learned afterward, the boys who cleaned up the room, had taken out from the bottom of the trunk a section and extracted two of the gold bags, taking considerably less than one-half of the whole amount he had in his trunk. Detectives were set to work, and after a long hunt these men were arrested in the city of New York, brought back to San Francisco, confessed the crime, part of the money was found buried in the city of San Francisco, and Mr. Adams, after a very lengthy and expensive hunt, succeeded in getting this much of the money.

It was said by my honorable friend from Tennessee that he was not careful, that he had not acted as a prudent man. What more could he have done?

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon if the loss of this money was not discovered until the trunk was carried up to the hotel?

Mr. MITCHELL. It was not.

Mr. McDONALD. How did it happen that one-half or more of this large amount in specie could have been taken from the trunk without the fact being discovered before he left the boat?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a very pertinent question and I will tell the Senator why. The question occurred to me at the time the case was before the committee and I looked into it. The answer is this: the trunk with the whole amount in it was so heavy that it had to be handled by two men; two men put it on board and two men employed by Mr. Adams carried it off, different men; of course Mr. Adams could not carry the trunk himself. If he had been able to carry it either on board or from the steamship, he in all probability would have discovered the difference in weight, but he did not. He had two men to carry it up, and still it was a very heavy trunk. Mr. Adams did not discover any difference in the weight; but when he came to his hotel and opened the trunk, he then discovered that a part of the money was gone, and it was a mystery to him. He examined the lock, and the lock was all right.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to read from the report right on that point?

Mr. MITCHELL. When I finish the sentence. It was with some difficulty that he satisfied himself as to how this money had been extracted.

Mr. HEREFORD. I wish to read from the report the testimony of Mr. Adams in that connection:

The trunk was heavy, weighing, probably, over two hundred pounds, and I could not, in my poor state of health, lift it. The men who carried the trunk from my room on the steamer to the Russ House coach acted as though it was still heavy enough to weigh over two hundred pounds. During the entire voyage I was seldom absent from my room, never leaving it except for my meals, walking on deck for exercise, &c., when I was careful to pass near or in sight of my room-door very frequently.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not wish to add anything further than to state that Mr. Adams is one of our most respected citizens in Oregon.

Mr. GROVER. I wish to speak of the character of Mr. Adams. I have been acquainted with him more than twenty-five years, and I can state to the Senate that a man of higher character for honesty does not live in the State of Oregon or in any State, in my judgment. If he has been in fault in any respect, I am satisfied it was not an intentional fault, and I hope there will be favorable action on this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS A. WALKER.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move to take up Senate bill No. 954.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 954) for the relief of Thomas A. Walker. It provides for the allowance to Thomas A. Walker, late register of the United States land office at Des Moines, Iowa, of $5,117.75 on account of money paid out and expended by him as register for hire of clerks and office rent in his office during his incumbency.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the report of the committee be read. It states the facts very fully.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS on the 20th of March:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the two petitions and accompanying papers of T. A. Walker, late register of the United States land office, at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, have carefully considered the same, and submit the following report:

In the petition No. 1, petitioner asks to be reimbursed moneys expended by him for clerk hire and office rent, rendered necessary by the unusually large quantity of land entered at his said office for the first two years of his official term.

And petition No. 2 asks to be reimbursed money expended by the petitioner for the hire of one additional clerk and the rent of a larger office, rendered absolutely necessary by the consolidation of the Iowa City land office with the Fort Des Moines office during the third and last year of his official incumbency.

Petition No. 1 was referred to the Senate Committee on Claims, second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, when the following report was made by said committee, which report your committee find, upon examination, well sustained by the evidence, and adopt the same, as follows:

Your committee wrote a letter of inquiry to the Secretary of the Interior, and received through him the following report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to wit:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1877.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Department, of a letter from Hon. F. M. COCKRELL, for Committee on Claims of the United States Senate, dated the 8th instant, and in reply to the inquiries therein contained, respectfully state that Thomas A. Walker, late register of the United States land office at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, (bond dated June 1, 1854,) entered upon the duties of his office, June 15, 1854, and turned over to his successor the books, papers, &c., of the office September 15, 1857.

The public lands disposed of during his official incumbency, the amount of military bounty-land warrant fees collected, and the amount paid him, pursuant to a decision of the United States Supreme Court, January term, 1841, in the case of the United States vs. Dixon, receiver of Choctaw district, Mississippi, (15 Peters, 141,) for salary, commissions, and fees, were as follows:

Years.	Area sold for cash.	Area located with military bounty-land warrants.	Amount of military bounty-land warrant fees received.	Amount paid register as salary, commissions, &c.
1854, June 15 to December 31..	769,444.22	60,680.00	$2,017.00	$2,771.98
1855, January 1 to December 31.	908,794.09	732,740.35	18,818.87	3,000.00
1856, June 1 to December 31....	63,388.41	353,996.00	8,849.94	1,756.11
1857, January 1 to September 15.	400.00	2,815.85	365.66
	1,682,026.72	1,190,232.20	29,685.81	7,892.75

It has been held that the entire amount of register's and receiver's fees collected for locating military bounty-land warrants is to be accounted for by the receiver, to be by him deposited in the United States Treasury, as other proceeds from the disposal of public lands; the said fees to be again paid out by warrant, with limitation as regards the legal maximum of compensation to the respective officers alluded to.

The fees received, amounting to $29,685.81, referred to in the foregoing table to have been accounted for by the former receiver, and is presumed to have been paid into the Treasury, inasmuch as but a small balance appears against him upon the books of this office.

The following United States land offices were allowed for payment to clerks, rendered necessary in consequence of the magnitude of the sales of Osage and other Indian lands, the sums paid to them having been charged against the proceeds as expenses incident to the sale of such lands, namely:

David B. Emmert, receiver at Humboldt, Kansas.....	$3,145.00
William Q. Jenkins, register at Wichita, Kansas.....	3,207.50
M. W. Reynolds, receiver at Independence, Kansas.....	2,041.66

The act of Congress of 7th July, 1876, allowed Ariel K. Eaton, late receiver, and James D. Jenkins, former register, at Decorah and Osage, Iowa, $3,600 each on account of payments for the services of clerks, upon the ground that such employment was necessary, owing to the large number of entries of land at that office.

By act of 18th February, 1861, section 2255, Revised Statutes of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to approve the employment for a limited period, and at a reasonable per diem compensation, of one or more clerks in the office of a register of a consolidated land office, &c.; but with this exception there is no direct authority of law for the employment of clerks at the expense of the United States in the offices of the registers and receivers of the United States district land offices.

I have not the data which enable me to state precisely what additional force was necessary or was employed at the Des Moines office during the period referred to, but know that the requirements were far greater than those of most other offices, on account of the large excess in sales of land over other offices, and it was during this period that it became a consolidated land office; and I know that clerks were employed, and the merits of a claim for reimbursement, therefore, are to my knowledge far superior to those of the Decorah and Osage offices, in regard to which the evidence was ample beyond all doubt.

The letter of Senator COCKRELL is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

Hon. Z. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

"The following certificate accompanied the petition, to wit:

DES MOINES, IOWA, November 22, 1876.

I, F. G. Clarke, register of the United States land office at Des Moines, Iowa, do hereby certify that the records of this office show that while Colonel T. A. Walker was register of said office there was entered from the 15th day of June, 1854, to the 15th day of June, 1856, at said office, the following amount of public lands, to wit:

	Acres.
By military land warrants, various acts.....	1, 169, 831. 00
By cash entries.....	1, 558, 196. 75
Making a total entered, during said time, of.....	2, 728, 027. 75

I also certify that quite a proportion of said lands entered by warrants were small warrants, calling for forty and eighty acres each.

F. G. CLARKE,
Register.

"The claimant, in his petition, verified by affidavit, states that during his first two years he was obliged to employ a large clerical force to discharge the duties of his office and to accommodate the public, and that he did so believing that he and the receiver were entitled to the land-warrant fees received, and that during these two years he paid out $5,340 for clerk hire and never received any allowance or compensation therefor, and only received his salary, $3,000 per annum, and that the force of clerks hired by him was absolutely necessary to subserve the public.

"The facts stated are substantiated by the sworn evidence of many witnesses, who were present and had personal knowledge of what they say.

"The necessity for this course is so forcibly stated by Judge Love, of the United States circuit court, in his opinion in Babbitt's case, that your committee introduce the following extract from his opinion:

"The history of the land sales of 1855 will place the object of Congress, in passing the sixth section, (act of 1855,) in a clear and definite light. The rage of speculation had, during that year, nearly reached its height. Multitudes of people besieged the land offices, clamorously demanding the location of their warrants. Many millions of acres of land were disposed of in Iowa in an incredibly short space of time. Under these circumstances, it was manifest that no ordinary force of clerks and no ordinary means and appliances were sufficient to meet the exigencies of the service. The salaries of the officers were wholly inadequate to meet these expenses. Hence, Congress had either to provide the means of paying such expenditures out of the public Treasury, or of enabling the land officers to do it by authorizing them to receive fees adequate to that purpose from those for whose benefit the services were performed and the expenses incurred. Congress chose the alternative least burdensome to the public Treasury."

"Under the belief, which prevailed generally at that time, that the fees received for locating warrants belonged to him, the receiver, and were intended to compensate him for his services and expenses in locating warrants, Mr. Walker employed the necessary clerks, and incurred the other necessary expenses to enable him to transact the immense business crowding upon him promptly, correctly, and to the entire satisfaction of his customers and the Government.

"In the opinion above referred to Judge Love points out the greatly increased labor and responsibility of land officers under the land-warrant system. He says: "In cash sales the officer had but to count the gold and issue the certificate. In cash sales, one written application and one certificate were sufficient for a whole section. How different is it under the land-warrant system. In the location of warrants, the officers have to examine the assignments, oftentimes numerous, and sometimes by guardians, &c., and pass upon their validity. This is often a delicate and responsible duty. A separate application and separate certificate have to be written for every warrant. With one hundred-and-sixty-acre warrants, four applications and four certificates were required for a section of land, and with forty-acre warrants sixteen applications and sixteen certificates were required for the same quantity of land."

"No allowance whatever has ever been made him for any clerical or other expenses. Hence the officer has paid out of his own pocket all the expenses for running the office and transacting this large amount of business in so short a time.

"Under these circumstances, your committee are of the opinion that the Government ought to reimburse this officer for the money he thus necessarily paid out and expended for clerical assistance for the benefit of the Government and the public.

"In the case of Ariel K. Eaton and James D. Jenkins, receiver and register at Decorah and Osage, Iowa, referred to in letter of Commissioner of General Land Office, this Congress, at its first session, allowed each of them $3,600. The claim of Mr. Walker is equally if not more meritorious."

Your committee therefore recommend that the petitioner be paid the sum of $3,600, to reimburse him for money paid by him for clerk hire and office rent for and during the two years beginning June 15, 1854, and ending June 15, 1856.

In petition No. 2 petitioner asks to be reimbursed the sum of $1,517.75, paid by him for the hire of an extra clerk and the rent of an additional room from April 15, 1856, at which time the Iowa City land office was consolidated with the Fort Des Moines office, to September 27, 1857, at which time petitioner retired from the office.

The petition, which is sworn to, recites—

"The undersigned, being register of the land office at Fort Des Moines, was compelled, in consequence of the increase of business, to remove his office into larger rooms and to employ an additional clerk, the vouchers for which are herewith transmitted. The additional business devolved upon the office by the consolidation rendered the employment of one additional clerk indispensable, as well as added to the labors and duties of the undersigned."

"The clerk employed, James A. Moore, (see voucher No. 1) was engaged upon business thrown into the office after its consolidation, and the room rent paid (see voucher No. 2) was paid for rooms occupied and rendered necessary by the consolidation, and at no time during the period charged for could the services of the additional clerk have been dispensed with or would suitable rooms have been obtained for less price."

This statement is corroborated by the vouchers referred to and various affidavits. The act of February 18, 1861, 12 Statutes at Large, 131, being section 2255 of the Revised Statutes, authorizes reasonable allowance for the hire of clerks, &c., on application to and approval by the Secretary of the Interior.

But the petitioner, being at the time ignorant of this statute and believing himself entitled to the fees collected, expected to and would have been abundantly able to pay all these expenses out of said fees, and reserved to himself after paying them a much larger compensation than the $3,000 per annum allowed by law.

Hence, without consulting the Department, he incurred and paid these expenses out of his own funds, and subsequently paid into the Treasury, as he was required to do by law, the fees collected by him, amounting to over $29,000, and received his salary of $3,000 per annum.

Clear as the sworn petition and accompanying vouchers and affidavits seem to make this case, your committee addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, asking such information as the records of that Department contained touching this claim, and received the following answer:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1878.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant, calling for information concerning the claim of T. A. Walker, formerly register of the land office at Des Moines, Iowa, for allowance for office rent and clerk hire, was received and referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of his report on the subject, received to-day.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

HON. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference of the 24th instant, of a letter from Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS, dated the 23d instant, requesting, on behalf of the Senate Committee on Claims, such information as the records of this Department afford touching the claim of T. A. Walker, esq., some time register of the Fort Des Moines (Iowa) land office, for an allowance of $1,517.75 as reasonable compensation for expenses incident to the consolidation of the Iowa City office with his, in 1856, said claim being presented under act of February 18, 1861, 12 Statutes, 131, now embraced in section 2255 of the Revised Statutes.

Respecting this claim, I find from the records that it was duly filed for settlement in January, 1862, but for some unexplained reason was not acted upon at that time.

On February 2, 1877, J. M. Walker, esq., filed in this office a sworn statement, requesting that the matter be taken up for action; and on the 8th of the same month I addressed your predecessor as follows:

SIR: Herewith I have the honor to transmit an account of T. A. Walker, late register of the land office at Des Moines, Iowa, for clerk hire and rent paid by him under the terms of the act of Congress February 18, 1861, in relation to consolidated land offices.

This account was filed in this office on January 25, 1862, but has never been acted upon. It appears to be just and regular and is sustained by the affidavits of the register. Although held in abeyance for a long period, there seems to have been no sufficient reason why it should not have been allowed at the time, and if so, it is now doubly important that it be settled without further delay.

The third section of the act referred to indicates cases of this character, and in my opinion the account may be defrayed out of the appropriation for contingent expenses of local land offices for the current year.

I therefore submit the matter for your consideration, with the recommendation that this office be authorized to state the account and submit it to the Treasury Department for payment.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

To this communication the following reply was received:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1877.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 8th instant, inclosing a claim of T. A. Walker, former register of the land office at Des Moines, Iowa, for office rent and clerk hire, amounting to $1,517.75.

The account appears to have been filed in the Department and referred to your office in January, 1862. Why it has been permitted to sleep these fifteen years is not apparent from the papers; but I cannot reconcile it with my sense of official duty to approve it at this late day. The papers are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. T. GORHAM,
Acting Secretary.

HON. J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner General Land Office.

These communications seem to cover the matter now before me, and I have only to repeat what I at the first reported, that in my judgment Mr. Walker was justly entitled to the compensation which was especially provided by the act of 1861 for precisely such cases; and if by reason of long and obviously improper delay the claim has passed beyond the power of the Department to satisfy, it should be placed by Congress on its proper footing, and rendered capable of speedy adjustment.

Very respectfully,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

HON. C. SCHURZ,
Secretary of the Interior.

Being satisfied that the petitioner is entitled and should be reimbursed the sum of $3,600 for clerk hire and office rent paid by him during the first two years of his official term and the sum of $1,517.75 for clerk hire and office rent rendered necessary by the consolidation of the two offices during the third and last year of his term, and paid by him, the committee report the accompanying bill and recommend that it pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator who made this report would explain this long delay of twenty years, why this claim was not presented in the time of it and settled either by Congress or by the Department?

Mr. HARRIS. The application was made to the Department soon after, but, for some unexplained reason, it has been pigeon-holed and allowed to lie there. Some two or three years ago, as the report shows—I do not remember exactly the date—the application was made to Congress, but the claimant has been appealing to the Department to make the allowance. The facts of the case show that the claimant regarded himself as entitled to the fees on the various entries in his office. They aggregated over $29,000. But on ascertaining the fact that the fees had to be paid into the Treasury, he was left on a salary of $3,000 to pay all his clerk hire and all his office rent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When was it ascertained that these fees must be paid into the Treasury? What I want to get at is how it happens that it is twenty years since these events occurred till Congress for the first time is called upon to go over these accounts of twenty years ago.

Mr. HARRIS. It was ascertained within a year or two of the period when the expenses were incurred, and then application was made to the Department, and it has been diligently pressed to give a decision. If the Senator will look to the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office he will find that the application has been pending and has been twice or thrice recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but for some reason or other unexplained the Secretary failed to approve the recommendation of the Commissioner. The Commissioner's recent letter reviewing the whole matter is filed with the papers showing these facts: that he has been insisting upon the adjustment of his accounts by the Department, and some three or four years ago made his application to Congress for the relief that the Department had failed to grant him.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF PATENT LAWS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print extra copies of the arguments before the Committees on Patents of the Senate and House of Representatives to amend the statutes in relation to patents, have instructed me to report it back and recommend its passage, and also to offer the following resolution preliminary to it:

Resolved, That the arguments on the bill to amend the statutes in relation to patents before the Senate and House Committees on Patents be printed and bound.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to. The following resolution was also considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 1,000 extra copies of the arguments on the bill to amend the statutes in relation to patents, before the Senate and House Committees on Patents, be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Patents.

REPORT OF ENTOMOLOGICAL COMMISSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives to print 5,000 copies of the report of the United States entomological commission, have instructed me to report back the same without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of the report of the United States entomological commission, 5,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,500 for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for the use of the commission.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print 10,000 copies of the same report, have instructed me to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

The report was agreed to.

JOHN A. DARLING.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1254.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1254) for the relief of John A. Darling was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint John A. Darling, late captain Second Artillery, a captain of artillery in the Army of the United States, with his former rank and date of commission; and said Darling is to be assigned to the first vacancy of his grade occurring in the artillery arm of the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. No. 1271) establishing the salaries to be paid the collectors of customs of Plymouth and Nantucket, Massachusetts; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3123) extending the privilege of sections 2290 to 2297 of the Revised Statutes, inclusive, to the port of Bath, in the State of Maine.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DETECTING TRESPASS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3102) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriations for detecting trespass on public lands, and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. BECK.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 802) establishing post-roads in the several States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 15) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. MATTHEWS.

Mr. THURMAN. Before the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] proceeds, I wish to submit an amendment which I shall offer. I ask to have it laid on the table and printed. I do not offer it now but only give notice of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table subject to the order of the Senator.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I should like to hear the amendment reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is at the end of section 3, to insert:

All the bonds belonging to said fund shall, as fast as they shall be obtained, be so stamped as to show that they belong to the said fund, and that they are not good in the hands of other holders than the Secretary of the Treasury, until they shall have been indorsed by him and publicly disposed of, pursuant to this act.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, this subject has been so long discussed that I can scarcely hope to say anything new; it has been so ably discussed that I can scarcely aspire to say any old thing better than it has already been said; but feeling impelled to say something, I shall at least study to be brief.

The immediate question before the Senate is the motion to substitute the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads for that reported by the Committee on the Judiciary for the creation of a sinking fund for the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads; and the discussion involves necessarily a comparison of the merits or defects of both. The history of this whole subject is too familiar to require more than that passing reference which is necessary to continuity of speech.

By the acts of 1862 and 1864 grants of land and loans of the credit of the United States were made to the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies for the purpose of building a railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and the right to alter, amend, or repeal was made as absolute as it could be in express words.

These loans were to be repaid as follows: Five per cent. of the net earnings of the road and one-half their accounts against the Government for transportation were to be applied from year to year and the residue was to be paid at the maturity of the bonds. Estimating this yearly payment by the average business of the roads since their completion, their indebtedness to the Government as shown by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] will amount in the year 1900 to $122,305,000. Add to that the principal of the first-mortgage bonds, $55,000,000, and we have the sum of $177,000,000, for which the security is two thousand miles of railroad, or at the rate of $88,500 per mile.

No one who has investigated this question will claim for a moment that this property is adequate or reasonable security for that amount of debt. The officers of the road themselves admit that it is not, and make that admission a claim for a settlement in the nature of a compromise. This admission, and the facts on which it is based, are utterly at variance with the representations of the companies as to the cost of this line of road. Their reports claim that there are $90,000,000 of paid-up stock; that is that $90,000,000 of actual capital has been paid into the treasuries of these companies and paid out in the construction of their roads. If that statement be true, the cost of construction would be about as follows:

Amount of the first mortgage	$55,000,000
Amount of Government bonds	55,000,000
Amount of land mortgage	20,000,000
Capital stock paid up	90,000,000

Making in all 220,000,000 for the construction of these two thousand miles of road, four-fifths of the distance being over a country as favorable to the construction of a railroad as any on this continent; and then this line of road, which they allege has cost $220,000,000, with a constantly growing business, with a constantly increasing value, in twenty-two years is not an adequate security for $177,000,000! There must be some huge mistake upon one side of this question, and it is not difficult to see upon which side the mistake is made.

The bonds of the Government were the basis of the credit upon which the companies were enabled to place their first-mortgage bonds. These two classes of bonds, omitting all mention of the land bonds, amount to $52,000 per mile to the Union Pacific and $64,000 per mile to the Central Pacific, and they not only built the road, but left a large margin of profit aggregating millions of dollars. The $36,000,000 of stock in the Union Pacific and the $54,000,000 of stock in the Central Pacific do not represent money paid in. If it had been paid in, that with the land bonds alone would have built the road. This $90,000,000 of stock claiming dividends, standing between the companies and their obligations to the Government, does not represent one dollar nor the phantom of a dollar nor the semblance of a phantom. If it represents anything, it is simply an arbitrary profit upon fraudulent contracts. The assumption that it is actual capital is a bare, naked assumption, without a fig-leaf covering of fact.

This is the character of the investment which the Senator from Ohio on my right [Mr. MATTHEWS] says would not have been made except upon the faith that Congress would not alter in any particular an act which it reserved to alter in every particular! Over this, with the glamor of his genius, he attempts to throw the sanctity of vested rights! That bad system of building railroads for the sake of the profits to be made out of their construction by swelling the cost of construction to the largest possible amount, leaving the roads themselves burdened with debt for the benefit of an interior ring, found its culmination in the construction of these railroads.

On this condition of facts as to these two roads, so munificently endowed, earning now annually more than $16,000,000 of net profits, with $90,000,000 of stock which does not represent one dollar of actual capital while this Government is annually paying $3,200,000 for the benefit of these roads and of that fictitious capital, that $90,000,000 of stock claiming the right to absorb the whole of the enormous profits of the roads, leaving the Government without adequate security for the $122,000,000 which is due and to become due, these two bills are reported for our consideration covering the same ground but differing widely in details and fundamentally in principle.

One notable difference in detail is that the bill of the Railroad Committee proposes to take the 5 per cent. of net earnings and the half-transportation account, which should be paid annually to the Government, and place it in a sinking fund for the benefit of the railroads upon which the compound interest is to be estimated annually at the rate of 6 per cent. It is not to be invested; a computation is simply to be made, and they are to receive credit for that. That is, we are to allow to these railroads 6 per cent. compound interest on our own money. I wonder if they could not be induced to allow us to keep our own money by paying them simple interest! Such a principle extended upon payments of this nature for one hundred years would bankrupt this Government; limited to twenty-two years it simply amounts to a gift to these companies of $25,000,000.

Mr. THURMAN. Thirty-five million dollars!

Mr. BOOTH. Thirty-fivemillions! Then my calculation was wrong. Macaulay, I believe, relates—I am sorry I cannot quote his language accurately—that when Lord Clive was accused of rapacity he answered that when he remembered the princes who had been at his feet, the treasures that were open to him, his boundless opportunities for plunder, he only stood astonished at his own moderation!

The fundamental difference between these bills, however, is that the bill of the Judiciary Committee asserts the power of Congress, and proposes to enact a law; the bill of the Railroad Committee denies the power of Congress, and proposes to negotiate. The bill of the Committee on the Judiciary, if enacted, will require the companies to pay a sum which together with the sums they are now required to pay shall not exceed one-quarter of their net profits into a sinking fund, the accumulations of which shall belong to the companies but held in trust for the payment of their debts. This is the main purpose of the bill, and the very height and front of its offending. If any legislative body in this country should enact by a general law that all corporations under its jurisdiction and over which it held and reserved control should set apart one-quarter of its profits to secure creditors and protect itself from bankruptcy, I can scarcely imagine the character of mind which would not recognize this as wise, proper, and constitutional legislation. This provision, so wise, so honest, so moderate, applied to these companies, confessedly under the jurisdiction of Congress, companies that have been so munificently endowed, is denounced with the very vehemence of invective. It is pronounced a violation not only of the Constitution, but of those moral instincts and principles of natural justice which underlie society and make civilization possible.

Mr. President, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could only find it out.

Sir, the fact that the Government is a creditor neither adds to nor takes from the power of Congress to legislate on this subject. We legislate as a sovereign, not as a creditor. If the rights of these companies are not safe here under the protection of the majesty of the law, where are they safe? Sir, we are here to legislate, not to negotiate. The Senator from Ohio on my right [Mr. MATTHEWS] says, "I deny utterly the power of Congress to declare that a debt not due is due, and to make the debtor pay it before it is payable." He might deny any other proposition which he could state for the purpose of demolishing it; he could fight any number of imaginary battles and gain imaginary victories, and wear imaginary laurels; but he is able to fight real giants, and gain real victories, and should not waste his strength upon wind-mills. I assert the right of Congress to compel any corporation under its jurisdiction to provide a sinking fund out of its profits to protect its creditors, to maintain its solvency, and I emphasize the assertion when it is a quasi-public corporation and sustains relations to the public and Government to which its solvency is an essential condition. And I reassert that the fact that the Government happens to be a creditor of the corporation impairs no right of Congress over it. We are not disqualified from interest, and have lost no power because its exercise is necessary to protect the whole public. I deny the right, and I resist the power of any corporation to borrow the money of this Government and destroy its ability to repay by dividing the whole of its profits upon stock, whether that stock be real or fictitious, genuine or spurious, and I resent the language that we must accept such compromise as the company may offer or do worse.

I repeat, Mr. President, that the bill of the Judiciary Committee proposes legislation, the enactment of law as a matter of sovereign right. The bill of the Railroad Committee proposes negotiation, a kind of treaty between high contracting powers, the sovereignty of the Government on the one side and the sovereignty of these two corporations on the other. Suppose the bill of the Railroad Committee should pass and the President should approve it; it has then become a law so far as compliance with the constitutional forms can make it, but it is by its terms a law to take effect upon an uncertain contingency, and as that contingency is under the control of these railroad companies, it is virtually a law which vests a power of defeasance in the companies. Would it not simplify this matter if upon the passage of such a bill we should send it simultaneously to the President of the United States and to the presidents of the railroad companies, with power to them also to return it in ten days with their joint approval or objection?

But these railroad companies have more power in the premises than the President of the United States, for they can at any time after it becomes a law defeat its operation by their action or non-action. Suppose the act should pass and the companies accept it under section 5 of the act, and thereafter make default, refuse to pay, there is no power in the bill to compel compliance. Then section 6 repeals all acts and parts of acts in conflict with that act. The United States has surrendered the 5 per cent. of net earnings, the half-transportation account; and what is there left but the right to alter, amend, or repeal reserved in this bill in the very same words that it was reserved in the act of 1864. Then the Senator from Ohio to my right [Mr. MATTHEWS] and the Senator from Georgia who has spoken upon this question [Mr. HILL] argued that the reservation was worthless to provide a new remedy in the act of 1864, and if their reasoning is correct it is equally worthless in this.

Much stress is laid on the condition of default introduced in this bill; but a default does not enlarge the rights of the creditor so as to give him power to change the contract. It only entitles him to a remedy to enforce it.

If Congress has the right to reserve a power to change a contract after default, it has equally a right to reserve it to change it without default. It is a distinction without a difference, for Congress is made the judge of the default. It becomes simply a question, not of power, but of discretion, the proper exercise of power. The right is reserved, I repeat, to the sovereign, not to the creditor; and if these words "alter, amend, or repeal" are to have any value in the bill of the Railroad Committee, they must have just the significance which we ascribe to them in the act of 1864 as a part of the contract, entering into it, qualifying every term, one of the conditions upon which it is accepted by the party of the other part, an express reservation of jurisdiction in Congress over the whole subject. The right to alter, amend, or repeal is a right to alter every section, every line, word, and syllable of the act, subject only to such limitations as are in the Constitution of the United States. Outside of that, it is a question of discretion, of the sense of justice; it ceases to be a question of power.

Now, what provision of the Constitution is applicable? It is said the bill of the Judiciary Committee impairs the obligation of contracts. It is immaterial to me whether there be such a restriction in the Constitution or not, for I should recognize the obligation of morals to be as strong as though it were in express law. Can a law violate the obligation of a contract which simply compels corporations under the jurisdiction of Congress, quasi-public, creatures of the law, to make suitable provisions for the fulfillment of their contracts? To me this seems to be worse than a confusion of language; it is a perversion of terms.

Why, Mr. President, let us recur for one moment to the circumstances under which the act of 1864 was passed. The companies had been unable to proceed under the act of 1862. Then Congress came in and doubled the land grant; it extended the time for the completion of the road; it released one-half the account against the Government for transportation; it took a second mortgage to the Government in place of the first; it released the 25 per cent. reserved; it gave them coal lands, gave everything asked or that could be asked, and reserved the right to alter, amend, or repeal. The cost of this great undertaking was a matter of estimate, of guess; none knew how much it would cost or what the profit would be when it had been constructed. Congress might well say, "We are giving liberally; we are giving for a great purpose; we stand ready to give more, if more be necessary; but we reserve the right to alter, amend, or repeal, in order to protect the interest of the Government and the rights of the people."

The roads were finished at less real cost, I imagine, than any one conjectured; their profits have exceeded the most sanguine expectations of their projectors. How is it proposed to exercise this reserved power? By touching the rights of property acquired under that law? Not at all. By withholding any of the money? Not at all. Simply by requiring these companies, as Congress might require any other corporations under its jurisdiction, to pay one-quarter of their net earnings into a sinking fund to secure their creditors, to maintain their solvency, and enable them to fulfill their obligations and comply with the express conditions under which the grant was made. This is the outrage so monstrous in its proportions that it violates the Constitution of the United States, the moral instincts and the natural sense of justice which underlie society, and which frights the souls of Senators from their propriety and shocks their moral sensibilities beyond the power of intelligible utterance!

The Senator from Georgia, (Mr. HILL,) in order to avoid the legal effect of the right to alter, amend, or repeal, as a part of the contract itself, attempted to show that the act was not a contract, but that it authorized a contract to be made; and there was about this portion of his argument a subtlety of metaphysics which I think would have delighted the heart of Thomas Aquinas or Duns Scotius. It is true, as he tells us, that the act contains the terms of the contract, (and they are to be found nowhere else,) but the contract itself is an ineffable something which exists outside and apart from the terms. The act, he insists, only gave authority to the Executive to make a contract. What contract did the Executive make? How did he make it? The law required the Executive to determine when the companies had complied with their contract. That was a duty imposed, and the only power conferred was one incident to that duty. Had the Executive any option in the matter? Was he at liberty to disregard the law or change its terms? He had but one duty, to execute the law. Had he refused to discharge this duty, had he exercised the power corruptly or vexatiously, the rights of the companies under the law would have been in no wise impaired, while the Executive would have been liable to an impeachment. Every act done by the Executive was done under the law, received its validity from the law, and became a part of it. Sir, this is a Government of law, and every act done by authority of law is the act not of the officer or Department, but the act of the law. If this Government be, as we believe, "perfect in every part and cannot but by annihilation die," it is because every part of it is permeated and vitalized by the spirit and potency of law.

The Senator from Georgia seems to me to proceed on the assumption that Congress cannot alter or amend the act of 1864, unless a court of equity on the facts presented would decree the specific relief sought by the amendment. Like a bold reasoner as he is—

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from California allow me?

Mr. BOOTH. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I am not aware that I have ever said on any occasion that Congress cannot alter, repeal, or amend the act.

Mr. BOOTH. I understand that this bill does propose to do that. I shall speak further on that subject and perhaps the Senator from Georgia may desire to—

Mr. HILL. I said it took the authority of Congress as well as the other things to complete the contract. Congress did not make the contract by the passage of the act. When that authority was executed, the rights and obligations of the parties were fixed. By compliance with the terms, then, the authority became executed. Congress by the repeal of the act could not annul the contract. I have always conceded that Congress could repeal the authority to make the contract.

Mr. BOOTH. Precisely, but I have been endeavoring to show, and if I have not shown that I have not shown anything, that this was not an authority to make a contract but was the contract when it was enacted and accepted by the companies.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator from California hold that when these acts were passed and approved by the President, the contract was made and complete?

Mr. BOOTH. So far as it could be made by the Government.

Mr. HILL. Ah! So far as it could be made by Congress, the authority was complete, but the parties were not compelled to accept, the parties were not compelled to comply with it. No obligations or rights had been fixed.

Mr. BOOTH. The Senator will pardon me. But he has gone over this subject, and if we can ever understand him we do. I do not profess to be so skilled in metaphysical subtleties and dialectics as to be able to understand that proposition and I have not seen any one who does.

Mr. HILL. That may be.

Mr. BOOTH. Like a bold reasoner, the Senator from Georgia does not shrink consequences. He takes hedge, fence, and stone-wall at a flying leap and accepts logical results. In answer to the Senator from Vermont he avowed the proposition "that if Congress grant a charter to a particular national bank to be called the Bank of North America in the District of Columbia for twenty years, and that bank accepts the charter and complies with every provision in it, there being at the end a section which says Congress may repeal this act at any time, then Congress cannot repeal it within the twenty years, unless the company shall violate some of the provisions of the charter." This is the logical inference of the whole tenor of the argument against the power of Congress to enact the bill of the Judiciary Committee. Congress so exhausts its power in the creation of a corporation that it can reserve no right of control even by express words. Times and circumstances may change, a measure beneficent at its passage may become a stumbling-block, or an instrument of oppression; the corporation created by the law is fixed above the power of its creator.

There is a story told of an inventor who constructed a machine with such marvelous ingenuity that it became instinct with life, endowed with will and motion, but without a soul. This monstrous thing became the superior of its inventor. He could neither alter nor destroy it. It became his master and reduced him to a loathsome servitude. This fiction, so wild and weird it scarcely seems the product of a sane imagination, if the construction of the Senator from Georgia be correct is to be realized in law.

The Senator from Georgia having proven to his satisfaction that the sections of the law which set forth the contract cannot be changed, and then that the provisions which constitute the charter cannot be changed, I have been at a loss to know what portion could be reached by the power to amend so plenary and absolute in terms. After much study and thought I have discovered one portion of the act which is not covered and protected by theegis of his construction. That portion is the title. We cannot change the thing; we are at liberty to-day to change the name of the thing, and I think we ought to do it.

Mr. HILL. I will ask the Senator if I did not concede that the reserved power related to the charter, the corporation, the franchises of the corporation, and I ask the Senator if the franchises are conveyed by the title? Are not the franchises conveyed by the body of the bill, and are not the regulations of the franchises contained in the body?

Mr. BOOTH. I believe I must claim the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CORKRELL in the chair.) The Senator from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOOTH. I was about to say, and I believe I will say, that I think we ought to exercise the power and change the title, for I am convinced that if the Senator from Georgia could make another argument as powerful and subtle as the first he would take away that power.

The bill of the Railroad Committee has been called a settlement. To my mind it is a surrender. The whole amount of money involved in this subject is of trifling importance compared with the principle which it proposes to surrender. Sir, the question is before us; let us not barter, let us not dicker; let us legislate. If we are as powerless as is contended on behalf of the Railroad Committee, let us learn that from the highest judicial authority, for if that be so there will be no more charters granted, nor aids bestowed while the world stands and the Congress remains sane.

The Senator from Georgia in his eloquent peroration said that these railroad companies are not the kind of corporations which he dreads. What he dreads is the great and growing power of the corporation of the Federal Government. I accept the term from his stand-point. From that point of view these corporations swell into the imperial proportions of sovereignty or in their overshadowing presence this Government dwarfs into the dimensions of a corporation. I accept the term. The stockholders in this corporation of the Federal Government are forty-five million free people entitled to share and share alike in all its benefits. Its charter is the Constitution of the United States. It holds in its hands the title deeds to liberty for countless millions yet to be. I trust it will ever be, as I believe it has ever been, full of grace, mercy, and loving-kindness to its friends; dreadful only to its enemies. Look upon this picture and then upon this. The record of the corporation he does not dread can be read in the transactions of the Credit Mobilier and the Contract Finance Companies. His election is not mine, but I thank the Senator for the boldness of his speech. He has cloven this subject to the center; he has cleft its heart in twain. It is a question as to where our allegiance is due. We cannot serve two masters. Which shall we serve?

Mr. PLUMB. I move to lay aside this bill temporarily and proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 913.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I hope that will not be done. I have tried again and again to speed this bill, which I think ought to be passed, and I hope it will be passed without further delay. If there are other Senators who wish to speak on this bill, surely some of them must be prepared to speak to-day, and I do not wish it to be laid aside. I have given notice time and time again that I would ask the Senate to sit this bill out to-day; but owing to the sickness of some Senators and the necessary absence of others I am compelled to refrain from doing that; but I shall certainly ask the Senate, most respectfully, but most earnestly, to sit this bill out to-morrow, and as that will leave comparatively but little time for Senators to speak upon it and consider all the amendments that may be offered to it, I do hope that those who wish to speak will speak to-day, as many of them as can. I beg leave most humbly to submit that this bill ought not to lie over from day to day for set speeches to be made. The great features of both these bills have been fully considered and we have got to that stage of the debate which is called the business stage of a debate, when we can get down to the concrete of these two bills, and I hope that therefore the consideration of the subject will be continued.

Mr. PLUMB. I had no design at all of interfering with the present consideration of this bill, but I supposed that we should probably proceed upon the theory which we have heretofore pursued of one speech a day and then an executive session.

Mr. THURMAN. I have been trying to defeat for a week this theory of one speech a day on this bill. If there are to be more speeches I hope we shall have two, three, or four of them to-day, so that we may come to an end some time or other. I know very well that these are corporations in perpetuity and we hope our Government is in perpetuity, but we are not perpetual, and I want to see this thing ended before I die.

Mr. PLUMB. I entirely agree with the Senator from Ohio as to the propriety of this bill being continuously considered until it shall be disposed of. I was only chafing somewhat under the delay which had occurred through no fault of mine and no fault of his. I desired if this bill was not to be further spoken upon to-day that we might proceed to the Calendar and make some progress with it instead of adjourning or going into executive session. My suggestion was only made with the design of expediting business. Of course, if any Senator desires to speak presently upon this I will cheerfully withdraw my motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If none wish to speak, let us vote.

Mr. THURMAN. I will say one word more. If there is no Senator who wants to speak to-day, let us take the vote on the motion of my colleague to substitute the Railroad Committee bill. I am ready to take the vote on that now without one single word more on my side.

Mr. PLUMB. That is entirely agreeable to me. I cannot conceive of anything more so. I desire to have this question disposed of, and now will suit me better than any other time.

Mr. THURMAN. I am willing that the vote shall be taken on the substitute now without one single word from me or those who support the Judiciary Committee bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am one of those Senators who are not entirely satisfied with either of these bills. I understand that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. CHAFFEE] this morning introduced a bill as a substitute for both. That was ordered to be printed. I should be glad to see that bill before we proceed to action on either of these others. It is possible that after that bill is brought to the attention of the Senate and is laid before the Senate, I may wish to make a remark in relation to the whole subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator might state to us now what his objections are to these two bills.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have not seen the bill; I cannot state.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, but the Senator says he is not satisfied with the Judiciary Committee bill or the Railroad Committee bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am not ready at the present moment to state my objections to these bills, until I have seen the other bill and seen whether it is obnoxious to the same objections.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I was about to say that I hope the Senator from Ohio will not press a vote now. I have introduced to-day a bill upon this subject which will be printed within an hour and be here on the desks of Senators, and I desire very much that the Senate shall look at that bill. I intend to press that bill as a substitute for both of these bills, and I have enough faith at least to believe the Senate will agree to my bill in lieu of either of the other bills, and I should not be surprised if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] would agree to my bill himself. I believe him to be a just and fair man. I hope the Senator from Ohio upon a subject of this moment will not press us to a vote upon a single day, but at least allow the discussion to run until Saturday. I desire myself to make some remarks on these bills, but I am not ready to-day, and should like to have the discussion continue at least until Saturday.

Mr. THURMAN. The Railroad Committee reported a bill and my colleague moved to substitute it for the Judiciary Committee bill. The Senator from Colorado has this morning laid upon the table a substitute that he will offer when it is in order for him to offer it. The pending question is the motion of my colleague to substitute the bill of the Railroad Committee for that of the Judiciary Committee. Now, if there is any one who wishes to speak in favor of that substitution I hope he will go on. There have been a great many speeches made against it and in favor of the Judiciary Committee bill. There have not been many speeches made in favor of the Railroad Committee bill, and if there is any one who still stands by the Railroad Committee bill I hope he will speak. If not, let us vote upon the motion. That cannot affect the substitute proposed by the Senator from Colorado. His motion will come up as a distinct and substantive proceeding.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I am in hopes that the Senator from Ohio having charge of the Railroad Committee bill [Mr. MATTHEWS] will accept my bill, and I have the same hopes that the Senator from Ohio on my right [Mr. THURMAN] will accept it too, and therefore I wish to have the bill printed and laid on the table, and it will be here within an hour.

Mr. THURMAN. Well, in order to remove one of the grounds upon which my friend from Colorado wishes this bill laid over—his hope that the Senator from Ohio will consent to his bill—I must tell him at once that I have looked into it enough to know that I never can consent to it as a substitute for the Judiciary Committee bill. In the first place, it proposes to tack on to this bill his proposition to require these roads to prorate with the Kansas Pacific and perhaps some other road.

Now whatever may be my opinion in regard to the duty of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific to prorate, I am totally opposed to connecting that proposition with this bill for the creation of a sinking fund. I want this proposition for the creation of a sinking fund to stand by itself, upon its own merits. I think every Senator will see that it ought to stand as a perfectly distinct and independent measure. Therefore my objection to the substitute of the Senator from Colorado, without at all committing myself against the prorating proposition, or expressing any opinion upon the one or the other beyond what I have heretofore done in the Senate, my fundamental objection to it is that it seeks to tie that to this sinking-fund bill, whereas the sinking-fund measure ought to stand alone. Each measure ought to stand on its own merits.

Then I have another objection to the sinking-fund provision of the substitute proposed by the Senator from Colorado. In some respects it is precisely like the Railroad Committee bill. The difference is that it requires a larger sum than the Railroad Committee bill requires and a less sum than is required by the Judiciary Committee bill.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I do not believe that the Senator from Ohio has read the substitute that I presented this morning. If he will examine it he will see that it proceeds upon the same theory exactly and recognizes the power of Congress to deal with these corporations.

Mr. THURMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. CHAFFEE. It surrenders no right the Government has at the present moment and proceeds upon the same theory as the bill of the Judiciary Committee. I had great hopes, therefore, that the Senator from Ohio would accept it.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not say that it surrendered the rights of the Government; but from the hasty glance that I have given to the bill, unless there are some provisions that have escaped my attention, it has a radical defect in it that is in the Railroad Committee bill. It takes our own money and allows these railroad companies interest upon our own money compounded every six months at the rate of 6 per cent., and it allows them interest upon all that they shall pay at the rate of 6 per cent. compounded annually for twenty-two years from this time, when we can borrow all the money we want at 4 per cent.

These are fundamental objections with me to the Railroad Committee bill and to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Colorado. I do not wish to speak of that substitute at any length until I shall have read it in print and seen that I perfectly understand it. But be that meritorious or not, let it receive ever so much or so little consideration, we have a pending question before us, the motion of my colleague to substitute the Railroad Committee bill for the Judiciary Committee bill. If any one wants to speak in favor of that motion to substitute, I pray him to speak now. If not, then let us have a vote on that pending proposition. I see so many guns in battery on my colleague's desk that I take it for granted he is prepared to speak, and I pray him to do so.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] addressed the Senate in support of the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, I rose for the purpose of putting a question to him, to which he objected on the ground that I would have ample opportunity for future reply. I expect to make that reply, but I did not come here this morning fully prepared to do so, because I understood the arrangement was that the Senator from California, who has already spoken, would be followed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES]. I understand from that gentleman that he is too unwell to proceed with his argument to-day.

The gentleman may think this argument is exhausted. Perhaps it is; but certainly I am not willing that it should rest, so far as I am concerned, where it does now, having failed of the opportunity to correct gentlemen on the floor in regard to an understanding of my own position. I see no occasion for extraordinary haste about the matter. No time has been lost. We have transacted other business as though this measure was not under discussion. I think it but an exercise of ordinary courtesy that no attempt should be made to force either the debate or a vote at the present time. I have had no opportunity of considering the proposition I understand to have been made by the Senator from Colorado this morning. I had a brief conversation with him, in which he explained some of the leading features of his substitute. He has suggested that it might possibly furnish to my mind, and to those who like myself have been opposing the bill of the Judiciary Committee, a better substitute than we have offered. I should like time to consider that, but it cannot be done until his bill is printed and laid upon the table. I am ready to go on to-morrow; I am not entirely unprepared, if the Senate insist upon it, to go on to-day, but it would far better suit my convenience to postpone my remarks until to-morrow.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not like to occupy the position of one advertised to make a speech. I had intended all along to submit some remarks before the debate closed, somewhat in the nature of criticism upon both these bills, and not as really the advocate of either. I did not come here to-day expecting to do so or feeling like doing so; but rather than have it supposed that I am taking time to prepare a speech, what little I have to say about this matter I would just as lief say to-day as at any other time. If it is agreeable to the Senate, if the Senate desire to continue the discussion to-day, perhaps it is just as well that what I have to say should be said now as at any time. I take no part in any struggle for mastery between different methods of accomplishing the same purpose now before the Senate. An intellectual tournament of that kind, however entertaining or instructive, nevertheless tends to lead those who participate in it into positions and arguments that, after it is over, it is difficult to sustain by sound reason.

The great amount of indebtedness of these railroad companies, as well on their prior mortgage bonds as to the Government itself, is such that it is utterly useless to expect a liquidation of that indebtedness without legislation. According to the reports of these two committees, that indebtedness will amount in twenty years from this time to the enormous sum of $298,258,137, minus what the Government itself may receive in for the half-transportation account and the 5 per cent of the net earnings, whatever they may be. All are agreed substantially that in 1898 there will be not far from $175,000,000 to be met by these companies. That they will have on hand sufficient assets at that time accumulated of their own accord and lying in their treasury awaiting the time when this indebtedness shall become due, no one expects. To expect it is to expect of these corporations in their dealings with the public and with their stockholders and themselves a line of conduct that finds no parallel in any other business transaction. That they would accumulate in their treasury and have ready an idle capital of $175,000,000 in 1898 to liquidate this indebtedness, no one, I say, expects. In looking to the means of meeting this indebtedness every one turns to a sinking fund. The Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad have called the attention of the Government to the propriety and the necessity of such a fund. In the very last report they say:

If no definite plan for a permanent and final adjustment of the relations existing between the Government and company, relative to the full reimbursement of the former on account of the subsidy bonds issued to the latter, be adopted, then the Government directors would respectfully suggest that Congress be recommended to pass an act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive from the company, from time to time, such sums as it may elect to pay into his hands, for the establishment of a sinking fund for the extinguishment of the liability of the company to the Government on account of said bonds. It is believed that the company would at once, upon the determination of the 5 per cent. suit, avail itself of such a provision of law and commence payments under it for the purpose named. Such a plan would be a great improvement on the present want of one, and would be preferable to the establishment of a voluntary sinking fund, with its funds remaining in the hands of the company and subject to its control.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company itself, at its very last meeting, on the 6th day of March, passed this resolution:

Resolved, That the stockholders acknowledge the necessity for a sinking fund to provide for the final payment of the Government debt, and the delay in providing one has occurred from their belief that some proposition would come from the Government which they could accept and from a preference that the funds should be held by Government, as more satisfactory to both parties to the contract; that the company is willing to anticipate the debt upon any basis or plan submitted which will not be a burden upon its present and a menace to its future prosperity and business.

I do not know what action has been taken by the Central Pacific Railroad Company or what is its disposition in reference to this matter. This action of the Government directors of the Union Pacific and of the Union Pacific itself is in perfect unison and harmony with the object and purpose professed, and I have no doubt sincerely, in both of the methods proposed here. Therefore it is proper for us to consider what is the best method of establishing a sinking fund, and it is to that what little I desire to say this morning shall be addressed, leaving for others the discussion of the question what is the absolute and unqualified power of the Government over the subject-matter. With the companies ready to co-operate with the Government in the establishment of a sinking fund to be kept by the Government itself and with the Government impressed with the necessity of such a sinking fund, it does seem to me strange if it be not within the power of this Congress and these companies in co-operation so to adjust the questions and the basis and the terms of a sinking fund as to accomplish the end sought by the Government: the protection of the creditors of these companies upon terms least burdensome to the corporations themselves and most conducive to that prosperity and development of the country through which they run, which was one of the controlling purposes and objects of the original grant itself.

Now, sir, what are the elements that constitute a true and proper sinking fund? Evidently, as all will admit, first and above all is security to that fund. It is of no practical use, it is a broken reed upon which to lean, if it do not contain within itself the element of absolute security. To obtain absolute security is the first thing to be sought after in legislation here upon that point. Any legislation which fails of obtaining absolute security to this sinking fund fails in accomplishing the great end for which we should endeavor to legislate in this matter. We legislate not for to-day; we legislate for 1898. We cannot tell what may be the influences or what may be the conflicting and antagonistic elements which shall be encountered between this and 1898. We must provide for every possible contingency that human foresight can discover, or else we fail in the attainment of the object these bills profess to search for. Let me say that first of all no sinking fund has the element of security in it which is left under the control of the debtor. It is in essence no sinking fund which is left under the control of the debtor, subject to his will, his present gain, his present ideas of what is for his interest. It is equivalent to leaving the whole matter where it was before, subject only to his sense of propriety and the obligation of his contract with the creditor, if you leave your sinking fund under his control.

Equally so, Mr. President, if you leave your sinking fund under the control of the creditor alone. The sinking fund is the property of the debtor. It is his property, to be set aside for a purpose superior to present obligations. To put it into the hands of the creditor is to put it under his dominion and control, and actually to make it a present payment. There is no difference in essence, no difference in fact, between present payment and putting the property of the debtor under the absolute control of the creditor. Absolute control on his part implies the power to make such appropriation of it as he pleases. Absolute control on his part is to put in his power anticipation of payment; and not only is that in contravention of the obligation itself and of the faith which exists between debtor and creditor and the terms of the relation between them established by themselves, but it makes war upon the very first principle upon which a sinking fund is to be founded, namely, security that that fund shall be in 1898 present, untouched, unimpaired, ready for that application for which it is founded, and for no other.

Then, if it is not to be put under the control of the debtor as being useless and idle and leaving the creditor with no possible additional security, and if it cannot be put under the absolute control of the creditor without violating the very terms of the contract for which provision is to be made in the future, it must be put either out of the control of both parties or under some joint arrangement or assignment of the sinking fund, so that neither can exercise control over it without the assent of the other. It is upon this principle that all sinking funds which have proved a success and not a snare have been established. The history of the philosophy of sinking funds lies in these two elements: absolute security against the debtor or the creditor alone and certainty that the accretions to the fund shall exceed the yearly accumulations of interest. Those two elements established in a sinking fund make it absolutely certain that the debt will be canceled. They do not make it absolutely certain that it will be canceled at one time or another, but those two elements of themselves make it absolutely certain that in due time the debt will be canceled. How those two elements shall be secured in a sinking fund for the payment of the debts of these railroad companies is a question to which the Senate ought to address itself, and I have no doubt supposes it is addressing itself. It is to that end that my vote shall be governed, and to that measure which shall best accomplish that end I propose to give my support.

In order to make the security most certain the present burden of a sinking fund must be most light. Just in proportion as you increase the present burden of a sinking fund, just in that proportion do you lessen the security of the fund. We can learn wisdom from the sinking fund which the United States established for the ultimate payment of the national debt itself. That was established when the debt was only a little over $150,000,000, upon a plan measured by the amount of that debt; yet the debt itself to which the terms of the sinking fund were applied went on increasing to such an enormous extent as to make the yearly accretions to the sinking fund, coming in the shape of additional burdens upon the people, continually increasing until, if the sinking fund continue unimpaired, it will extinguish the whole of this great enormous public debt in a little over thirty years from the time it was contracted. No man dreamed at that time that the burdens of the sinking fund, the accretions to it, were of such an amount. And what has been the effect? Already we hear note of warning of attacks upon the integrity of the sinking fund itself. Bills in both Houses of Congress have been introduced for the purpose of abolishing that sinking fund; and to-day, if it were simply a fund of so many dollars and cents, actual funds of the United States, lying in the Treasury awaiting the final appropriation for the payment of the public debt of the United States, I hardly think any Senator would be bold enough to say that it would stand intact five years. Looking at the dangers coming to that sinking fund from the temptation to impair it—a fund of hundreds of millions of dollars accumulating so rapidly every year in the Treasury—Congress wisely, in 1870, extinguished the whole of that accumulation of wealth in the sinking fund and turned it all into the Treasury, canceled all the bonds held by it, and now so much of that sinking fund is safe. What it may be in the future, growing out of this very element of excessive accumulation, the discontents that it stimulates and aggravates, the desire to relieve the people from it that is growing every year and imperiling the fund itself, may have a lesson in it which we ought to heed in establishing this sinking fund, which is to run twenty years at least from this time. While the accumulations to this fund should be enough to secure ultimate liquidation, they should not be so much as to stimulate discontent and a disposition in any quarter to attack with hostile legislation a fund designed, like this, to be kept at least twenty years, for the purpose of the special liquidation of a particular indebtedness of and to the United States.

Let us, in view of these principles, upon which I conceive everybody will agree that a sinking fund ought to be based, in order to make it secure and certain, turn to the propositions of these two bills and see whether they meet these ends, and, so far as we can see, answer these two requirements. First, the Judiciary Committee propose to gather into a sinking fund enough to liquidate the first and second mortgage bonds in about twenty years—$175,000,000 in twenty years. With the exception of the sinking fund to which I have alluded, which got its vast accretions without deliberate intention on the part of the Government, there is no sinking fund that I have ever read of that gathered into itself the vast amount of $175,000,000 in the brief period of twenty years; and whence is it to come? It is, every dollar of it, to be gathered off the traffic upon these roads. It is, every dollar of it, to be charged to those who use these roads as passengers and as freighters. This burden is proper enough to be borne if properly distributed, if so adjusted as not to be made unreasonable and excessive, and yet to be made certain. It is proposed by the Judiciary Committee bill to gather up the whole of $175,000,000 off the traffic over these roads in the short period of twenty years. That, sir, of itself is an element of insecurity. It is to be gathered substantially off the local traffic of these roads, for within five or six years there are to be two other roads competing with these for the transcontinental freighting and passenger business which is to be done for all the time covered by this sinking fund.

Therefore, up to a certain limit it will be impossible for these roads to do transcontinental business and charge upon it an excessive burden to meet the obligation of this sinking fund. It must be charged, then, largely in the end upon the local traffic upon these roads; but whether charged upon the local or the through business of these roads it is a burden upon the people in the end.

I do not use this argument for the purpose of saying that the burden ought not to be imposed at all, but for the purpose of saying that care should be taken, that it should not be excessive, just as men now argue against provision for the yearly accretions to the sinking fund of the nation. It is better to extend it over a greater length of time, they say. We have paid, they say, our full share of the burden of the public debt, and it is better to extend it over a longer period of time and distribute upon those who come after us some of these burdens.

I submit that no sooner will it be enacted that these companies must gather from off their business enough money every year to amount to $175,000,000 in twenty years from this time than you will begin to hear the mutterings of discontent in every part of the country that shall do business upon these roads. The whole cheap-transportation sentiment of the country, which has been so strong, and for aught I know is as strong now as ever, will be invoked against the terms of such an exactive sinking fund as this. Therefore, I submit that, in the interest of security and permanency to this sinking fund, without impairing the ultimate certainty of it, it is better that its exactions should be less and the time for its consummation be postponed for a few years, thereby not only lightening its burdens but rendering the fund itself more secure from a disposition to pervert it or to impair it or to repeal it.

The character of the sinking fund, the exactions of the sinking fund, are not all. What is the inevitable effect upon the roads themselves? I have not expressed thus far a doubt of the power to impose any obligation that Congress in its wisdom may see fit to impose. I am not here as the advocate of any of these roads or a defender of its past or an enlogizer of its future. I know none of the parties interested in either of them. I was in Congress when they started in 1862 and in 1864. I have watched as a legislator all that has been done. I am of the opinion that the accomplishment of the building of these roads in the time of war was one of the grandest of all the achievements of that war, whether you look at the grand character of the undertaking or the results obtained through it. Whatever was done that deserves criticism or condemnation in the manner of carrying out the powers granted by Congress, I have nothing to do with to-day. Here is a great transcontinental line to live by the side of two other equally grand transcontinental lines, and it cannot be treated wisely in any other way than by the establishment of a sinking fund that shall be absolutely secure and certain of the ultimate result, and yet so distributed in its burdens that it will not cripple this line by the side of competing roads nor exact unnecessary and unreasonable burdens from those who must patronize and use these roads. Otherwise the roads, as the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] has said, and in the very nature of things, must be abandoned to the mortgagees or so run that they will cease to fulfill the purposes for which these laws were passed and this money taken from the Treasury of the United States for the accomplishment of the great work. Yet with this enactment that $175,000,000 at least shall be gathered by these roads off the traffic on them in twenty years, this bill goes further and for the security of this exaction mortgages every particle of property that these railroads now or hereafter may possess, not only for the fulfillment of the yearly exactions of this bill but for the ultimate payment of this debt in 1898. Let me read. The ninth section of the bill is in these words:

That all sums due to the United States from any of said companies respectively, whether payable presently or not—

That includes not only the yearly exactions but includes the ultimate payment in 1898 of all the bonds of these roads. All the sums due to the United States, "whether payable presently or not"— and all sums required to be paid to the United States or into the Treasury, or into said sinking fund, under this act, or under the acts hereinbefore referred to, or otherwise, are hereby declared to be a lien—

That is, a mortgage—

upon all the property, estate, rights, and franchises of every description granted or conveyed by the United States to any of said companies, respectively or jointly, and also—

And this is what I particularly desire to call the attention of the Senate to—and also upon all the estate and property, real, personal, and mixed, assets, and income of the said several railroad companies respectively, from whatever source derived, subject to any lawfully prior and paramount mortgage, lien, or claim thereon.

Therefore, sir, though the roads pay punctually and faithfully every dollar exacted by this bill year by year into the Treasury of the United States, still every dollar of the assets and of the income of each company is pledged, and must, or this act will be violated, be kept till the end. Not a dollar of dividend can be paid, though every obligation of this bill shall have been fulfilled to the letter year by year. Every dollar of income from these roads, if it is in the power of Congress to put a mortgage on another man's property without his will, is pledged and must be kept, and this law is violated if it be not kept, till the end. Who is to run the roads? Who is to maintain them? Whose capital is to remain in these roads for twenty years idle and unremunerated? Certainly I do not exaggerate the meaning of the words of this bill, if I know what they are. The law before this bill provided that all the property received from the United States, but none other, should be under mortgage for the fulfillment of the companies' obligations, and then authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, only in case of default, to enter upon and take possession of such of the property as was then in the possession of the companies, leaving them to dispose of the land, leaving them to dispose of any other property that they might acquire, as they saw fit. But this not only puts a mortgage for twenty years upon all property derived from the United States in the language of the old law, and not only upon all property, in the ordinary sense of the term, acquired from whatever source, but upon all income by name, however derived. If I know what may be the force of a lien or mortgage, it sets it apart, renders it utterly impossible for either company, though it has fulfilled every other provision, every exaction of this bill, to make a penny dividend; it cannot sell an engine; it cannot part with a foot of land. Whatever it may acquire hereafter is stamped, if it be in the power of Congress to stamp it, although the highest courts of many of the States have declared it to be an impossibility for creditor and debtor together to put the stamp of a mortgage upon after-acquired property. The language of this bill and the power asserted in this bill go to the length, not only of covering every dollar of property now held, but all the companies' income.

With all these elements, the nature, effect, and tendency of which are to breed dissatisfaction and discontent with the sinking fund thus established, the Judiciary Committee by their bill, as if to mock certainty and security, as if to hold it up as a thing least to be sought after, and as if to make it certain as an invitation in every contingency that may hereafter arise to every spirit of gain or of hostility to this purpose, not only base their sinking fund upon the theory (with which I am not quarreling at this moment) that Congress has the absolute control over it, can create it and can unmake it at its pleasure, but lest anybody might infer the possibility that the sinking fund stood upon some more secure basis than that, they expressly provide in the bill that any future Congress may at its will turn it over, pervert it, repeal it, amend it, abolish it, appropriate its money to any other purpose they please.

Of course these do not seem to be very weighty objections in the mind of the Judiciary Committee, and they may not have any weight in the mind of any other Senator; but, sincerely desiring myself to accomplish the end sought by these bills and to be sure that it has been accomplished, I have found no other way that satisfied my mind so well as to vote a sinking fund, out of the control of either the debtor or the creditor alone, to make the accretions to it such as to be sure and certain that those accretions shall every year exceed the accumulations of interest and yet so moderate while keeping them certain that their burden shall not create discontent and dissatisfaction and that their exactions shall not tempt and provoke opposition and effort for relief from the sinking fund itself. And yet, sir, I find that the chief merit of this bill is—what? I hear Senators argue that they would rather give it up and lose the whole debt than to lose the very element of insecurity. I hear Senators say that rather than fix this sinking fund so that it shall be beyond the reach of a majority hereafter it were better for the Government to lose the entire debt. I have to ask Senators if really there is, in the idea that the Government of the United States can make a contract that shall bind it, anything so alarming to the liberties of this nation that it were worth while to give up so much rather than concede it? Is it, after all, the fact that no Congress can bind its successor, as I understood the Senator who reported this bill to say in the course of the debate, that no Congress can bind its successor; that it is not in the power of Congress to do so; that it is worth while to hold up to the people of the United States the fact that there is no force in the spirit of the express, positive inhibition in the Constitution of the United States against violating contracts, because it does not specifically apply to Congress? Have Senators quite considered how far this carries them; how little it is within our power to maintain the Government for an hour if we abandon the idea that it can make a contract that shall be inviolate in the future, that must be adhered to, if you adhere to good faith and honor? But Senators think that rather than admit—I do not say how at this time—the principle that the Government shall be able to bind itself and bind future Congresses so that they cannot in honor and in good faith violate that contract, they would give up this whole thing! I submit that it is within the power of Congress to fix this sinking fund upon a basis that will abide, which will abide, too, whatever may be the contingencies of the future; which will abide in the forum of the Supreme Court of the United States, where contracts are enforced; and I think it is our duty to so base it that it will stand.

The Judiciary Committee, in arguing in support of their measure and in support of the idea that the best element of it is the fact that it keeps the control of the matter in the majority of Congress, have sought to meet every suggestion that possibly the majority might be hostile to the bill itself and to the fund itself with ridicule and with denunciation. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] was eloquent in what he described and what he wished us to understand to be the confidence necessarily to be reposed in the majorities of Congress, that everything under the Constitution rested upon majorities, and the presumption was that majorities acted justly and properly. And when the Senator from Ohio on my right [Mr. MATTHEWS] spoke of the danger of trusting individual rights to the caprice of the majority he turned in astonishment toward the Senator from Ohio and said that the Senator from Ohio had used the word "caprice" in a sense exceedingly offensive to any idea which the Senator from Michigan entertained of the actual tendencies of the majorities in Congress, and said that he might as well call majorities in Congress lunatics as to speak of any danger that might exist to the rights of individuals in the majorities in Congress. I should have been exceedingly impressed with the eloquence and force of the argument of the Senator from Michigan had he not been equally forcible and eloquent in denouncing the course of those same majorities in the past when he called attention to the fact that the majorities in the past had pursued a course which astonished the nation; and he even went so far as to hint at the fact that in 1864 Congress had been induced by bribery to the course which it had pursued. Sir, he broke entirely with me the whole force of any confidence which he might otherwise have inspired on my part in the action of future majorities by expressing his indignation at the course of majorities in the past.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who has been commenting on the ninth section of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary as raising difficulties and doubts, and so on, to persons interested in these companies, to explain to the Senate the substantial difference between the ninth section of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and the fifth section of the act of 1862, which declares as to the money advanced by the United States that the very fact of its advance "shall ipso facto constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of the railroad and telegraph, together with the rolling-stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description" of the companies?

Now the Senator says that this ninth section declares that the right of the United States to its debt as well as the sinking fund shall constitute a lien on all the property of the companies and on their income, which he seems to lay stress upon. The Senator of course can see that in respect of this sinking fund itself, the duty to pay into that is not provided for by the act of 1862, because the act of 1862 does not create the sinking fund, and therefore of course it is necessary, if you mean to be in earnest about this business, to say that this debt to the sinking fund of so much a year not to exceed 25 per cent. of the net earnings shall constitute a lien. But in respect of the other part of the debt to the United States, what is the difference between the ninth section of this bill and the fifth section of the act of 1862 which says that the money advanced by the United States shall constitute a first mortgage—now a second mortgage by the act of 1864—upon all the "property of every kind and description" of the companies? Is not the income of a company, that is its tolls, a part of its property; and is it not therefore merely re-enacting the fifth section of the act of 1862 with the addition that this duty to pay into the sinking fund shall be also a lien, bringing it all together?

Mr. DAWES. I will answer the Senator if he will first tell me what is meant by the next line after where he stopped: "and in consideration of which said bonds may be issued."

Mr. EDMUNDS. The next line where?

Mr. DAWES. You stopped at the word "description."

Mr. EDMUNDS. "And in consideration of which said bonds may be issued." Now before the Senator answers my question he wishes me to answer him one. Is that it?

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator what is his understanding of the meaning of this line?

Mr. EDMUNDS. After the Senator shall have explained to me, in answer to my question, I will try to explain to him.

Mr. DAWES. We will not stand upon the order. I understand the difference between the act of 1862 and the bill to be just this: that the act of 1862 proposed to make a mortgage upon everything that was obtained from the United States, and I infer it from these particular words:

Shall ipso facto constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of the railroad and telegraph, together with the rolling-stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description, and in consideration of which said bonds may be issued.

Whatever the United States grant in consideration of the issue of the bonds is subject to the mortgage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That, as the Senator states it, "in consideration."

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator tell me what is the meaning of this line? He asked me the difference. The difference I think is—and I infer it from those lines I have read, which are very blind and hardly intelligible—that in 1862 Congress never undertook to put a mortgage on anything except that which they granted to the railroads and furnished them the capital to purchase. That is the form in which they undertook to express that idea in the line which I have read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Supposing that to be so—and I do not say whether it is or not—what was it that the United States granted to the company? Was not one of the things that it granted to this company the power to take tolls, to gather in money for traffic? That was one of the franchises of the company. That even the Senator from Georgia, with his entirely novel views about the law, concedes to be within the power of Congress to regulate and repeal under the reserved power. What is this franchise, then? One essential part of a franchise—it is not all of it, but the most valuable part of a franchise except that of taking private property—is the right of taking tolls from the public for doing a public business. The tolls, therefore, the right to take tolls, the money got from tolls, came from the authority of the privilege granted by Congress to these companies to build their railroad and to operate with the public and receive from the public an income for doing it. They are the tolls. Now the statute says that every kind and description of the property of the companies shall be the subject of this first lien of the United States, now by the act of 1864 the second lien. Now the Senator reads "and in consideration of which said bonds may be issued," and he says that is very blind. I do not think it is blind at all. That is to say, there is authority to the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time to issue the bonds of the United States in consideration of the fact which the law declares that every particle of the property of these companies, real and personal, franchises, everything that is property, tolls, and everything else, are the security, and that being so, the Secretary of the Treasury in consideration of that may issue these bonds.

It does not require a vast amount of scholastic education, as it appears to me, to understand that simple proposition. These bonds may be issued in consideration of what has been previously stated, and that is that everything that the companies may obtain in the nature of property is made subject to the duty that the law of corporations everywhere without it would make the duty of the corporation to devote to the payment of its debts. That is all there is to it.

My honorable friend, who is familiar with that excellent book in New England, Angell & Ames on Corporations, and that excellent English book, Kyd on Corporations, must know that according to those authorities and by the decisions of courts without a difference anywhere, every particle of the property of a corporation, whether it is in money, or in tolls, or in rights, or franchises, or whatever it may be, is a trust fund first devoted to the duty of paying its debts, after that to the duty of dividing it among the persons who have engaged in the operation.

Mr. DAWES. That is quite a different subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think so. It is quite the same subject.

Mr. DAWES. I admit that the franchise was mortgaged.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, what was the franchise?

Mr. DAWES. Mortgaging the franchise does not mortgage what can be made out of the franchise. The franchise is held by the mortgagee for his use until default, and what he can make out of the franchise until default is his unless the terms of the mortgage cover not only the franchise but the income and use of it. I mortgage my farm to the Senator from Vermont and unless I expressly mortgage the income of that farm its income he cannot exact from me.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest to my friend from Massachusetts that the very act that authorizes the mortgage of the franchise does specially mortgage a special amount of the income, 5 per cent. and no more.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, it is perfectly plain, that without express words in the mortgage that the income of this road is also pledged to the fulfillment of the obligation in 1898, you cannot hold it and recover it out of the hands of a stockholder when paid in the form of dividends; and the Senator from Vermont knew that when he used the word "income" in this bill. He knew he had added something, and he knew that when he added "from whatever source derived" he had added something. He knew that he had made a broader mortgage because he had used broader terms. There is nothing in the terms of the statute of 1862 that can be construed by any fair interpretation to embrace any after-acquired property any more than income, and the Senator from Vermont does injustice to himself when he says that all these additional words are words of no effect, put in here without any occasion for their insertion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not said anything of the kind, Mr. President. The Senator will excuse me. The Senator says that the act of 1862 is only a mortgage upon existing property at the date of the passage of the act. Now, at the date of the passage of the act, I take it that the existing property of the Union Pacific Company was nil. It had not even the land grant until it accepted it. It had not any railroad line. It had not the iron or the ties or the embankments or the cuts or the bridges or the grading.

Mr. DAWES. If I said "the passage of the act," the Senator must have understood me to mean when the act went into effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; that is what I mean by the passage of the act, when it went into effect, of course. Very well. When it went into effect the company had not any track; it had not any cuts; it had not any bridges; it had not any cars or engines or anything whatever; and yet the statute says that this shall be a mortgage upon every description of the property of the company; and the Senator says that after-acquired property is not the subject of such a mortgage. I beg most respectfully to differ from the Senator. The plain import of this section is that everything that the company may have at any time, that it gets under the authority of the act that creates it, or in respect of the Central Pacific that authorizes it being an existing corporation of a State to go into the Territories of the United States and build a railroad, shall be the subject of this lien; and if the Senator says that after-acquired property does not fall within that section and is not therefore a security, he says in effect that there is no security at all. That will not do. The law about after-acquired property, which has been settled over and over again in every court that has considered it, has been that where a railroad mortgage made to private citizens, to private persons, who advanced their money, in its terms went beyond the track and the line and the right to run the line, as distinguished from the tolls, and said that it should be a mortgage upon all the property of the railroad company of every description, it was a mortgage upon after-acquired property; that it spoke all the time; and that when one engine was worn out by the company and another one built, the new engine was just as much the subject of the mortgage as the old one.

And let me suggest to my friend also that courts of equity everywhere according to my information—I may be mistaken; I do not pretend to be so versed in the law as he is—have held that the income, by name, of a railway company is just as much in a court of equity the subject of a mortgage and is just as much to be devoted to the payment of its debts as its real estate. The only question would be in any of those cases whether that income was to be applied to the first mortgage or the second or to the general creditors, and in what order; but that every creditor according to his right and according to his priority had upon the general principles of the law of corporations a lien upon every item of property of the company, whatever you call it, never has been denied that I know of.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I am aware that courts have decided that the income of a corporation can be mortgaged, and I think it was because the Senator knew that that he concluded he would mortgage it. He had not done it up to that time; the Legislature had not done it; the Senator was disposed to do it and he put it in the bill.

The Senator says that when the act of 1862 took effect the company had not any land, they had not any property, they had not any rolling-stock. Does not the Senator understand that the act took effect by sections; that they built a section of the road, and then had property, then had land, then had bonds, in consideration of the receiving of which and of property from the United States a lien was ipso facto fastened upon all the property which they themselves received, qualified, however, by this statement in the same section:

And on the refusal or failure of the said company to redeem said bonds, or any part of them, when required so to do by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the provisions of this act, the said road, with all the rights, functions, immunities, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and also all lands granted to the said company by the United States, which, at the time of said default, shall remain in the ownership of the said company, may be taken possession of by the Secretary of the Treasury for the use and benefit of the United States!

Making the exception lost sight of in the bill before the Senate, extinguished by the bill before the Senate, that the property, after all, to be taken possession of for default of the company was the property undisposed of by the company, so far as its lands were concerned, at the time the default should occur. Now, sir, all of that property is by this bill put under a lien that cannot be lifted for twenty years. Every acre of its lands as well as every dollar of its income is put under a lien that fastens and holds it for twenty years; and the bill in another section provides further for making it a penitentiary offense in any director, officer, or stockholder who shall vote a dividend in violation of this act, and every dividend received by a stockholder in violation of this act may be recovered back in an action.

When I was interrupted I was calling attention to the perfect satisfaction which seemed to have taken possession of the minds of the Judiciary Committee, if they could impress upon the country that they had established a sinking fund that has no security against the future action of Congress. They have not only taken pains to base it upon the theory that it is impossible to make it so that any future Congress cannot undo it, but they have invited interference with it by express invitation in the act itself; and the Senator from Michigan has gone on eloquently to assert the perfect confidence he had in future majorities while condemning in denunciatory language the conduct of majorities in the past. The Senator from Ohio, who reported the bill, said that it was a perfect answer to this suggestion, that nobody in the interest of the people for the two or three years this bill had been before Congress, had ever shown himself here to lobby in favor of such a measure, while the lobbies and corridors of this end and the other of the Capitol were crowded with those who were exercising or attempting to exercise undue and improper and corrupt influence against this measure; and the Senator from Vermont, rising still higher in the argument, declared that the only danger that could possibly arise, that could possibly imperil this sinking fund, was the corrupt influence of these roads themselves, and their friends and the holders of their securities, and he went so far as to say that he had ascertained just what they had expended by the line and paragraph and column in the newspapers in influencing public sentiment against this bill, and said that the time would come when Congress would investigate it.

I go heartily with him in all that work. I have seen as much of it as the Senator; I denounce it as freely as the Senator; I will investigate it as long as the Senator; but I tell the Senator that the danger is not all on one side. The Senator has seen no other influence. Cannot the Senator see that those in the interest of competing railroads may derive an advantage by securing such burdens to rest upon the traffic on this road that it will be utterly impossible to compete with transcontinental roads that have no such burden, and the greater the burden the surer the success in competition against this road? The Senator can see and feel no influence around these corridors and upon these halls that has a tendency to stimulate legislation that shall increase and make more grievous the burdens laid upon the traffic over this road for the advantage of competing roads! Sir, the innocence and confidence of the Senators that compose the Judiciary Committee who see no danger upon one side is equalled only by that of the ancient character in the fable who kept her blind side turned toward the sea ever and looked out for danger only upon the land. The fable tells us that nevertheless she fell, and I say to the Senators that, although now the public sentiment is such toward these roads that there may not be in this hour any danger except on the side of the land, yet in the disguises and devices and plans and schemes of the future neither they nor any one else can be quite sure that upon this very blind side itself may not be the very approach that will prove fatal to this whole scheme.

Sir, in attempting to establish this fund and to justify this legislation, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] brought forth an argument of another kind. He presented for the consideration of the Senate as a reason justifying severe measures toward these roads the fact that those who contracted with the companies to build them had cheated the roads themselves, and he paraded here in support of that argument the enormous profits made out of the roads themselves by those who contracted with the companies to build them. Precisely the same argument and for the same purpose was used here in another debate. You will find in a speech delivered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] on the 12th of January a table showing the enormous profits made out of the Government of the United States by those who dealt with the United States in the beginning in the purchase of her bonds. I do not know how accurate the table is; I think I have seen it in at least thirty speeches this winter. It had its origin five or six years ago, and it is always used with precisely the same aid to argument. The position, as I understood it, of the Senator from North Carolina was that those who contracted with these railroads had made enormous profits out of them, and that lent some sort of support to measures that otherwise would not be entirely justifiable. The table to which I allude shows that those men made the enormous profit of $1,012,500,000 out of the United States in the purchase of the bonds of the United States; and upon the same parity of reasoning some support to a particular treatment by the United States of those bonds is derived from the fact that those men are alleged to have made an enormous profit out of them. So I understood the argument of the Senator from North Carolina to be that the men who built these roads for the roads themselves, no matter by what sort of unjustifiable machinery it was done, had made thereby enormous profits out of the roads, and we could well treat the roads in the light of that fact.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not suppose the honorable Senator from Massachusetts desires to place me or anything I said in a false light. What I said was this, and I think it was legitimate, that it was proper that we should inquire into the history, the practices, and the spirit of these corporations in order to enable us to determine what measures we ought to take for the protection of the Government; and it was in that view that I referred to their history and their practices and to the spirit manifested by them. As I understand, the principal stockholders in the Central Pacific Railroad Company, particularly at the time the frauds were perpetrated on the Government, are the same stockholders now, and that in very large measure the stockholders in the Union Pacific are the same. But whether that be so or not, I maintain that it was fair, legitimate, and proper that the Senate should inquire into the history, the practices, and the spirit of these corporations in order to determine what legislation is necessary for the protection of the Government. If we find that they perpetrated frauds on the Government; if we find that they have been obstinate and are so now, that they are insolent in their demands, then surely that is an argument which addresses itself to us in favor of measures that are vigorous and strong and decisive; and it was in that view that I referred to their history. I did not desire to do them an injustice. I am very sure I did not. I would not deprive them of one dollar of their property to-day. But in the exercise of the power reserved to Congress, and which is in Congress even without reservation, I do say that Congress owes it to the Government and to the people of the Union to provide a measure by which they can be protected.

Mr. DAWES. I do not understand the explanation of the Senator from North Carolina to militate against anything I have said. I understood the purpose of the Senator to be, as he states it, to show that those who built the roads for the corporation had made enormous profits, and had done it fraudulently, out of the corporations.

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I do not care what they made, if they made it legitimately they are entitled to be protected. That weighs nothing with me.

Mr. DAWES. To show how utterly unsafe a sinking fund of this character is if left to the changing sentiment of the majority, to which I have already alluded, I want to call the attention of the Senate to another fact. The Committee on the Judiciary themselves, since this matter came under their consideration, have changed their views three times. The first report from the Judiciary Committee upon the subject of the relations of the Government to these roads concluded in these words:

Your committee were not called upon to criticize the wisdom of these acts of Congress, but to answer as to their true construction; and, in discharging this duty, the committee is obliged to report the law as it is, without regard to what they might desire it to be. It is proper, however, to suggest that the company is clearly bound to keep its road in repair and in use; and any failure of the company in this respect would authorize the Government to take possession of the road. The refusal of the company to perform the services for the Government provided for by the sixth section, or to appropriate 5 per cent of its net proceeds, would also authorize the Government to take possession. But while the company shall continue to comply with these requirements, the Government, if it has not all the security it might desire, has all it ever stipulated for, and has no right to complain. And at the maturity of the bonds, if the company fail to pay principal and interest, the Government may take possession of the road, which the company, in the mean time, must keep in use and repair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator be good enough to tell us in answer to what resolution of the Senate that report was made; whether it was not a resolution directing the Committee on the Judiciary to report the existing state of the law without any reference to any power of Congress to change it?

Mr. DAWES. Very likely it was.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Very likely;" but you had better state it.

Mr. DAWES. I state it so far as I am able to state it from the report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, who were authorized by resolution of the Senate of December 9, 1870, to inquire and report whether the railway companies which have received aid in bonds of the United States are lawfully bound to reimburse the United States for interest paid on such bonds before the maturity of the principal thereof, and, if so, what legislation, if any, is necessary to compel such reimbursement; and by resolution of February 16, 1871, were instructed to inquire and report as to the right of the Treasury Department to retain all the compensation for services rendered for the United States by the Union Pacific Railroad and its branches, to apply on the interest of the bonds issued by the United States to aid in the construction of said roads, respectfully report.

And among other things they report this:

But, while the company shall continue to comply with these requirements, the Government, if it has not all the security it might desire, has all it ever stipulated for, and has no right to complain.

And its remedy is that—

At the maturity of the bonds, if the company fail to pay principal and interest, the Government may take possession of the road which the company, in the mean time, must keep in use and repair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The peculiarity about my friend's reading, which he did not intend undoubtedly, is that he has imported from his own inner consciousness into his reading two or three words.

Mr. DAWES. What are those?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where he proceeds to say that its remedy is at the end of the time to do so and so. I am not able to see that in the report.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to be entirely fair and frank—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know my friend does, or I should not have interrupted him.

Mr. DAWES. I did not suppose anybody who was looking at me would presume when I said "that the remedy is" that I was reading those words from the book. I had once read the report of the committee, word for word, just as it is in the book already, and, after reading part of it again, I said "the remedy is," and then I read:

At the maturity of the bonds, if the company fail to pay principal and interest, the Government may take possession of the road which the company, in the mean time, must keep in use and repair.

If the Senator inferred that I meant to use those words "the remedy is" as part of the report, it is due to him that I should disabuse him of that impression.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not myself make that inference; but any person in the public reading the RECORD to-morrow would suppose that that committee has said that "the remedy," that is to say the only remedy that Congress had, if they were not satisfied with the existing state of things, was to wait until the bonds mature. That the committee never said and were never called upon to say and never intended to say.

Mr. DAWES. I want to read it once more, and if the Senator has not confidence in my reading he may look over me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have entire confidence when you read.

Mr. DAWES:

But, while the company shall continue to comply with these requirements the Government, if it has not all the security it might desire, has all it ever stipulated for, and has no right to complain. And at the maturity of the bonds, if the company fail to pay principal and interest, the Government may take possession of the road which the company, in the mean time, must keep in use and repair.

If that is precisely the same position that the Judiciary Committee occupies now, then I have misunderstood the two positions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order not to misunderstand my honorable friend from Massachusetts, whose sincerity I do not doubt, I wish to ask him if he understands that report to mean, in answer to that resolution asking the committee to report what the state of the law then was, that Congress had no power to change the regulations that already existed in respect of security to the public interests and to private rights?

Mr. DAWES. I understand the report to mean precisely what it says.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not answer the question.

Mr. DAWES. When it said that the United States determined what security it would take for what it gave, and if it did not take enough had not any right to complain, I did understand it (and the Senator must take my answer as explicit) to mean the common notion that when they made their contract they ought to be satisfied with it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator entirely misunderstands the report, then.

Mr. DAWES. That was one position occupied by the Judiciary Committee. Two years ago the committee reported a bill—

Mr. THURMAN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator if it is disagreeable to him, but I should like to say one word on that first report.

Mr. DAWES. I shall be through this point in a moment and then the Senator can do so.

Mr. THURMAN. It is in reference to the report that he has just read from that I wish to say a word.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. THURMAN. That report was made under these circumstances: under the law as it stood at that time and as it now stands, the Government agreed to pay to the companies one-half of the transportation account. That, I say, is the law, and that will continue to be the law if it should not be altered by Congress. Mr. Akerman, the Attorney-General, gave an opinion that the Government might offset against that half of the transportation account due by it to the companies an equal amount of the interest which it paid on the subsidy bonds upon the law of offsets. It was distinctly upon that ground as a right to offset what the Government had paid for the companies upon the subsidy bonds against what the Government owed the companies for transportation; and the question was whether the Government had that right of offset as the law then stood. That was the whole question that was referred to the Judiciary Committee. It involved simply a consideration of what was the law then, and no question whatsoever of what ought to be the law, no question whatever of the power of Congress to alter, add to, amend, or repeal the charter. No such question was in the remotest degree involved in that inquiry. The Judiciary Committee reported that as the law then stood the right of offset did not exist, that the companies were not bound to pay the interest until the maturity of the bonds.

The only question that was submitted to the committee was whether the Attorney-General's opinion was correct. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate reported that that opinion was erroneous and that under the law as it then stood the Government was bound to pay the half-transportation account to the companies annually, and they accordingly reported a bill requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to comply with the law. That bill passed this body. The Judiciary Committee of the House reported the same way, and the bill passed the House. Two years after, there being much dissatisfaction with the conclusion at which the two committees had arrived, and at which the two Houses had arrived, in order to raise the question for judicial determination, another act or resolution was passed, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold the half-transportation account, and authorizing these companies to bring suit in the Court of Claims so as to test the question judicially. That was done. The money was accordingly withheld, simply for the purpose of making a judicial question for the determination of the courts. The Court of Claims decided as the two Judiciary Committees had decided, and as the two Houses had decided; and, on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed that decision. That is all there is of it.

Mr. DAWES. Doubtless the Senator has stated the circumstances under which the Judiciary Committee submitted the report, and I think I have stated accurately the language of the report. I wish to call attention now to the fact that two years ago the Judiciary Committee reported a bill to this effect:

Be it enacted, &c. That the net earnings mentioned in said act of 1862 of said railroad companies, respectively, shall be ascertained by deducting from the gross amount of their earnings respectively the necessary and actual expenses of operating the same and keeping the same in a state of repair, and not otherwise, and excluding from consideration all sums owing or paid by said companies respectively for interest upon any portion of their indebtedness; and the foregoing provision shall be deemed and taken as an amendment of said act of 1862 as well as of said act of 1862.

Now, in the bill before us, they have changed their mind since then; they use the following language:

That the net earnings mentioned in said act of 1862 of said railroad companies, respectively, shall be ascertained by deducting from the gross amount of their earnings respectively the necessary expenses actually paid within the year in operating the same and keeping the same in a state of repair, and also the sum paid by them respectively within the year in discharge of interest on their first mortgage bonds, whose lien has priority over the lien of the United States, and excluding from consideration all sums owing or paid by said companies respectively for interest upon any other portion of their indebtedness.

The personnel of the Judiciary Committee has not changed more during the years that these three positions have been entertained by that committee than the personnel of Congress and the personnel of Congress in the future; and, if these three positions of the Judiciary Committee are not alike, it only shows that in the few years that have transpired since this matter has been before Congress for adjudication the Judiciary Committee have changed their minds and altered their ideas of what would be just and fair and proper for the sinking fund about to be created. Two years ago they were of opinion that the sinking fund should include the net earnings substantially, this very interest which they think now, for reasons they have given, ought to be excluded from the sinking fund.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator will look at the bill reported two years ago he will find that practically there is very little, if any, difference between that and the present bill in the particular to which he refers, because it was expressly provided in that bill that if in any year 75 per cent. of the net earnings of the road, as defined in the first section, should be insufficient to pay the interest upon the first mortgage, then the Secretary of the Treasury was bound to make an abatement so that that interest would be paid. Thus under that bill, and under this bill, the provision is complete for the payment of the interest on the first mortgage before there can be anything paid into the sinking fund.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator himself to call the attention of the Senate to this change in the provisions of the bill and to give a reason for this change and modification. I do not speak of it in reproach or criticism. I only allude to the fact that even the Judiciary Committee of the Senate have changed their views in relation to what should constitute this sinking fund, and being at perfect liberty, as they say, in any year that is to come between now and 1898 to alter, amend, or repeal this law, what assurance can we have that Congress itself will not undergo as much change as the Judiciary Committee, whose personnel certainly is as conservative and as certain as that of Congress itself? That is the force of the argument, if there be anything in it.

The very treatment which this committee have given the subject is the evidence itself that in the years that are to come the changes in the relation of these roads and this fund to the public and to the United States are certain to be such as to tell upon its security and its permanency.

Before I sit down, I wish to call attention to the fact that in support of this bill the position is taken that it is necessary to provide protection against the contemplated acts of bankruptcy on the part of these roads. A bankrupt act cannot be enacted in Congress applicable to a single estate. A bankrupt act to be constitutional must be uniform and applicable to all estates and to all persons. Let me read what the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] gives as one of the reasons for justifying the enactment of this bill:

Now, may not the remedy be advanced without injustice to the stockholders? If the conduct of the officers manifests an unmistakable purpose to bring the corporation to a state of bankruptcy, if they shall refuse to be governed by the ordinary rules of business prudence and care, the necessity is obvious to refuse to provide a sinking fund for the payment of debts to mature in the future that cannot otherwise be paid. Can they with any propriety object that the law-making power shall require them to do so or provide a remedy that will protect the creditor against a meditated wrong?

That is an attempt to make applicable to a single estate the principles of the bankrupt law, and I can find no authority for the Government of the United States to enact any other than a uniform system of bankruptcy. The cases which the Senator cites from his own State and Georgia I desire to read to the Senate, and see whether they apply to this bill. The Senator says:

In my State and the State that is represented by the honorable Senator from Georgia, we have a law providing that, if a debtor in anticipation of the time of payment of a debt is making a fraudulent conveyance of his property with a view to evade the payment of that debt, the creditor may sue out an attachment and impound the property and hold it—under the jurisdiction of the courts until the debt shall become due. This is statutory law; but has anybody ever questioned the power of the Legislature to enact such?

Hold it how, Mr. President?—

Most certainly not. If this Legislature should provide a tribunal into which these railroad companies could be summoned upon an allegation that they were about to make conveyance of their property for perversion of their funds, to the defrauding of their creditors, and the court should be clothed with power to pass judicially upon that question, it would meet the Tennessee and the Georgia statutes, and not otherwise. But that is not the proposition in this bill. The proposition in this bill is to find the fact here and adjudicate it here. It is based upon the allegation here in this body that these roads are about to make fraudulent conveyances and to commit acts of bankruptcy, and then to pass judgment here. The Senator from Vermont has brought this out more strongly in the manner in which he states it:

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senator from Georgia carefully leaves out the proposition that I put to him, that upon the universal principles of law applied to corporations, no matter whether you have a mortgage security or not, every dollar of the assets and income of a corporation is a trust fund for the payment of its creditors first, and for division among its stockholders afterward. Therefore, if a corporation, without regard to whether there is a mortgage lien or not, divides up its earnings among its stockholders to the danger of its creditors, it is violating the law of its existence.

And the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] adopts this language and says:

But there is another reason which has been alluded to by the Senator from Vermont, or which was alluded to a few months ago, why this legislation may take place. He stated, and he stated what is unquestionably the law, that the property of every corporation is a trust fund for the payment of its debts, made so by indentment of law.

True, but does that authorize Congress to administer the trust? Does that authorize Congress to constitute itself into a court and judicially decide whether the trustee is perverting the fund or not? It is perfectly competent, I doubt not, for Congress to erect, if there is none as yet, a judicial tribunal into which we can summon this corporation or anybody else clothed with a trust, upon an allegation that it is perverting the trust, but it is a judicial tribunal, and not a legislative one, that must administer trusts. The legislative authority may establish the trust, the legislative authority may define the powers of the trustee, the legislative authority may declare that certain acts shall constitute a perversion of the trust; but whether those acts have been performed or not, whether that trust has been perverted or not, whether the trustee is false to his trust or not, is a judicial question and must be decided in a tribunal where the parties can be heard and can deny, if they please, the allegations upon which this whole bill rests, if it rests upon the claim of a trusteeship at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, does not my friend's conclusion about that depend a little on an underlying question, as to whether the legislative authority over this corporation in this particular case and other corporations in other cases to declare a foundation for such a trust and require a duty of paying in it, is the exercise of constitutional authority; in other words, whether there does not reside in the legislative power of visitation of public corporations or quasi-public corporations created or authorized by it to do particular things, the authority to direct how much of the corporate funds shall be divided among the stockholders, and so taken away from the creditors, and how much, as in Massachusetts, shall be paid over to some hospital or whatever it may be? If there is the legislative power of visitation and requirement, then undoubtedly under that just as under this bill it remains for the judicial authority to carry into execution and enforce the provisions which the legislative authority has made.

Mr. DAWES. I had stated just exactly the qualifications which I understand the Senator from Vermont to restate for me in so much better language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then we agree.

Mr. DAWES. I stated that it is competent for the legislative power to define the trust, to declare what it shall be, to declare what shall be the penalty for the violation of it, what the trust has been established for. The relation between these roads and the Government, according to the theory of the Judiciary Committee bill itself, is that of a trustee and cestui que trust. The Government is to hold this fund in trust for the creditors and stockholders. It is to hold it according to established law and liability. No new liability not existing before can be imposed upon the companies inconsistent with the terms upon which they accepted the trust without violating the contract upon which they accepted it. I do not understand this requirement to be based upon any such ground as that, but upon the simple ground that they are trustees holding trust funds, and therefore, if they undertook, as the Senator from Tennessee said they were proposing to do, an act of bankruptcy, dividing up in the shape of dividends funds which belong to creditors and stockholders, doing that act or proposing to do that act which he styled an act of bankruptcy at one time and a perversion of trust at another, they are to be visited with this law. I say that if you have not a court of sufficiently broad jurisdiction to call them to an account, it is your duty to make the court, and not assume the judicial function here, because it depends upon questions of fact and of law, to be judicially determined, whether they have committed the act of bankruptcy or breach of trust, or contemplated committing either, which are made the foundation and justification for the law itself.

I have tired the Senate, I am conscious. I have very imperfectly presented what seem to me to be some objections lying essentially at the bottom to the sinking fund as proposed by the Judiciary Committee; not that I have the slightest desire to prevent the establishment of a sinking fund; but I desire that one shall be established which shall last after the disposition now prevalent universally in Congress shall have passed away. I wish to provide a sinking fund that shall outlive any temporary disposition; that shall withstand any change of public sentiment; that shall withstand any encroachments upon it that may be made through corrupt motives, through a false public sentiment, through a crowding of these corridors with the lobbyists of these railroad companies, against this bill or of competing roads for this or any other bill; that shall stand until the purposes of its creation have been accomplished, and the indebtedness of these roads liquidated and they stand unincumbered among the monuments of the courage of the United States manifested in time of peril, able to fulfill all of the functions and all of the powers devolving upon this and its sister roads across the continent, building up States, developing uninhabited places, making rich and strong the nation in the years that are to come.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I correctly understand the Senator from Massachusetts he means to maintain that he believes this bill reported from the Judiciary Committee requiring the establishment of this sinking fund to be unconstitutional as a violation of private rights in undertaking to require these corporations, instead of dividing up their profits among their stockholders, to take a part of them and keep them in a safe place for the benefit of their creditors. I ask him if I am right about that?

Mr. DAWES. So far as I discussed the constitutionality of the bill, it was in this way: that if it were the intention of the bill to establish Congress into a court of equity to administer trusts, there was no authority in the Constitution for that purpose; and if it was the object of the bill to provide a special law of bankruptcy applicable to a single estate, there was no authority in Congress for the enactment of any such law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But, Mr. President, the Senator has not answered my question. I am unable to know from what he states whether he believes this bill to be constitutional or not constitutional. If he does not wish to express an opinion, that is one thing; if he does, I shall be glad to have him state it.

Mr. DAWES. I stated that it was endeavored by the Senator from Tennessee to find support for this bill in the statement that these roads were contemplating acts of bankruptcy and a conveyance of their estates to avoid paying their debts, and if that were so it was just like a law of Tennessee and of Georgia which summoned them into a court and impounded their property until they answered to that charge in court. I answered that reason for supporting this bill by saying that an act of bankruptcy could not be made applicable to this estate alone, and if it were an attempt to administer a trust it could not find any support in the Constitution. Thus far and no further have I discussed the question of the constitutionality of this bill. I do not desire to enter, as I stated in the beginning I had no intention of entering, into any contest or controversy with the Judiciary Committee upon the general power of altering or amending the law of 1862 or of 1864; I was desirous of co-operating with them in obtaining a sinking fund that would have in it two elements; I did not care much about the details beyond that; one element was absolute security, and the other was accretions yearly that would be sure to exceed the accumulations of interest, and with those everything else would follow that I cared for.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Tennessee will excuse me, I am not able now to understand, what the Committee on the Judiciary I have no doubt would so gladly know, what the opinion of my honorable friend from Massachusetts is as to the constitutionality of the bill, as he understands it, no matter how the Senator from Tennessee understands it or his grounds or mine; but I should be glad to know and the Senate would be glad to know, as the Senator has evidently studied the subject and is a master of all the objections to getting on, what his opinion is as to the constitutionality of this bill in the light in which he reads it. If he is willing to answer, I should like to have the benefit of his views; if he is not, of course I have nothing to say.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I am somewhat weary and it is late in the afternoon. If I am to be put upon the witness stand under the cross-examination of the Senator from Vermont at any great length, I should like to have it done in the morning. If it is essential to understanding what I have said that what I have not said and what I have declined to argue shall be argued by me, in my poor way I will do as well as I can in the morning.

I will say to the Senator that in regard to some features of this bill I should like to have some more satisfactory reason given for their constitutionality than I have yet heard; and to follow his example a moment ago, I think I shall sit down until he has given a satisfactory reason for the constitutionality of some features contained in the Judiciary Committee bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I am entirely satisfied with the answer of my friend, because it is perfectly luminous. If he would be only kind enough to point out the features that still are obscure to him, then the committee will endeavor to see what they can do in the way of relieving his doubts; but which particular lineament it is that troubles him just now under the Constitution, he has not been kind enough to tell us, and I suppose he does not want to. The real fact—

Mr. DAWES. I did not hear the last remark of the Senator; but I imagine that he insists upon my making my speech in the way he shall mark out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; far from that.

Mr. DAWES. I have submitted some views. I do not suppose they are worth anything; I did not suppose they were before I submitted them; but there were some reasons which governed me in trying to make a sinking fund that I thought good. I am not to be forced from that line of remarks by anybody asserting any control over me, whatever control he may have over corporations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Far be it from me to exercise any control over my friend from Massachusetts. He had been kind enough to state that there were some features of this bill that he wished to hear a better reason for their constitutionality than he had yet heard, and my only attempt to exercise control over him, if that was it, was to invite him to tell us what those features were.

If that is offensive, then I apologize with the greatest possible humility. If the Senator has not yet discovered which the particular feature is, we can wait until to-morrow, until he can dig it over again and see where his trouble does lie, if he is not able now to find it. The trouble with the Senator's argument is that he has unhappily missed a discussion of the fundamental ground on which the bill stands even to his own mind, and that is the public power of this nation over public corporations and the particular power that these very acts creating one of these corporations and conferring privileges upon the other as a part of the contract, if you call it a contract, that the companies themselves have agreed to, that this tribunal should be at liberty according to its judgment and conscience to regulate their future conduct. That is it.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, then it is a power of visitation that is exercised here, is it, when you take the property of this corporation and all its future earnings, every dollar of them, and set them apart in a fund to hold for yourself until the end? That is a power of visitation, is it? And that is a proper power for the Legislature to exercise? I supposed that was the very power for a judicial tribunal to exercise. I supposed that was one of the incidents of the supervising power of a court over a trustee. I did not suppose the Legislature would do that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend seems to be—

Mr. MATTHEWS. Will my friend from Vermont allow me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not quite yet, if you please. I will take one at a time.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I merely wished to make an inquiry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But let me dispose of the inquiry of my friend from Massachusetts first. My friend from Massachusetts seems to have studied every part of this question except the particular one to which I addressed my inquiry. Now he comes to the power of visitation, to which I referred, and says he understands that to be a judicial power. So it is in respect to corporations to which the judicial power applies; but if he will only be good enough to look into the works on corporations he will see that in respect of those quasi-public corporations and indeed private corporations that have dealings with the public as a public, like common carriers, millers, &c., there is a legislative power of visitation that does not undertake to decide in the judicial sense of a final winding up and distribution of the assets by an edict, but undertakes to prescribe the duties which such corporations shall perform toward their creditors and toward the public, and which, when that prescription is made, just as in this case when this is made, it will be the business of the judicial power to see is duly carried into effect. That is the distinction which in the haste of my friend's studies he has evidently overlooked.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose that the Senator from Vermont calls this the power of visitation in the first section of the bill, when he defines what shall be the net earnings of this road by providing hereafter the net earnings of this road shall be so and so. The United States lent these roads certain bonds due, say, in 1898, except so far as they should be paid presently by one-half of the transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings. They are due presently to that extent, and as to the remainder in 1898. Now, the creditor steps in and says he has the power to define what shall constitute net earnings; that is, to say how much of these bonds shall be presently due and how much shall be left till 1898. The creditor can say that the net earnings, as the Judiciary Committee proposed in 1876, shall be all excluding interest on the first-mortgage bonds, and therefore they can make more of these bonds payable in present than in 1898. When they say that the net earnings shall not include the interest on the first-mortgage bonds, they say there shall not be so much due in present. That is to say, the creditor holding the obligation of the debtor is at liberty himself to say how much of this debt is due to-day and how much is due twenty years hence, and he can determine from year to year, the creditor holding the obligation, and I understand the Senator from Vermont to say that that is the power of visitation. It is the power of visitation with a vengeance!

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, the power to define what is net earnings in 1876 that the Senator speaks of was in my opinion a clear power of Congress if there had been no provision in the charters and grants reserving the power to control and regulate the management of these corporations, and the Senator will find, if he will turn to the last volume of the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States respecting the exercise of similar powers by the Legislatures of the various States, a great many cases all in a row that arose between States and railroad companies of exactly that character. But there is no inconsistency either in point of theory or in point of practice between what was reported in 1876 and this. In this instance now the committee thought it better to put into what was the definition of net earnings what does not belong to net earnings under any just construction of that term; and if you look at all the railroad reports to their stockholders you will see that we are right about that; they do not put in the payment of interest as a deduction from earnings and strike out a balance. It was to put into that what did not belong to it naturally or legally, a power in these corporations to apply as a part of their net earnings, before the lien of the other creditors would come in, this money necessary for the payment of interest on the first-mortgage bonds, for the reason of simple policy and good sense that if this money was thus applied, as another section of this act provides it shall be, to the payment of the interest on the first-mortgage bonds, then they had applied it to the very uses to which it ought to be applied instead of dividing it among their stockholders; and so as a matter of convenience that addition to the true meaning of net earnings was put in. If the Senator has any fault to find with that as a practical matter, that is one thing; I do not suppose he has; but if he refers to it as an evidence that the opinion of the committee has changed at all in respect either of the theory or the policy of what these companies are not to divide among their stockholders but are to pay to their creditors, then he is vastly mistaken.

But now the Senator comes back again to the power of visitation which he calls the power of visitation with a vengeance. He says it is the right of the creditor at his will to say how much of the debt shall be due to-day and how much due to-morrow. Mr. President, I wish to state once more that the Senate of the United States, in my opinion, is not the creditor of these corporations any more than the judicial tribunal that sits next door to us is the creditor of these corporations when it in the exercise of its functions has to deal with them. We are not the creditor of the corporations in any earthly sense, either theoretical or practical. We are, unless we have been dealt with as I am sure no Senator has by these corporations themselves, a perfectly indifferent and impartial tribunal, to whom the corporations that accepted these privileges and benefits and grants agreed in the very charters of their incorporations and grants of their privileges there should be always referred, as an impartial arbitrator between them and the Treasury and between them and their creditors, the regulation and control of their affairs. That is our attitude. It does not do, therefore, in my opinion, for the Senator to say that the creditor is undertaking to deal unjustly and arbitrarily with the debtor. The Congress of the United States does not stand in any such attitude in my opinion, and I think I may safely say in the opinion of my friend if he will think of it a minute.

But now let us go another step. The Senator says that this does not fall within the power of visitation which he seems to have remembered now does exist to some extent somewhere, and I am not surprised that he concedes that much because of the decisions of the highest tribunal of his own State, none more honorable, none more respected, none more learned, none more conservative. It was long since decided there by a unanimous court upon principles of solid jurisprudence that it was within the competence of the legislative power of that State to declare that an incorporated company which by its charter was required to pay a certain portion of its net earnings or net profits—I forget which was the phrase, but it is of no consequence now—to certain public hospitals in that State and to declare afterwards that the meaning of the term "net earnings" or "net profits" should be so and so, different from what its meaning was in the original charter, and that thus defined a certain balance and proportion of net earnings should be paid to those hospitals. The companies resisted (just as the companies here through their friends resist) most manfully and stoutly the constitutional right of the Legislature of that State having no power to impair the obligation of contracts to do anything of the kind; but the venerable Chief-Justice Shaw and the honored Mr. Justice Dewey and all the others, by a unanimous decision that has stood from that day to this without question and certainly without reproach, said that was an entirely untenable position because the general laws of that State had already provided that every act of incorporation hereafter granted should be subject to legislative control to alter, amend, or repeal, reserving to the Legislature, in spite of their having made a contract by such charter, this power of complete visitation and control. The court held, therefore, that there was nothing in the objection made by the companies that the Legislature had undertaken to put a new definition upon the term "net earnings" or "net profits" to make it to include a larger sum of the earnings of the corporation than had by the original charters been the true construction. If that is the law, as I have no doubt it is and as the Senator has no doubt it is, how can he say that we are transcending the just limits of constitutional authority or the just limits of the proper exercise of this power of legislative visitation to which I have called the attention of the Senator, when we say in almost the very same words that the net earnings of these companies shall be defined and understood to be what every report of every company to its stockholders has always defined them to be; and that is the result after the payment of the operating expenses of the company and not including the payment of its debt or the interest upon its funded debt. I should be glad to know how the Senator distinguishes. No distinction can be made in my opinion.

Mr. DAWES. Of course I yield my opinion to that of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only state the opinion of his own supreme court.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator said no distinction could be made, in his opinion. I say I yield my opinion to his. I only say this, that when he can find a case in Massachusetts where the State of Massachusetts holding the obligation of any corporation or any individual payable in presenti by certain terms and in futuro as to the remainder, the supreme court of Massachusetts has decided that it is competent for the Legislature of that State to make the in presenti part of it just as large or just as small as they please, or change it when they please—when he shows me that the venerable Chief-Justice Shaw and Mr. Justice Dewey or any other justice has said that was in the power of Massachusetts, then I will admit he has a precedent; not till then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly in substance what those venerable justices and that venerable court decided.

Mr. DAWES. It is not, I beg leave to say. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him. It is not that. There is all the difference in the world between this case and the one he cites. Here is the creditor assuming, because nobody can call it to account for so assuming, to interpret the contract that he has made with his debtor, and make what he has to pay to-day just as much as he pleases and making the balance to be paid twenty years hence just as small as the creditor pleases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President, we will even take that case. What is a creditor? Is it not a person or a being, a corporation or a State, or whatever it may be, that according to the existing arrangement is entitled to have a certain sum of money paid to it? I take it that is what a creditor is. Now the State of Massachusetts in the very instance to which I have referred, under the charter of incorporation of an insurance company I believe it was—but no matter what the company was—was entitled to have paid to it for certain purposes named, its hospital purposes, a certain percentage of the net earnings of the company. So it was a creditor of that company in the general sense of that term. It was a being entitled to receive from the company a certain sum of money a year. Now that same creditor in the sense in which the Senator speaks of it, the Legislature (which I say is not the creditor at all), the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts undertook to say "we will change the definition of net earnings upon which you are to compute the sum that you are to pay into our treasury or to our hospital, and so arrange it that by its meaning you are obliged to pay more than you were before."

That the company resisted, and said it violated justice, and violated the contract that had been made. The supreme court of that State said that that was a perfectly lawful and proper thing to do. The substance and effect of it was that by an act of legislative will in changing the definition of the terms used in the charter the company was obliged to pay money to-day that it was not obliged to pay yesterday. If that is not a parallel case—clear up to the hilt, as the saying is, I should like to know what is; and as my friend from Ohio suggests, it is still more. If the Legislature requires them to pay more than they would ever be bound to pay, as was the case in Massachusetts, because there was no ultimate debt to be paid, but it was a yearly stipend that was to be paid into this hospital fund, then according to the Senator it would be all right. True, that is not this case; but it goes a great deal further.

In this case this bill does not provide for making anything due to-day that is not due till to-morrow at all. It does not take a dollar of money from these companies of any kind, not a penny. It only says that they shall keep the money in a safe place until their debt is due, and then it shall be kept for the benefit of the creditors and applied accordingly. There is therefore no taking by this bill of money that is due next year and making it due to-day. It only says that the income of these companies derived from tolls and franchises, that Congress alone has empowered them to take, shall not be put where nobody can get it that is entitled to it in the fulfillment of their obligations, but it shall be preserved in order to meet those obligations.

Is that saying that a debt which is due next year is due to-day? Far from it. Is that saying that a debt that is not due at all shall be made a lien upon anything. Far from it. It is only saying that the people who are engaged in these public operations shall keep themselves in an attitude where, when the time comes that they are called upon to apply their assets to the payment of their debts, there shall be some assets to apply; and that the Senator says is taking the property of A, is an invasion of private rights, and undertaking to turn ourselves into a judicial tribunal to dispose of the assets of these companies. Nothing of the kind, Mr. President; that all rests in the inventive genius of the friends of these corporations who have instilled into the minds of Senators somewhere or somehow the notion that we are going to disturb the value of some of these subsequent securities where they are held: but instead of disturbing the value of subsequent securities we are conserving them by every step we take in this direction. Every million dollars that is saved and is not put beyond the reach of creditors by being divided among the stockholders is a million of dollars saved to the very lowest security there is that these railroad companies owe. No matter how far off the bond is, be it third or fourth mortgage, or be it merely a general creditor who has no special security at all, every dollar that is preserved and not divided up among the stockholders is a dollar for him.

Whether you apply it to the first mortgage or the second mortgage or any mortgage, just to that extent it increases the assets of the company to be distributed in due order, as this bill says, according to law and under a judicial administration, if necessary, to everybody that has a right. Is not that right? Is not that equitable? It appears to me that it is; and there is the difference between my honorable friend and myself.

Every court, and latterly and most the Supreme Court of the United States has now settled as far as judicial decision can settle the power of State Legislatures in respect of these public corporations; and as to every corporation, be it private or public in its nature, that has to deal with public affairs, the general welfare of the public as carriers or millers or warehousemen or whatever, there rests in the Legislature the power of conserving its management to the protection of public interests and to the protection of its creditors. That is all. So I repeat, Mr. President, that we do not propose to make a debt due next year due to-day; we do not propose to take a part of the money of A and give it to B; but we only say to these corporations under this plenary power reserved in these charters and grants and under the visiting power that I have described that is universally laid down in all the books, that they shall so regulate the future administration of their affairs that they shall not pocket the money that they have earned from tolls and franchise to the injury of their creditors. That is the whole case.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Will the Senator be good enough to inform me what case it is in the Massachusetts reports that he refers to? The case of the Hospital Life Insurance Company?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is in 4 Gray; I do not remember the name of the case.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Now, I should like to inquire of the Senator what I rose to ask before, whether I understand him to mean that he justifies the bill of the Judiciary Committee upon an alleged power in Congress as the legislative authority to visit the corporation, and he cites the case in Gray and the cases in 4 Otto as instances of that power of visitation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir, I do not cite the case in Gray as an instance of that power of visitation, because by a previous act of the Legislature, a general act, it was provided that all corporations thereafter incorporated should have their charter subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal, and the case in 4 Gray was put without going into the question of visitation at all, because perhaps that was not a public corporation that dealt with the public except as private persons chose to deal with them in the way of insurance, which perhaps would not fall within the clause. The case there was put on the ground of exactly the words contained in the acts of Congress of 1862 and 1864, that the companies who had taken those charters and privileges had themselves contracted as a part of the contract that the Legislature should be the tribunal to decide as to their future management and operation, and therefore that it was competent for the Legislature in its discretion to decide what "net earnings" meant and what should be done with a certain percentage of them. And that would be entirely enough for this case, to say nothing of the power of visitation, which is the real power upon which rest the decisions in many of these later cases as it respects public corporations and as it respects private warehousemen, private individuals. But I do not put it on the ground of visitation alone; I think it may rest there with perfect safety. It is enough for my honorable friends from Ohio and from Massachusetts to say that instead of violating a contract or impairing it, in this instance we are doing precisely what the contract, if you call it that, provided we should do, and that is that we should alter, amend, or repeal these provisions according as the solemn and responsible judgment of Congress standing independent (just as much so as a judicial tribunal) between public interests and the private interests of creditors and these great corporations.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I think there might be more confidence felt in the emphatic declarations by the members of the Judiciary Committee as to what the law is if, in dealing with this subject heretofore, they had not come, sadly for themselves, so strongly into collision with the Supreme Court of the United States, and I think there might be more confidence in the fairness of their intentions if they were disposed, after having, as they said, submitted the case to the Supreme Court, to live up to the decision of the Supreme Court and to the rights of parties as ascertained by it.

Mr. THURMAN. What decision does the Senator refer to?

Mr. SARGENT. I intend to speak but a short time, and I will show the Senator fully before I get through.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to know what the collision between the Judiciary Committee and the Supreme Court is.

Mr. SARGENT. That is exactly what I am going to show in my own way, and if I am not permitted to do that I will yield the floor to the Senator. In 1871 the question arose whether the interest on the bonds was presently due, and whether the whole transportation money should be kept in the Treasury of the United States in order to be applied upon that interest, instead of one-half of it being paid to these companies. At that time a Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] offered the following amendment to an appropriation bill then pending:

In accordance with the fifth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay over, in money, to the Pacific Railroad Companies mentioned in said act and performing services for the United States, one-half of the compensation for such services heretofore or hereafter rendered.

To that proposition the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] offered an amendment which I will read, and he prefaced it with some remarks. Considerable debate having intervened, among others the present Secretary of the Treasury having spoken and insisted that there ought to be some judicial determination of the question whether this other half transportation should be retained in the Treasury or not, and covering that idea, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] offered his amendment, saying:

My colleague made a suggestion that there ought to be a judicial determination of this question. I am willing, for my own part, that Congress shall decide it, and decide it definitely; or I am willing that there may be a judicial determination, if that will be more satisfactory. Legal questions are much better argued in court than they are in legislative assemblies.

That was the opinion of the Senator in 1871.

I have, therefore, sitting here, drawn a rather crude substitute for the proposition of my colleague, which I will read, and perhaps he may be willing to adopt it instead of the amendment which he has offered. It is to insert after the amendment of the Senator from Nevada these words:

Provided, That for the purpose of procuring a judicial determination of the question whether the United States have a right to be repaid in full each installment of interest paid by them immediately upon the payment thereof, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to forthwith bring a suit against some one of said companies to recover an installment of interest paid by the United States, which suit shall be brought in the Court of Claims, and said court shall have jurisdiction thereof; and said suit shall have precedence on the calendar in said court over all other suits or cases; and either party to such suit may appeal from the decision of said court to the Supreme Court.

Upon this amendment so pending the Senator from Vermont who last addressed the Chair [Mr. EDMUNDS] spoke as follows:

I confess that I like the amendment of the Senator from Ohio who sits farthest from me [Mr. THURMAN] rather better than any of these; and for one reason especially; that, as a matter of curiosity, I should be glad to find out what principles of construction are to be adopted by our courts in construing statutes, and how far the debates (which are undertaken to be foisted in here to determine what the statutes mean) have a place in modern jurisprudence.

The power of the Judiciary Committee, the power of Congress, has grown wonderfully since that time. To discuss these questions in Congress then, to attempt to pass upon them, was foisting them in. This bill, however, goes upon the theory that whatever the Supreme Court may have decided at that time, it is proper now to have this legislative jurisprudence, according to the newly invented term of the Senator from Vermont, and I suppose he does not now consider that that is being foisted in here:

I should be very glad indeed to have the Supreme Court of the United States determine what the law is on this question. If it determines it in favor of the companies, there is an end of the question.

The Supreme Court did decide it in favor of the companies, and that is the "end of the question." The Supreme Court decided that the companies had a right to have one-half the transportation money paid over to them, and that was the "end of the question," was it? They decided that the interest was not presently due. You mean to treat it as if it were presently due; indirectly you attempt to do what you are not allowed by the court to do directly. You were not allowed directly to lock it up in the Treasury and say it should not be paid over to these parties, and therefore you pass it from your right hand into your left; therefore you invent what you call a sinking fund, and claim a power over these corporations certainly not named in the original act, which enables you now to come in and take not only this but an amount equal to 25 per cent. of the net earnings of the companies. I ask where is the "end of the question?" The bill you here introduce and ask the Senate to adopt gives us a long vista of congressional action in the future, and the Senator himself declared with great heat last night, in reply to the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] that even if the companies lived up to this bill in all its terms in conscientiousness and exactness, it should not stay further legislation against them. It is complained that they come to Washington by their agents. But if they stay away from the city of Washington and never offend the Senator from Vermont by getting wearying constituents of his to go to his house and committee-room to plead that the security of bonds be not disturbed, that shall do them no good in restraining further aggression. It seems to be troublesome to be approached even in a respectful way, and we are not to be moved, even like the unjust judge of Scripture, by much asking. Though none of these importunities trouble the leisure of Senators hereafter, and the railroad companies stay away and keep away their friends, and do all that we demand of them, pay the 5 per cent. and the whole transportation, and hundreds of thousands of dollars besides, as we now with full light on the subject demand, nevertheless you insist that your action shall have no finality, but your demands shall be increased at your will until every right given to them by previous statutes is taken away if you so please. Oh, yes, that was to be the "end of the question!" It rather looks like the beginning. It would be better to make an end of it by confiscating the roads and punishing the men who dared to build them under the inducement held out by legislative contracts, not worth for their protection the paper they were printed on. A statutory contract, it seems, is of less sanctity than "legislative jurisprudence." The latter is used to destroy the former. It is a kind of Flora McFlimsey affair, which "is binding on you and not binding on me."

The Senator from Vermont goes on:

If it determines it in favor of the United States, as we cannot possibly suppose it will after the report of our learned brethren on the Judiciary Committee—

It seems to me that was rather like a sneer at "our learned brethren on the Judiciary Committee"— then of course there will be an end of the question, and all parties will be satisfied.

That is, if the Supreme Court of the United States should decide that the other half of the transportation could be retained by the Government and that the interest was presently due and was paid, then the Government would be satisfied; and yet by this very bill there is a proposition to go even beyond that, when the Supreme Court has said exactly the other thing, and to pile up a sinking fund, not merely taking care of the interest, which is not due, but of the principal, and not merely the principal of the amount due to the Government but of the other debts that are owed by the companies and are secured by first-mortgage liens.

With what would all parties be satisfied? With the "end of the question" which gave to the Government its interest as it was paid. There was no talk here of repudiating contracts or amending or repealing them. It was a mere construction that was aimed at, and whichever way the Supreme Court might decide the question was ended.

But next to the amendment of my friend from Ohio farthest from me, [Mr. THURMAN,] or the substance of it, I think that of the Senator from Ohio near me [Mr. Sherman] is the one to which no man who is honest and just—and of course that includes every Senator—would object.

Now, to show the spirit of that debate and to show how far certain Senators went in declaring that the law as subsequently given by the Supreme Court could not be law, and how far Senators who sympathize with this present movement were then disposed to go in denouncing the action of the railroad companies in claiming the rights which they subsequently asserted in the Court of Claims, and which were vindicated by the United States Supreme Court, I want to read a remark made by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] I am aware that he is not a member of the Judiciary Committee, but still he is a lawyer, and I have no doubt will declare that this was his legal opinion at that time. I do him no injustice in recalling his remarks, although founded on an error in law. I observe he is absent. I refer to the Congressional Globe of 1872-73, No. 2, when the proposition came up again and an amendment of the same character was offered by the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Delaware said:

The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, as it has been perfected and as last read by him, meets my entire approval, and I think it a most just and reasonable proposition that the Congress of the United States should now interpose and through its courts endeavor to have a proper solution of this question to save further outlays of public money, especially in the face of the inordinate and monstrous assumptions which have been made by the friends of these railway corporations for a postponement of the payment of their obligation to pay the interest upon the bonds issued by the United States.

That very monstrous and inordinate proposition—the Senator is now in his seat, and I am glad of it—was the very one that was submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it decided that, under the contract made by Congress with these companies, the proposition was not monstrous and was not inordinate; that these had the right which they asserted; and yet it was the whole theory of the legislation favored by this Senator and the Senator from Vermont at that time, and the amendment of the latter meant just that, that the companies did not have any such rights. Therefore I say, as I said before, that if the members of the Judiciary Committee had been more fortunate in the conflicts which they have had with the Supreme Court of the United States in their interpretation of these contracts heretofore, there might be more confidence in the discretion with which they now decide upon these things. And, furthermore, if they had, after submitting this matter to the Supreme Court of the United States, allowed it to be an end of the thing, as the Senator from Vermont then declared, and as the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Sherman, from whose remarks I have not read, declared, and other Senators said, then I might believe that there is a desire for fair play in their positions at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from California certainly does not mean to say that the Judiciary Committee has got into a difference of opinion with the Supreme Court on the law as it was, because the Judiciary Committee reported that the law was just as the Supreme Court have since said that it was.

Mr. SARGENT. I referred to members of the Judiciary Committee, and not to the Judiciary Committee itself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah!

Mr. SARGENT. I referred to the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I referred to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] I referred to the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] not a member of the committee. The member of the Judiciary Committee whom I named, Mr. Stewart, and the others have passed away. The Supreme Court vindicated their judgment notwithstanding the sneers of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it so happens that the Senator from Ohio agreed with the Supreme Court of the United States, that the law as it stood did not require the companies to pay the interest that the United States paid from year to year as soon as the United States paid it. So I do not see that the Senator from Ohio is put into any very disagreeable position, nor the Judiciary Committee. It happens that one member of the committee, being myself, thought the law was otherwise, as I think it is still, with great deference to the Senator from Ohio and to the Supreme Court; and I suppose that is an opinion that I am entitled here to still have without being guilty of any violation of the Constitution of the United States. Now the Senator says that I stated that if they so decided there was an end of the thing, as he last put it. I did not say that. I said "there will be an end of the question." So there would be. The question was whether the law as it stood authorized the United States to sue these companies for the interest it paid every half year on these bonds. The Supreme Court having decided that it does not, there is an end of the question, because the United States must sue these companies on the law as it stands in the courts of justice and I assume they will decide as they did before although we have often seen that even the Supreme Court of the United States sometimes changes its mind on very important questions, and it is very far from being certain that if my friend from California could be permitted to argue the side of the people before that court on that very question they would not, as they did in the legal-tender cases and in a good many others, conclude that they had made a mistake the first time and decide otherwise.

But all that the Judiciary Committee was called upon to do was to tell the Senate what it thought the law was as it stood; and in order to have that question decided by the courts a provision was made for having it tried. It was tried. The Judiciary Committee was never called upon until now and until the bill of last year to advise the Senate as to what it was wise that Congress should do in respect of controlling the management of these corporations for the protection of public and private interests. The Supreme Court has never yet decided or undertaken to decide that Congress has no such power. On the contrary, they have decided as to States, which certainly cannot have any greater power than Congress over such questions, that they have the fullest capacity to do this very sort of thing.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. THURMAN. Before that is done—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama wish to draw the motion?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to know who proposes to speak to-morrow on the pending bill. If any one does, I hope he will take the floor to-night for that purpose.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Then, if it is agreeable to the Senate, I will speak to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. THURMAN. My colleague takes the floor for to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio on the left [Mr. MATTHEWS] has the floor.

Mr. THURMAN. After what has been said by the Senator from Vermont, I do not feel that it is necessary for me to waste the time of the Senate in noticing the remarks of the Senator from California except to say that instead of fulfilling his promise to show a collision—that was the very word he used—between the Judiciary Committee and the Supreme Court of the United States, the case that he cites is one of a perfect concurrence between the Judiciary Committee and the Supreme Court. He said that the Judiciary Committee had made out so badly in its former collision with the Supreme Court that it had some feeling on this subject, when the fact shows that the Judiciary Committee and the Supreme Court were exactly of the same opinion. I do not know how long it will be necessary for me to repeat that the only question that was then before Congress or before the committee or before the courts was the question of what was the then status of the law. And, in regard to the amendment I offered, why, Mr. President, I offered that amendment because, although I agreed to the report made by the Judiciary Committee, I did not like, if I could possibly help it, that we should positively legislate on this subject, when it could be submitted to a judicial tribunal to determine what the law then was. Therefore, I suggested that a case be made.

Mr. EATON. Can we not make one now?

Mr. THURMAN. What! make a case to determine what Congress shall do under its power to alter, amend, or repeal! Yes, we can make a case. Pass this bill of the Judiciary Committee, and if these companies see fit to contest it, let them do it; but do not let us decide that we will do nothing but what they demand and thereby make a case impossible. Until we assert the power we believe we possess, how will you have any case? If we are to resolve all doubts against the Government, if we are to resolve all scruples against the exercise of any power whatever, if we are to be astute to find out that we are absolutely helpless, how will you ever get a case? If the bill of the Judiciary Committee is unconstitutional, the courts will so decide it. But they never will decide it unconstitutional unless it becomes a law, because they never can have a case to decide it. But I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate to-night.

Mr. SPENCER. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 3, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PRIVILEGES OF NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. BANKS. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to report back with an amendment the resolution referred to that committee in relation to the admission of correspondents of public journals to the halls and passage-ways adjoining the Hall of the House.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to consider the expediency of so amending the rules of the House as to provide "that one representative of each public journal that employs a permanent telegraphic correspondent for reporting the proceedings of Congress may be admitted, at the discretion of the Speaker, to the halls and passage-ways adjoining the Hall of the House."

Mr. BANKS. The Committee on Rules direct me to report an amendment striking out the word "telegraphic" before the word "correspondent," so that this shall apply to all permanent correspondents of public journals. I call the previous question upon the resolution and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARLISLE. This appears to be a resolution directing the Committee on Rules to inquire into the expediency of the amendment to the rules.

Mr. BANKS. The Committee on Rules reported back this resolution, with an amendment striking out the word "telegraphic," so as not to limit the privilege to telegraphic correspondents, but to let it be given to all public journals that employ permanent correspondents for reporting the proceedings of the House. The privilege granted by this resolution is not to admit any person to the floor of the Hall of the House, but to admit one correspondent of each journal described in the resolution to the passage-ways and halls adjoining the Hall of the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. The resolution is reported back in its original form as a direction to the committee to make an inquiry; and, if adopted by the House, will it be anything more than a repetition of the direction to make that inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the rules proposed in the resolution is contained between quotation marks.

Mr. EDEN. Would these correspondents under this resolution be allowed to come in on the floor of the House?

The SPEAKER. They would not. On the contrary, the Committee on Rules maintain the voice of the House, as expressed heretofore, that no one shall be allowed on the floor of the House except those named in the rule. This resolution does not propose to change that rule.

Mr. BANKS. It does not admit any person to the chamber which we occupy, but to the halls and passage-ways adjacent to the chamber, so that these correspondents can go around the chamber which we occupy; nothing more.

Mr. WOOD. Is it designed to relax the existing rule so as to allow persons to come upon the floor of the House? If so, I am opposed.

Mr. BANKS. It does not authorize the Speaker to allow any person to come upon the floor of the House who has not that right under the rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the correspondents of the press of the country complain that they do not now have facilities for calling out members of Congress to give them information. They ask the right to come and go to and fro through the lobby immediately behind the chair of the Speaker.

Mr. BANKS. It does not admit any persons to the cloak-rooms or to any room opening from the Hall of the House.

The SPEAKER. Nor to the committee-rooms of the House, which are under the control of the committees respectively.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There should be no objection to that, I think.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business of yesterday, being the resolutions reported from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

CHARGES AGAINST THE DOORKEEPER.

The resolutions were as follows:

Resolved, That the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and hereby is, declared vacant; and

Further resolved, That, until the appointment of a new Doorkeeper, the duties of the office be, and hereby are, devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CRAVENS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. So far as I could control the matter, the agreement was that the debate should continue for four hours, two hours being allowed to each side. Before I had finished my first hour, when I had spoken but forty minutes, the House extended my time. I occupied more than an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman occupied one hour and thirty-five minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. I was given an extra hour, and I reserve the balance of that extra hour to use hereafter.

Mr. YEATES. Oh, no.

Mr. SPARKS. The time of the gentleman was extended indefinitely.

The SPEAKER. The House had power to extend his time for one additional hour, but not indefinitely.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I said.

Mr. YEATES. It meant that he should occupy that hour at the time, not reserve it for some other time.

Mr. HARRISON. I have the right to reply to arguments which may be made.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] say that he did not surrender that twenty-five minutes which was left of his second hour?

Mr. HARRISON. I did not.

Mr. BRIGHT. There was nothing said of it, according to my recollection; no reservation.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman is entitled to go on this morning.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not intend to say another word till I move the previous question, and then I shall be entitled to an hour under the rules of the House. I shall not attempt to call the previous question before half past three or four o'clock to-day.

Mr. BANNING. After that, I presume, there may be one hour's debate.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understood the arrangement yesterday each side was to have two hours of discussion. The gentleman from Illinois occupied yesterday an hour, and then by unanimous consent his time was extended until he had occupied a much longer period. Now I wish to inquire whether that extension of time is to be charged against the two hours originally provided for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should not be, because the time, as the Chair understands, was previously assigned to other members.

Mr. THOMPSON. The reason I make the inquiry is that a few days ago the opposite ruling was made in Committee of the Whole, which I then thought and think now was not right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with proceedings in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMPSON. I know that.

Mr. PUGH. I think the arrangement was that the previous question was not to be called until four hours had been allowed for discussion.

The SPEAKER. There was no limitation.

Mr. PUGH. No limitation beyond that.

The SPEAKER. There was an intimation given, as stated by the gentleman from New Jersey, that the previous question would not be called until at least four hours had been allowed for debate. The Chair thinks that under the understanding there are yet three hours for discussion.

Mr. YEATES. Do I understand the Chair to say that there was an agreement about this?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that on yesterday the understanding was that the previous question should not be called until after four hours of discussion had been allowed—two on each side.

Mr. YEATES. The chairman of the committee said that he would not call the previous question till the expiration of four hours; but I stated that there were others besides members of the committee who wished to speak; and the Chair said that the previous question if called could be voted down.

Mr. HARRISON. That is for the House to determine.

Mr. YEATES. There was no agreement.

The SPEAKER. There was no agreement except that the discussion should occupy at least four hours.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say now that he will not call the previous question before four o'clock. I wish to inquire how the three hours and a half from now until that time are to be occupied?

Mr. HARRISON. The understanding was that another gentleman on my side of the question should occupy about an hour, and two hours should be occupied by the other side. There are three hours to run under the agreement before I will attempt to call the previous question.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois how many hours still remain under the agreement?

Several MEMBERS. Three.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. How are they to be divided?

Mr. HARRISON. It was agreed yesterday that the opponents of the report should have two hours out of four. Three of the four hours are unexpired.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see justice done. The gentleman from Arkansas had better proceed.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, the time has about arrived in the affairs of this House when, especially on this side, a little plain talk might be profitably indulged. I fear my extreme modesty will prevent me from indulging in it, yet my sincere judgment leads me to believe that this is a fit occasion for it.

The honorable chairman of the committee, in the opening of his remarks yesterday, read the resolution creating this committee as authority for making the sort of report which has been submitted by the majority. I now beg leave to call the attention of the House to the terms of that resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of eleven members be appointed by the Speaker, whose duty it shall be to consider the civil service of the Government of the United States and measures to promote its efficiency; and said committee shall have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Now, I submit to the House whether this resolution authorized the investigation of the Polk case or any other similar case of an individual officer, or whether, on the contrary, it does not refer to the general civil service of the Government of the United States. The chairman of the committee called attention to this resolution as militating against the position assumed by the minority of the committee, and in doing so he ignored altogether the order of the House under which this action was taken. Now, I desire the Clerk to read the resolution authorizing this investigation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that John W. Polk, the Doorkeeper of the House, has employed sixty-three persons in the service of the House in excess of the number authorized by law; and

Whereas it is alleged that men have been employed by said Doorkeeper who were not borne on the roll of employes and that others have been continued in service after they had been dismissed and dropped from said roll; and

Whereas it is alleged that said Doorkeeper has been guilty of corruption and malfeasance in office, requiring employes under him to pay to other employes a part of the salary to which they are entitled by law, as a condition of their appointment or retention in office; and

Whereas it is alleged that he is interested in claims and bills now pending or about to be brought before the House for action: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be, and it is hereby directed to inquire into the several matters and things so as aforesaid alleged against said Doorkeeper, and to report at any time to this House whether said Doorkeeper is guilty of any of said alleged acts. And the committee is authorized to send for persons and papers.

Mr. CRAVENS. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that by this resolution the committee was authorized only to pass upon the case of the Doorkeeper as to the charges contained in the resolution. That was all. It will be remembered that at the time this subject was referred to the committee there was considerable side-bar discussion as to the proper committee to which to refer the matter. At that time, apparently, it was not clear that this was the appropriate committee. If this matter had been referred to the committee in the ordinary way, without any special resolution or any specification of charges, the question would have arisen whether we would have been entitled to make such a report as has been made here. It might, in that case, have been insisted with some plausibility that we would have been authorized to make such a report because the Doorkeeper's office might be considered a part of the civil service of the Government. But, sir, the House having given special directions in this resolution, our authority is limited by the terms of that resolution; and we, as a committee, have no right to pass on any other question than the truth or falsity of the charges referred to us for examination. Such are the views expressed by the minority in their report. Mark, sir, we are required only to pass upon the question of this officer's guilt. We are not called upon to make any recommendation as to the punishment that should be visited upon him. We have no such authority with reference to any officer under this Government.

Why, sir, if we could arrogate any such authority in this case we could exercise the same authority in respect to all officers, from the President of the United States down to the very least; but I apprehend no sane man upon this floor would take upon himself to insist that this House has any such right. But I will waste no more time on that subject.

What is the first allegation in the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] which was adopted by the House and under which this committee acted? It is that John W. Polk, Doorkeeper, did employ many persons in excess of the number authorized by law. The minority find that he did employ a number who, together with others serving without employment or appointment by him, amounted to the number of sixty-three; that all these were paid by resolution of the House, and that such employment was notorious and public, Colonel Polk, on the 9th of November, 1877, having communicated the fact to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. What is the second allegation? That men were employed by said John W. Polk, Doorkeeper, who were not borne on the roll of employes, &c. Full and satisfactory answer to this charge is made by the minority; besides, by reference to the records of the House full information can be gained not only as to this but the preceding charge also. There was no need of investigation upon these charges if the House had only taken cognizance of its own record. The records themselves acquit Colonel Polk.

The third allegation is that the Doorkeeper had been guilty of corruption and malfeasance in office, requiring employes under him to pay to other employes a part of the salary to which they are entitled by law, as a condition of their appointment or retention in office. This is the gist of all these charges, and is the only one requiring any sort of investigation further than that which could have been made by consulting the records of the House. The minority so state in their report. We felt called upon to pass upon his guilt or innocence as to this allegation, and the minority in their report say that he is expressly exonerated from the charge of requiring employes under him to pay to other employes a part of the salary to which they are entitled by law as a condition of their appointment or retention in office. The majority do not say otherwise.

The fourth allegation is that Colonel Polk is interested in claims and bills now pending or about to be brought before the House for action. We investigated that matter, and both the majority and minority declared him not to be guilty.

Now, the question to be determined here is whether Mr. Polk is guilty or not of any sort of corruption. It is the only thing amounting to a feather's weight in the charges preferred against him. Does the investigation by the committee show a single act performed by the Doorkeeper, Mr. Polk, from corrupt motives? Do the majority in their report indicate anything of the sort except by indirection and innuendo? Does the report charge malfeasance or corruption in the direct and manly way, in which truth would warrant its being made? Do the majority charge that Polk is interested in any claims now pending in Congress? They do not, but on the contrary he is exonerated and declared not guilty. Notwithstanding this they propose to visit upon Polk the severest punishment which could possibly follow a finding of guilty upon every charge made against him, and this House is called upon to take action upon such a report. I ask members to read the minority report, where will be found direct answers to every one of the specifications and charges against Mr. Polk.

Now, as to the majority report, I wish for a moment to call the attention of the House to it. There are different statements made in that report, and I undertake to say they are as strongly made as they can be upon the testimony which has been taken. I do not say that a partisan view has been taken of the testimony in order to give foundation for the assertions made in the majority report, but I do say that the majority report takes the strongest possible view which can be taken of the testimony in the case.

In the first place the majority report states that—

During the extra session of this Congress the said Doorkeeper did employ or permit to act as messengers, pages, and laborers in and about the House of Representatives, in excess of the number authorized by law, and over and above the so-called cloak-room men who clean this Hall, sixty-odd persons. (Mis. Doc. 36, page 392.) This was done with the full knowledge that such excess was without warrant of law. (pages 77 and 78.) and was not discontinued even after he had learned that the Committee of Accounts would not justify his acts in the premises, and would not make provision for the payment of such illegal force. (Pages 361-393.) His manner of making appointments was such that he did not know the number employed or who had claims for services; the result whereof was, that the sum of money voted by the House December 16 to pay this extra force, and which was based upon data furnished the Committee of Accounts by him, proved insufficient to pay all who had claims under him for services rendered, and they were forced to submit to a reduction of 20 per cent. from the pay they supposed themselves entitled to. (Pages 93, 95, 363 to 365.)

They go on further to state that—

In extenuation, Mr. Polk pleaded the necessity of an increased force, the practice under former Congresses, and specifically under the Forty-fourth Congress, and the pressure brought to bear upon him by members of Congress. (Page 77.) In his testimony, however, he finally admits his mistake as to the necessity, admits that he was aware that the extra force under the Forty-fourth Congress was authorized by resolution, (page 315,) and corrects his statements as to pressure from members. (Page 106.)

There is no denial of the truth or proof of the falsity of what Colonel Polk asserts as to the practice of former Congresses. The proof bears him out in the assertion that heavy pressure was brought to bear upon him by members of Congress, and shows that what he did was done in the belief that it was his paramount duty to supply the demands and apparent necessities of the House. The encouragement given Polk by members of Congress led him to believe that he was perfectly justified in what he did. The proof sustains his assertions as to the encouragement given. The testimony will support his explanation of his conduct and that such employment has been the practice in former Congresses under like circumstances. Every gentleman upon this floor who has been in a legislative body before, or who has been a member of previous Congresses, knows there never has yet assembled a legislative body when persons were not employed under usage and for whose employment there was not the strictest warrant of law. There cannot be a single instance found in the records of any State from Texas to Maine or in any Congress where such has not been the case. So, then, I say there is some sort of excuse or apology for the action taken by Mr. Polk. Take the testimony of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON,] a member of the Committee of Accounts, and it is there shown what was the pressure brought to bear upon Mr. Polk. He gives a description of the crowd of office-seekers hanging around here at the organization of the House, and of the practice which has grown up of persons discharging duties around this Hall whose names are not borne upon the roll.

Second. That up to a late day in this session he has authorized or permitted persons to perform services who at the time were borne on no roll, and continued others in service after striking them from the rolls, promising or suggesting that they would be paid under resolution, or that they should be placed on a roll when his force should be increased.

As a matter of course those men who were in the employ of chairmen of committees, hanging on here in expectancy of pay by resolution of the House, could not be borne on the roll.

Third. That he employed on the floor of the House during the session in December fifty-six pages.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this assertion is directly in the teeth of the testimony. The testimony is to the effect that there were twenty-eight pages on the floor of the House who had no sort of employment whatever, yet they actually served. They, together with those employed by Polk, made double the number authorized by law. Now, the venerable gentleman from New York and our honorable chairman think there was something terrible in the manner of making up the December page-roll. Those regularly employed by a fiction of law, although they had only served half a month, might have drawn pay for the whole month had the roll been so made up, while the others in law were entitled to no pay at all unless put upon the roll. Each class of these pages had only served half a month, the latter class having come upon the floor to wait upon members temporarily, in the hope that something might turn up whereby they might receive pay. Mr. Polk's own views as to the right of those to pay employed by him were that they were only entitled to pay for the time actually served. On consultation with officers familiar with making out pay-rolls it was ascertained they were entitled to pay for the whole month if he saw proper to put their names on for the whole time.

With the consent of the little boys employed by him, he was permitted to and did put the other little fellows on the roll for the remaining part of the month to draw pay. That is all. Ah! gentlemen, he whose heart is so steeled as that want creates no impression upon it or whose ears are closed to the cries of widowhood and orphanage is neither fit to be a Doorkeeper here nor in the house of our Lord. This action on the part of Mr. Polk shows the generosity and magnanimity of the man. It is no sort of disparagement, nor does it indicate any sort of disqualification on his part to be a Doorkeeper. It does not indicate anything else than that he was a generous-hearted, magnanimous man. It was right; right as opposed to wrong.

Fourth. That he has continuously employed one mail and two riding pages over and above the number authorized by law.

True it is, Mr. Speaker, the proof sustains this allegation, this charge in the majority report. But I desire the attention of the House to this fact: that the testimony also shows that the Sergeant-at-Arms, to whom it is proposed to turn over this office, likewise employed a page without any sort of authority of law; and this House, subsequently to the making of this report, has passed a resolution for the payment of that page. So, then, sir, that charge falls to the ground.

You will remember, gentlemen, when the question was up here a few days ago, many of you on that side of the House took part in the discussion as to the payment of those men in the cloak-room; and there was not a man on the floor, so far as I heard any expression of opinion, who was not in favor of their payment. Yet it was known to each and every member of this House that they were there without any sort of authority of law by resolution or enactment either.

So it is always in legislative bodies. It ought not to be so; and if indeed this Committee on Civil-Service Reform can ever reorganize with any sort of harmony and get to work again, there ought to be a bill reported so that the number of employes of this House would be as permanently settled as the number of Representatives on this floor. But, sir, you know it has not been so in times past either here or elsewhere.

Fifth. That the Doorkeeper placed upon the soldiers' roll men who had never been in the Army.

The proof in this case shows that no man was put upon that payroll as to whom Mr. Polk had not good reason to believe from the statement of himself, as well as in many instances from his Representatives, that he was entitled to a position upon that roll, except in one case, and that was the case of Mr. Fitzhugh. And, sir, there is no sort of mention made by this majority report as to the excuse offered for that transaction. The testimony which you will find on page 316 is to the effect that he found at the end of the month that that roll had not been filled; and it was for the reason that members to whom he had awarded positions on that roll had not filled it. It will be understood that as he apportioned out a goodly part of his patronage to members they were to make the selections, and if there was any fault in regard to that matter at all the members of this House or some of them are the responsible parties, and not Mr. Polk.

Sixth. That the Doorkeeper did receive money from two of his employes to be paid over to a third who had been promised one or the other of their places, for the purpose of making his salary equal to the one promised.

The testimony is that this was a voluntary contribution and was afterward repaid. But the fact that Mr. Polk had let these parties know of his intention to make up this salary out of his own pocket taints the transaction.

Now that is the gravamen of the charges made in the resolution referred to this committee. And what is the proof in regard to this transaction? If Senator LAMAR is to be believed and if Mr. Bacon is to be believed, this charge cannot be sustained. Mr. Bacon stated he had notice of his permanent appointment on the roll two or three days before he had any knowledge of Mr. Polk's proposal to pay any money out of his own pocket.

Seventh. That while complaining of the insufficiency of his labor force, he detailed some of his laborers to do other than laborer's services; and permitted several of them to hire substitutes to perform their entire work, they drawing the full salaries and paying their substitutes about one-fifth thereof. (Pages 190, 193, 195, 206, 219, and 323.)

Now, unfortunately in the appropriation bills passed by this House the services to be performed by any of its employes are not set forth, so that that charge falls to the ground.

Eighth. That he "created an office" at a high salary, without precedent, on the Doorkeeper's rolls, for the purpose of making a place for a gentleman who could not accept a twelve-hundred-dollar place, for "it would not support him."

Well, now, gentlemen, in regard to that I will say that if Mr. Polk is at fault and is guilty of any crime the Committee of Accounts of this House are particeps criminis, and I do not want any member of that committee to be astonished at this suggestion on my part. I desire to call the attention of the House to the proof upon which I make the assertion. It is this: that when the House passed a resolution for the payment of these men that Committee of Accounts allowed one man more than any other man on that extra roll. I do not remember the exact page of the report on which that testimony is to be found, but it is there.

Ninth. That his manner of making up his rolls was such that employes would find out only at the end of the month that their names were not on any payroll. One man, appointed December 1 for the soldiers' roll, found at the end of the month that his name was left off the payroll for the first seven days; and at the last of January that he could not get his pay for the first half of the month, although his service was continuous. (Page 84.) The Doorkeeper gave divers persons notice of appointments, who, after performing services as they supposed under the law, would find at the end of the month that they could not be put on any payroll. One colored man was employed by Mr. Polk and set to work by his assistant in October, was shown his name on a roll by the janitor, yet he was never put on a payroll. (Pages 143, 144.) These irregularities grew, to a great extent, out of the habit of making up the regular rolls at the end of the month, and worked great injustice.

If any gentleman will scrutinize the testimony in this cause he will find that many of these men supposed themselves to be upon the payroll, and, when examined minutely on the subject, it was found in almost every instance—in every one, I might say—that their being put upon the permanent roll depended upon the future action of the House; and each and every one of these men was serving in expectancy of compensation by resolution of this House.

Tenth. That the testimony does not show that Mr. Polk is positively interested in any claims now pending in Congress. The Neufchâtel Paving Company owes him an unsettled balance, and has a bill for its relief before the House, (pages 116 to 118,) but he claims to have no interest in it. In connection with this company, prior to the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, Mr. Polk seems to have employed, or continued in employ, a man because of his pretended claim to influence with a Congressman. (Pages 118 to 129.)

Now, gentlemen, I undertake to say that there is not a single scintilla of testimony in this cause to warrant such an assertion as that contained in the majority report, and I say it because the proof distinctly shows, if you can trust the testimony of Mr. Polk himself—and his was the only testimony—he had not a dollar of interest or a dollar of demand against that company.

I have now called your attention to the particular items of the majority report, and I think I am borne out in the assertion that the strongest possible view is taken of this testimony against Mr. Polk by the majority of the committee.

There is some sort of mention made in this report as to Mr. Polk's connection with lobbying in times past and the intimation of a possibility of his being interested in claims now pending before this Congress. I say that the testimony does not show anything of the kind.

It is also asserted in the majority report that Mr. Polk continued in his employment a man because of his pretended claim to influence with a member of Congress. I say that on a careful consideration of the testimony, such as an honest jury would give to it, it does not warrant the assertion; it is false.

I say this because it is only by garbled extracts from the testimony of Mr. Polk that any such conclusion could be arrived at. If you take the context it discloses an entirely different state of affairs. The testimony shows that that man was a sort of hanger-on around Polk's room here, and that because of the promise of an interest in some future operations in Missouri Mr. Polk agreed to give this man, a Missourian, some sort of employment and share in such operations there.

It is true that Mr. Polk did state that at one time this man said that he had some influence with an honorable Representative upon this floor; but when that honorable Representative came before the committee, he stated that the man had never approached him on the subject, and that there was no need for him to approach him, because the bill then pending before the committee of which he was a member had only reference to providing for the pavement of the streets, without employing any particular person or company to do it, while Mr. Polk's undertaking seems to have been for the procurement of the contract under the law proposed after its passage.

Now, sir, there is a great deal of complaint made against Polk because he has employed and now employs men and allows them to employ others temporarily to perform their duties while they receive only a portion of the pay. I will say that if I am the true representative of any class upon this floor, it is of the great brotherhood of men who earn a living by the sweat of their brows—the democracy. I am as much opposed to the oligarchy of the few against the democracy of the many as any man in this House. It is my sincere desire to so dignify labor as that a man may pass from the plow-handle to the Presidency and back again, and be all the while in the line of American honor.

Yet with these exalted views on this subject, I can see no very great deal of harm, when a man has a hard job before him and has means to employ somebody else to do it, if he is allowed to do so. These men were employed on several occasions because of the absence of the regular employes of the House to perform their work. As shown by the testimony they were employed only temporarily. Now it seems to me that the committee on the great question of civil-service reform ought not to object to that, especially when it is known that the highest salaried officers of this Government, the Chief Executive and the members of his Cabinet, frequently go off for weeks at a time, as the newspapers term it "junketing" over the country. At this no sort of complaint is made here by me or anybody, so far as I know, with any degree of seriousness.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him to read some testimony which I have here?

Mr. CRAVENS. You can read it yourself.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman used rather a harsh expression toward me.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. CRAVENS. He must do his own reading.

The SPEAKER. It will come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. CRAVENS. Well, you will sit down, then. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Very good; I will sit down.

Mr. CRAVENS. In conclusion I appeal to lawyers of this House from every quarter and section of this Union to say whether or not the majority report in this case is in accordance with the instructions of the House; and whether the position taken by the minority report is not correct. Have these gentlemen of the majority reported upon the guilt of Mr. Polk in connection with these charges, as they were directed to do? I say they have not. I say that they have disobeyed the direct order of the House, to about the same extent a jury did the instructions of the court in a celebrated case in Alabama. In that case a party was accused of larceny, the property charged to have been stolen being a hog. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty in the first degree. The court instructed the jury that the value of the hog must be assessed, besides there were no degrees in larceny, and directed them to retire and bring in a verdict in proper form. The jury retired and there was some hot debate in the jury-room as to what was the proper form. But there happened to be an old Georgia justice of the peace on the jury who was the foreman and saw through the situation at once. He returned to the court with the following verdict:

We the jury unanimously find the defendant guilty in the sum of 1 dollar and a 1/2 in favor of the hog.

[Great laughter.]

There is just about such a disobedience of the direct order of the House in the report of the majority of this committee, barring the murder of the King's English, as there was disobedience of the instructions of the court in that verdict. I want the verdict of that jury to go down to posterity with the report of the majority of this committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman said that my report was false. Will he look at the testimony I have marked here on page 118 of the book of testimony? I ask the gentleman to read it.

Mr. CRAVENS. I will read it:

Question. Was Mr. Silver interested in this matter jointly with you?

Answer. Indirectly. He had no kind of connection with the company.

Q. What was his connection with the matter?

A. His connection was through me.

Q. You employed him?

A. I employed him.

Q. What did you employ him to do?

A. I do not know. He claimed that he had some influence.

Q. With whom? Be frank about it.

A. With a member of Congress.

Q. What member?

A. Do you want me to name him?

Q. Yes.

A. Mr. HENKLE.

The context of the testimony which I before read shows that this occurred long subsequently to his employment. Now, I apprehend it is not in the power of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform or anybody else to prevent dead-beats and lobbyists from indulging in boastful talk as to their influence with members of Congress or other persons.

Mr. HARRISON. Do you want the Doorkeeper to employ men for that purpose?

Mr. CRAVENS. He has not employed them. Inasmuch as there are other members of the minority who desire to address the House, I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HENRY.]

The SPEAKER. There are twenty-five minutes of the gentleman's time remaining.

Mr. HENRY. As a member of the minority of the committee reporting upon the subject under consideration, I feel that it is incumbent upon me to say a few words in regard to the views expressed by the minority, and also in opposition to the conclusions which have been reached by the majority of that committee. I must do this very hurriedly in the short time allowed me.

How was this matter first presented to this House? It came here with a sinister aspect. Two persons, who had been justly removed from the employment of this House, in their disappointment and chagrin came forward and volunteered their affidavits. It seems that one of them, a day or two after he was removed, went to work to make out a memorandum of a conversation which occurred just before his removal. Having made this memorandum about the 5th day of January, on the 8th of January he made oath to it, as he says in order that his "memory might not fail, and in order to make it certain." This shows evidently that he was inclined to disbelieve his own statement in regard to the matter until it was fortified and accredited by an extrajudicial oath to convince him of its truth; otherwise he seemed to fear that he would not be able to maintain any faith or confidence in his own statement.

Notwithstanding his prudence in that respect, his statements are not sustained by any witness in the case; and his own extrajudicial oath is insufficient to establish the truth of them.

The other affiant contradicts himself; at least whenever confronted with witnesses who heard him make statements he takes back his denial of having made them with readiest facility. I must commend the majority of the committee for their high sense of propriety in this, that although these affidavits are the foundation upon which these charges are made, they in their elaborate report have not dignified either of these persons with a reference to either of them or to their testimony. Yesterday we were discussing in this House the foundation of a monument in honor of the Father of his Country. Now, can we erect a monument to civil-service reform upon the miry foundation of two such affidavits as these? Yet they are the only basis upon which this investigation is founded. After their griefs had rankled for a month in their bosoms these malignant men finally gave them to the public through a gentleman of this House and make them a ground of charges against one of its officers. This is not a very promising aspect in which this matter presents itself at the very start.

But a great question arises here: What is the law applicable to this case? Before the committee, as appears by the report of the majority, the Doorkeeper relied upon custom and usage to a considerable extent for his defense in regard to many of the special charges against him. The majority of the committee speak very slightly of usage; yet, sir, what is usage? What is that great body of the common law, the proudest birthright of the Anglo-Saxon race, but the embodiment of customs which had their life and being in the hearts of a people determined to be free, before they were established by the broadsword and the battle-ax and written upon parchment and printed in the books of the law? Is the lex non scripta less intelligible than the lex scripta? Why, sir, the adolescent youth breathed this unwritten law at the fireside; he saw it in the field; he heard it in the forum; he felt it in the house of God; and it has come down to us as the very noblest embodiment of the principles of human right and regulated liberty, the grandest code of laws ever devised by the philosopher, the statesman, or the legislator of any nation, ancient or modern. Such is custom, such is our common law, the surest guarantee of all the rights that we enjoy.

Is custom of no avail in interpreting the law? Suppose the law is obscure or ambiguous, or suppose it is silent upon a particular subject; do we not refer to custom as the key to its interpretation? Do we not find out what the law means by consulting the practice and usage under it? Is not this the only certain mode by which we can ascertain what the law is? Surely every lawyer knows this to be the case.

If we apply these principles to the case now before us, we find that there is scarcely one of these imputed delinquencies which is not traceable to usage and which cannot to a great extent be justified by it.

My friend from Illinois, [Mr. HARRISON,] in the report of the majority, says:

Mr. Polk does not deny the major part of the things herein set forth, but in extenuation pleads the necessities of his department, his rawness in position, the clamors of needy applicants, and past custom.

Why, sir, is it wrong in a land of liberty, where the common law is the corner-stone of our institutions, that a man when put upon trial before an American Congress on charges affecting his official integrity should undertake to show that his conduct is legalized by custom? The chairman again says:

No rawness in office and no custom can be set up in defense of a palpable violation of known law.

Now, if the report had said "unknown law" it would have been nearer the truth, and I may say, without disrespect to my friend from Illinois, that the law in regard to this matter can only be known when considered in connection with the usage, practice, and customs which have accompanied and construed it from the very foundation of the Government.

Again, I find in the report of the majority this language:

The utter disregard of legal restraint shown by Mr. Polk, his open violation of known law, to say nothing of his inefficiency as shown throughout the testimony (only the more glaring instances being herein cited), render him, in the opinion of your committee, unfit for the responsible and delicate position of Doorkeeper.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the statute-law on this subject? If any known law has been violated by the Doorkeeper I challenge the gentlemen representing the majority of the committee to produce the statute and show that it has been violated either in letter or in spirit. I find in sections 32, 33, and 34 of the Revised Statutes an embodiment of the act approved February 21, 1867, being chapter 56 of the laws of that year. I will read from the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 32. In case of a vacancy in the office of Clerk of the House of Representatives, or of the absence or inability of the Clerk to discharge the duties imposed on him by law or custom relative to the preparation of the roll of Representatives or the organization of the House, those duties shall devolve on the Sergeant-at-Arms of the next preceding House of Representatives.

SEC. 33. In case of vacancies in the offices of both the Clerk and the Sergeant-at-Arms, or of the absence or inability of both to act, the duties of the Clerk relative to the preparation of the roll of the House of Representatives or the organization of the House shall be performed by the Doorkeeper of the next preceding House of Representatives.

To the extent therein stated we find in the statute law an express recognition of custom as regulating the action of the different officers of this House.

Then again we find in section 73 of the Revised Statutes the following:

SEC. 73. The Doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives shall perform the usual services pertaining to their respective offices during the session of Congress, and shall in the recess, under the direction of the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, take care of the apartments occupied by the respective Houses, and provide fuel and other accommodations for their subsequent session.

Now that is statute law upon the subject. There is another statute more singular in its phraseology which is embodied in section 53 of the Revised Statutes, and that begins in the words, "The following persons are employed in the service of the House of Representatives." It is taken merely from the appropriation bill of the preceding year, the act of March 3, 1873, chapter 226. It then goes on to give the list of the officers in the employment of the House of Representatives and the appropriation for their salaries. It merely states "The following persons are employed in the service of the House of Representatives." That is remarkable phraseology, Mr. Speaker, to be used in so solemn an embodiment of the statute-law of this land. You do not find the language there, "the following persons shall be employed," but "The following persons are employed in the service of the House of Representatives." It is only a digest of the language used in the appropriation bill passed probably the year before; and it seems merely to be used in the way of recital, and not in the ordinary form of permanent enactment. And in the statute which enacts the Revised Statutes you will find that discrimination is made as to the effect of appropriation bills, that their retrospective operation is limited, and I think it is but fair reasoning that their future effect would also be considered as limited and controlled to some extent, at all events, because appropriation bills are intended to be but temporary in their nature and provide only for a single year.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the parliamentary law, to see what the rules of the House have to say on this subject. I find on pages 218 and 219, under the heading of "Doorkeeper," what the rules provide in reference to the duties of that officer. First:

10. There shall be elected at the commencement of each Congress, to continue in office until their successors are appointed, a Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster, each of whom shall take an oath for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office, to the best of his knowledge and abilities, and to keep the secrets of the House; and the appointees of the Doorkeeper and Postmaster shall be subject to the approval of the Speaker; and, in all cases of election by the House of its officers the vote shall be taken vice voce.—March 16, 1860.

That is Rule 10, to be found on page 103 of the rules of the House.

He is also required by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes to take an additional oath, &c.

Then comes the following:

27. The Doorkeeper shall execute strictly the one hundred and thirty-fourth and one hundred and thirty-fifth rules, relative to the privilege of the Hall.—March 1, 1838. And he shall be required at the commencement and close of each session of Congress to take an inventory of all the furniture, books, and other public property in the several committees and other rooms under his charge, and shall report the same to the House; which report shall be referred to the Committee on Accounts, who shall determine the amount for which he shall be held liable for missing articles.—March 2, 1865. It is the duty of the Doorkeeper, ten minutes before the hour for the meeting of the House each day, to see that the floor is cleared of all persons except those privileged to remain during the sessions of the House.—March 31, 1869.

The Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives shall make out and return to Congress, on the first day of each regular session and at the expiration of his term of service, a full and complete account of all property belonging to the United States in his possession at the time of returning such account.—R. S., sec. 72.

The Doorkeeper shall perform the usual services pertaining to his office during the session of Congress, and shall, in the recess, under the direction of the Clerk, take care of the apartments occupied by the House, and provide fuel and other accommodations for their subsequent session.—R. S., sec. 73.

When a message shall be sent from the Senate to the House of Representatives, it shall be announced at the door of the House by the Doorkeeper.—Joint Rule 2, page 143.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find that the compiler of this book, Mr. Smith, who of course had no authority to change the law, and whose whole duty was confined merely to embodying what were the statutes and the usages and customs on the subject—I find that he has inserted in brackets what I doubt not has been the law and usage of the House in respect to the position of Doorkeeper. He says:

[The Doorkeeper (with the aid of his appointees, namely, the superintendent of the "folding-room" and "document-room," messengers, pages, folders, and laborers) discharges various duties which are not enumerated in the rules, namely: he announces at the door of the House all messages from the President, &c.; keeps the doors of the House, folds and distributes extra documents, furnishes members with printed copies of bills, reports, and other documents; conveys messages from members, keeps the Hall, galleries, and committee-rooms in order, &c., &c.]

There are brackets within brackets and parenthesis within parenthesis.

And you will find three et ceteras in this enumeration of the duties imposed upon the Doorkeeper by usage and for which there is no express statute law. If there were but one of them it would give me Lord Coke, if he were here to-day, an opportunity to discourse most learnedly and profitably, I have no doubt, as to its meaning, but notwithstanding there are three of them I will only say that I consider them full of significance and as showing a vast field of unlimited power confided by usage and custom to the Doorkeeper of this House.

What is most striking on the examination of this law is that you do not find in any statute, in any rule, or in any embodiment of the custom as contained in this written compilation one single word which clothes the Doorkeeper with power to appoint a single officer.

That power is not expressly given to him; and he has no power at all upon that subject except what he has derived from usage under the supervision of this House. He has no appointing power whatever. It is recognized indirectly when it is provided that the appointees of the Doorkeeper—

Shall be subject to the approval of the Speaker.

And then it is provided that—

[The Doorkeeper (with the aid of his appointees, namely, the superintendent of the "folding-room" and "document-room," messengers, pages, folders, and laborers)]—

This being in double parenthesis—discharges various duties which are not enumerated in the rules.

It is thus recognized that it had been the custom for him to appoint these men by usage, but not by the authority of any express statute or written law of any nature or description whatever. That is the condition now in which we find the law. Shall we assume that we are wiser than our predecessors? I, for my part, have not the vanity or audacity to do it.

And I believe, while I would most willingly—and I hope we may do so—define the duties of the Doorkeeper and of all the officers of this House as far as it is possible to define them, that it is wise to leave to them a discretion in regard to certain matters and hold them responsible for the corrupt or dishonest exercise of it.

Now, sir, if we will look into this subject we will find that many of our most important officers, the civil officers in the States, have not their duties expressly defined; it is impossible to do it. How is it with your sheriffs, your coroners, and all that class of officers? Why, sir, how is it in the Departments here? Is there any law saying what each clerk shall do, what each employé shall do, at what desk he shall sit, how much he shall write, and all that sort of thing? Not at all. He is under the control of his superior and he may be transferred from one desk to another, may be assigned to other duties, or may be made to exchange with one of his fellow-clerks, just as the exigencies of the public service may require.

But there is this danger, and I presume it was foreseen, that on account of the exigencies which may arise in legislation, the contingencies which may happen, it would be hampering ourselves and stopping the progress of our important proceedings here if we regulated our officers by a Procrustean system to which they must adhere at all times and from which they could not depart. I would like to define their duties as far as it is possible to do so. I would like to give the express power that is required for the proper regulation of our proceedings here, and I would go as far as any one in regulating these matters in a definite way and as far as it is possible and expedient to do so. But it would be most unfortunate if in the effort to bring about this certainty we should find ourselves tied up in the hard knots of red tape or lost in the endless labyrinths of circumlocution at a time when important measures were pending before us which demanded our prompt action and which our constituents were anxious to see consummated. And if we go too far in this direction there will be many occasions when the time of this House, so important to our constituents, will be occupied in rapid discussions as to whether a little orphan boy, with a widowed mother and little brothers and sisters dependent on the pittance he receives and a thousand miles from home, shall be paid $10 or $20 during a short recess of this House or not, or perhaps in grave and profound disputations on a question better suited to a college of medieval schoolmen than to a body like this, intrusted with the legislation of a mighty and intelligent people, whether it be contrary to any law, human or divine, for a messenger or a laborer to employ a substitute or proxy to kindle a fire or wash a spittoon.

Our constituents will not tolerate this. They expect from us better things. They expect of us that we shall go on with the important business that is assigned to us, and that we shall attend to it, and that, so long as our officers act honestly, so long as they act with good intentions and under the eye and supervision of this House and its committees faithfully, we are not to take up the time that should be devoted to great public interests in the discussion of such petty and insignificant questions as would be constantly recurring if we required special legislation in reference to such trivial matters.

Mr. Speaker, I had proposed to refer briefly to some of the testimony in this case, but I fear that my time is so far advanced that I shall not have the opportunity to do it or to apply—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX, of Ohio, obtained the floor, and yielded twenty minutes to Mr. FRYE.

Mr. FRYE. Some considerable time ago I had occasion to call the attention of this House to what was known as the soldiers' roll. Now I think every man on this floor knows what the soldiers' roll was. It was a roll of fourteen men receiving the highest pay for that class of service received by any men in the employment of this House, to wit, $1,200 a year. They were to be "crippled and disabled Union soldiers." And during five or six Congresses you could see them at every door around that gallery, men without arms, men with one leg, men entirely crippled and disabled, whom "the wayfaring man though a fool" looking upon would recognize at once as "crippled and disabled soldiers." And, sir, I take it that no man can hesitate one moment in determining whether or not a man is a crippled and disabled soldier, whether or not he is entitled to go upon this roll. We here knew them, honored them, and tried to repay them for their great services and compensate them in part for their sacrifices.

Well, sir, I saw one after another of these soldiers disappearing. I saw able-bodied men taking their places. I saw the record of the appropriation bills changing and dropping "crippled," dropping "disabled," dropping "crippled and disabled Union soldiers." And I called upon the House to know what it meant, whether it was the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations to do away with the law creating the crippled and disabled soldiers' roll. And I demanded of them, if that was their purpose, to announce it like men, do away with the crippled soldiers' roll, save their $2,800 extra pay, and put in their places able-bodied men. I distinctly stated at the time that it was not a question of politics with me; that I was perfectly willing, ay, more, that I expected, the democratic party, having power in the House, to remove the crippled and disabled soldiers of the republican faith and put in their places crippled and disabled soldiers of the democratic faith. Ay, more, I went further. I said I do not personally object to your displacing these soldiers and even putting on that roll "crippled and disabled" confederates.

Now, sir, Mr. Polk, in his testimony, says that in this matter of crippled and disabled soldiers he thinks there may be a great deal of sentiment. But, sir, I do not look upon it as sentiment. These men are as able to perform the duties assigned to them as able-bodied men are. They have suffered where able-bodied men have not; and I say, unless the law is repealed, it is a high, conscientious, overpowering duty upon the democrats of the House, as it was upon the republicans to put upon the roll men who have been soldiers, men who have been crippled and disabled in the service of the country.

When I called the attention of the House to this, twenty men rose on the democratic side at once to their feet and declared with emphasis, "We will keep up the crippled and disabled soldiers' roll; we will turn out your republicans, but we will put crippled and disabled democratic soldiers in their places."

Sir, I made no objection to that. Thank God, there was loyalty enough in the democratic party at the North to send thousands, ay, tens and twenties of thousands of democrats into the service of the country, and they fought and were disabled. I honor them to-day as much as I honor (if not more) the soldiers of the republican faith who went into the Army, and no word either here on this floor, no word of mine on the stump or elsewhere, shall ever be uttered against the loyal democrat who forgot his party and remembered his patriotism; who in spite of his party and against the policy of its leaders, buckled on the armor and went forth to battle for his country.

How, sir, did the democratic side of the House carry out that proposition made on the floor on that occasion? Did they put in crippled and disabled democratic soldiers? I call the attention of the House to the testimony of Mr. Polk on page 93. I commence with New England, because there were democratic soldiers crippled and disabled from New England.

Go through her valleys, over her mountains, through her hamlets, her villages, her cities, you can find, I know, crippled and disabled democratic soldiers—ay, thousands of them. Were they found?

Mr. Polk says:

The New England delegation has always acted as a unit, (leaving out Massachusetts,) and they agreed among themselves to a distribution of the appointments apportioned to them as one delegation; that is, the members from New Hampshire and Connecticut so agreed. I am speaking, of course, of the democratic delegation from those States. In readjusting my roll I put down Mr. Holt to go on the soldiers' roll. Mr. Prescott was doing duty on the roll up to the 10th, and at the reassembling of Congress on the 10th I said to Mr. Prescott: "They insist upon Holt having the place; I can't give but so many places to New England, and only one on the soldiers' roll, and they insist upon his having that best place."

Now turn to page 61. Mr. Holt was on the witness stand:

Question. You have been a soldier?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you been in the service?

A. Three years.

Q. As an enlisted soldier from Massachusetts?

A. Yes, sir.

What did that mean? What did Holt mean when he replied in that way? He meant that he had been a soldier in the Army of the United States, fighting for his country for three years, from Massachusetts, or he meant nothing.

Now turn to page 65. He was again on the stand:

By Mr. Cox:

Question. Seeing that the matter has been referred to, I will ask you to state what was your military service in the Union Army during the war of the rebellion?

Answer. I did not do any. I belonged to an independent company in Boston.

Now Holt to-day is in the employ of the democratic party of this House, notwithstanding that he committed—in spirit, at any rate—perjury, and every man on that committee and every man in this House knows that in spirit he committed perjury. When he was put upon that roll he either deceived the members from Connecticut and New Hampshire or else he deceived Mr. Polk, and thus got himself put on the soldiers' roll. Is it worthy of the democratic party to keep that man from that time to this in the employ of the House? Is it New England democracy to do so?

Oh, you New England statesmen, could you not, hunting all over the democratic ranks of soldiers in all New England, find a single crippled and disabled democratic soldier, and were you compelled to take this man Holt who served three years in an independent company in Boston? [Laughter.] What had become of your promises? Were they ropes of sand?

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FRYE. I have but a short time, and I will not yield to anybody.

I want to say further that Mr. Polk informed the statesmen from New England that Mr. Holt must go off the roll, and they held a meeting. They were terribly exercised. They consulted as to what should be done upon this quota to which New England was entitled. What was the quota? One laborer, one fireman, one soldier! Glorious old New England, stick for your quota! To be sure, you have not a single chairmanship, but you have a "quota." Meet together and consult about your "quota." To be sure, each of you represents one hundred and fifty thousand people. To be sure, you, each of you, represents millions of capital. To be sure, you are interested more than any other part of the country in great financial questions. To be sure, the tariff is a matter of life or death to the industries of your districts. But, for God's sake, gentlemen, forget finance, forget the tariff, and stick to your "quota" of three employés!

What does Polk say further?

I did make out a partial roll with a few names, putting Prescott's name on the soldiers' roll, from the 1st to the 10th of January, and certified it. I went immediately, that same day, to Judge PHELPS and Mr. LANDERS, two members from Connecticut, and said to them, "I can't put Holt on the soldiers' roll; there must be some other arrangement made; you must find me a soldier to go on there." They were a good deal perturbed and annoyed about it, and they said, "Wait, let us see; let us fix something." The same day I notified Mr. Prescott that Mr. Holt could not go on the soldiers' roll, but inasmuch as Holt was there on the floor and more suited to the place than Prescott, I thought some arrangement would be made soon by which they both, perhaps, could get on the rolls. In the mean time I had stated in writing to Judge PHELPS and Mr. LANDERS, "The best I can do for you is to give you one man on the soldiers' roll. I will appoint Prescott on the soldiers' roll for you, and will appoint Holt on the fireman's roll, and McDonnell on the laborer's roll;" and knowing that they had before pooled the salaries of Prescott and McDonnell, I said, "Now, that is the best I can do for you and you can do just as you please with it." They got together and they came and informed me that they would make these men pool their salaries so as to give an equal division to each, and they asked me if I would consent to it. This arrangement was to go into effect on the 1st of February. I said that I could make no change then; that Mr. Prescott must remain on the soldiers' roll, but if he chose to let Holt do the duty I had no objection to that; that Holt was better qualified to do the duty on the floor, and that I had no objection to that arrangement, but that Prescott must remain on the roll and draw the money; that it was a question altogether among themselves, with which I had nothing to do. I went back several times to Mr. LANDERS and Judge PHELPS and said to them, "Gentlemen, I want it distinctly understood that I have nothing at all to do with this arrangement; I just consent to appoint these men, and what they do with their salaries is none of my business."

And they stuck to their quota of three, like good, faithful democratic Representatives. And what did they do? They concluded to take Polk's offer, that as Prescott, who was a fireman, had served in the Army, he should come over here and be put on the soldiers' roll; and that Holt, who had been a soldier in an independent military company in Boston, should perform the duties of Prescott on the soldiers' roll. Prescott must still act as fireman, but he might use Holt as his substitute.

Ah, but that will not do; Prescott will then draw $1,200 salary. And here comes in the New England economy. What shall be done about it? Oh, we will fix that all up. The salary of Prescott on the soldiers' roll is $1,200; the fireman's pay is $900; the laborer's pay is $750; we will add all three of the salaries together, and then we will divide the total by three and that will give $940 each. And in that way the whole quota of all New England will be perfectly adjusted. [Laughter.] (It is just to say that Mr. PHELPS, of Connecticut, in a speech Monday evening, denies the statement of Mr. Polk as to his part in the play.)

They notified the Doorkeeper, Mr. Polk, and Mr. Polk said: Amen, gentlemen; it is as you say, and not as I say. And the New England statesmen were fully and completely justified. They had got their soldier on the soldiers' roll.

Oh, one-legged democrats, marching up to the polls to vote for my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. LANDERS.] Oh, one-armed democratic soldiers, fighting all day long in the beautiful old city of Portsmouth for my friend from New Hampshire, [Mr. JONES.] The next time you hobble along up to the polls, ask the Congressmen you vote for how their rabbit hunt for a crippled soldier ended thus lamely. [Great laughter.] So much for New England.

What comes next? I will not take delegation by delegation now; I shall not have time. There was a vacancy on the soldiers' roll, and a gallant horse-marine stepped forward for the place, [laughter:] William S. Dulin. Crippled? No. Disabled? No. Democrat? Yes, every time. [Great laughter.] You served, I suppose, in the Union Army? No, sir; in the Navy. You look quite young; when did you enlist in the Navy? In 1869, as apothecary's clerk. [Renewed laughter.]

Oh, you democrats, who are bound to fill up this soldiers' roll with crippled and disabled soldiers, where did you find Dulin, who was almost a babe at his mother's breast when the war broke out? Could not you find one wounded democratic soldier? Were you reduced to this maritime druggist?

William M. Patton. Crippled? No. Disabled? No. Democrat? Yes. Confederate? Yes. Ah, then, you democrats cannot find a crippled and disabled Union democratic soldier, and you resorted to the confederacy. Well, gentlemen, if you cannot succeed any better than you did in your grand hunt through old New England for crippled and disabled democratic soldiers, thank God, you turned your eyes to the confederacy, where you can find thousands and hundreds of thousands of poor, broken, crippled soldiers of the confederacy. I blame you not for going face-about, after such luck as that.

James G. Knight was a soldier; in 1861 "sprained his ankle" while drilling. Served until 1864 after he had sprained his ankle! A crippled and disabled democratic soldier!

T. J. Larry; never a soldier, always a democrat; put on the crippled and disabled soldiers' roll!

Jacob Fouke. Oh, what a terrible necessity there was upon my democratic friends who were so valiant for the soldiers of the Union. Jacob Fouke was in the war of 1812. [Laughter.] They could not find a crippled and disabled soldier of the late war against the Union, but were actually driven to the extreme necessity of going away back to the war of 1812, and bringing here a venerable old gentleman eighty, ninety, or a hundred years of age, to help fill up the crippled and disabled soldiers' roll!

Mr. BUTLER. He may have served in the Mexican war.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no; he was not in the Mexican war; too old for that. They got one Mexican soldier. They went over the rolls of every war this country ever had to get disabled soldiers; they took the revolutionary roll, but could not find a man who was able to travel to Washington; they got the roll of 1812 and examined that, and they hit a man who was in that war; they took the roll of the Mexican war and hit a man in that roll; and yet they were not happy; and yet the roll was not full; and yet the hunt continued.

Herman J. Scheellies: you will find his testimony on page 179. Were you in any way crippled or disabled? No, not by wounds received; I had a fever, [laughter,] and was discharged. Since the war have you been in tolerably good health? Well, I have suffered ever since, particularly from—the asthma. [Laughter.] What business have you followed? I have been in the General Land Office. The doctor in Wisconsin told me I ought to go to a warmer climate—to cure the asthma, I suppose. In what capacity were you in the Land Office? First-class clerk. I went there in 1866 and was discharged in 1867.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Ohio grant additional time to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE?]

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. How much?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I will not limit the gentleman.

Mr. FRYE. I thank the gentleman from Ohio, and dislike to trespass upon his time, but desire very much to complete this roll of "crippled and disabled Union democratic soldiers." Now I go on to Michael G. Flannegan, [laughter,] "on the soldiers' roll."

Question. Were you a soldier in the United States Army during the war of the rebellion?

Answer. Yes, sir; I was sworn in for ninety days, in Pennsylvania, armed and equipped, in the Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania State Militia, Company G, Captain Samuel Harrison. We were sworn in for ninety days service when Lee came into Pennsylvania. I was out also previous to that, in 1862, but they decided that the troops would not go out of the State, but I am sure we were sworn in and mustered, and I have got a copy of the muster-roll.

Q. But you did not go out of the State in 1862?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you during the ninety days?

A. Around Chambersburg and down by Greencastle; some went out of the State and some did not.

Q. Your command, then, did not meet the enemy?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. MORGAN:

Q. You were not disabled, of course?

A. No, sir; I was not wounded, but I have had a disease for some years.

[Laughter.]

Now, sir, I have no doubt there are one hundred thousand democrats who have been diseased for a good many years. [Renewed laughter.] Who can blame Polk for overrunning in his appointments if every diseased democrat is to go on the soldiers' roll? Why, I always thought disease with that party was chronic.

I next come to the case of John K. Bennett—a soldier of the Mexican war, who received a flesh-wound in that war—a good soldier, I have no doubt, but having no more right on the soldiers' roll than I have; neither crippled nor disabled nor pretending to be.

Another man on the soldiers' roll was Isaac T. Moore—never in the Army at all; only a democrat! Another man on this roll is James P. Alcock—a first-class soldier, undoubtedly, but not disabled, never asking for a pension. Rogers also was on the roll. He never was disabled, never crippled, was not in the Army at all, but was a democrat. Remember, I am taking this from the sworn testimony before the committee. I have not time to read the evidence.

Another man on this roll was C. R. Faulkner, an old man with nothing to show that he was crippled or a soldier, and nobody knew that he was crippled. Swint was put on in place of Holman's one-legged soldier who had been here for years. There was nothing in the evidence to show that Swint was ever a cripple. But I must stop this, for I must not trespass upon the time and courtesy of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] longer.

Now, even with men like these on the soldiers' roll, that roll got "hard up." Mr. Polk says in his testimony that he appointed Fitzhugh. On looking at Fitzhugh every member of the committee knew that he was not born when the war broke out; he could not have been a soldier. How he ever got on the soldiers' roll I do not know, unless on the same principle that we pension children of dead soldiers. Fitzhugh's father, the old Doorkeeper, that "bigger man than old Grant," was a dead democrat; there is no doubt about that. [Laughter.] It may be that he was put on the soldiers' roll because his father was a deceased democrat. But Polk does not say so. What does he say? He says "I yielded to the democrats of the House—the various delegations—this soldiers' roll to keep it full;" and he says "there was almost always a vacancy on it." Only think of that. Only fourteen positions on this roll and the whole United States to draw from; yet you gentlemen who promised to treat us fairly could not keep the soldiers' roll full to save your lives! You went to the revolutionary war, the war of 1812, the Mexican war, the confederate army, the Union Army, the street, the field. You picked up anybody you pleased. You went to the volunteer companies; you went to the independent companies. You visited the muster-field, you searched high and low, broad and deep; yet Polk says that you could not keep your soldiers' roll full, and because you could not keep it full he put on Fitzhugh.

Oh, spirit of the immortal Falstaff! give us one hour of thy time, and at tap of drum and squeak of fife drill this glorious battalion of democratic crippled and disabled soldiers. [Laughter.] See them fall into line! Here comes the venerable gentleman of the war of 1812. Then the Mexican war contributes its share; then the Navy sends in its boy; then the son of the dead Fitzhugh comes into view; then comes the Irish brigade with Michael J. Flannegan, "diseased for many years;" then the man that sprained his ankle when drilling in 1861; and then that asthmatic fellow. [Laughter.] So they march up to drill, one after another; and the spirit of Falstaff, disgusted with the display, takes heavenward its flight, [laughter and applause,] shouting back as it goes:

If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet. I have misused the King's press damnably. * * * My whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen, &c., and such as indeed were never soldiers. * * * I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat.

[Great applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. COX, of Ohio, obtained the floor and said: I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce a bill (H. R. No. 4236) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that double the usual number of copies of this bill be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

DOORKEEPER OF THE HOUSE.

The House resumed the consideration of the resolutions reported from the Committee on Civil Service Reform relative to the Doorkeeper of the House.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House to a statement, as brief and compact as under the circumstances I shall be able to make, of the grounds upon which the majority of the committee have reported that they find the Doorkeeper guilty of the charges which have been made against him, (except one,) and that they think the office should be vacated. They thus report because they believe that the law of the land has been so plainly, so grossly, so persistently violated that unless we are prepared to say there shall be no responsibility upon the part of an officer in such a position we are absolutely obliged to enforce a penalty adequate to the offense, and such a penalty cannot be less than removal from office.

I propose to show by a very brief reference to the facts proven in the testimony before the House that this is not a matter which can be condoned on the ground that it was done under pressure; that it is not a matter with which the ordinary pressure for appointments has anything at all to do; that the offense of the Doorkeeper is one of which the blame must rest distinctly upon him, the responsibility being with himself alone; for though there may have been pressure to induce him to make appointments, he cannot shift the burden of making appointments contrary to law and conducting his office in violation of law upon others. Official responsibility would cease if this could be done.

Now, sir, it is agreed by both majority and minority of the committee that the Doorkeeper, without authority of law, and I think in plain violation of law, appointed in the early part of the session some sixty-three persons more than he was authorized to appoint. But that, Mr. Speaker, is only a small part of the offense. If the persons who were put upon the roll in violation of law had been simply told that they were there without real authority, that they might take their chance of the House hereafter paying them by its own volition and upon resolution, and a roll had been made of those who had been employed and became the servants of the House under some form of employment binding both the Government and them, the case would have been different, although I still think it would have then been one the House could not overlook. But it is necessary that gentlemen shall understand, if they attempt to be responsible for his acts and to condone that which the Doorkeeper has done, they must meet a state of facts wholly different from this.

These sixty-three persons who were appointed were in no way distinguished from the ordinary and regular appointees of the House. There was no roll made of regular employes and another of irregular employes. A man who was put upon that roll did not know whether he was to be paid or not. He was told that he was employed; he was sworn into office. In every case an oath was administered precisely the same in all cases. There was no discrimination made except in a few instances. In those instances the discrimination which was made was in favor of some who thought more formality had been used in their case; but it was only made to disappoint them more completely. This must be remembered. You had then double the number the law allowed of ordinary employes in the classes referred to about this House, no one of whom had the slightest means of knowing or proving whether he had a contract of employment with the United States. They all believed they had. They were all in the same relation to the Government. An officer authorized to employ them told them they were employed, put them, as he said, upon the roll, swore them into office, and they went on holding the office. Some of them at the end of one month and some at the end of two months were told there was no provision for their payment; not because they were in any way discriminated against by law, but because the same Doorkeeper, acting in violation of law, at the end of one or two months chose to say to some, "You have no regular employment," and to others, "You will be paid." It was a mere matter of capricious determination on his part, without system or check.

That was then the fact. Mark you, he gave to none the evidence of their agreement with the Government to serve it. He left them in that situation purposely, in order that he might have the whole roll under his own control. Their utter helplessness was his strength, as we shall see. I insist upon it that these people, one hundred and twenty or more of them, had rights against the Government. The law provides that men shall be properly employed. It fixes their number. It provides that he who makes a false roll shall be regarded as guilty of embezzlement and punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary. Let us see what Congress in its wisdom has seen fit to enact upon this subject. We have in section 5438 of the Revised Statutes the provision that—

Every person who makes or causes to be made, or presents or causes to be presented, for payment or approval, to or by any person or officer in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, any claim upon or against the Government of the United States, or any Department or officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false, fictitious, or fraudulent, or who, for the purpose of obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or approval of such claim, makes, uses, or causes to be made or used, any false bill, receipt, voucher, roll, account, claim, &c.—

Shall be held to be guilty of a fraud upon the Government, and—shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than one nor more than five years and fined not less than one thousand or more than five thousand dollars.

We have another provision in section 5483:

Every officer charged with the payment of any of the appropriations made by any act of Congress, who pays to any clerk, or other employé of the United States, a sum less than that provided by law, and requires such employé to receipt or give a voucher for an amount greater than that actually paid to and received by him, is guilty of embezzlement, and shall be fined in double the amount so withheld from any employé of the Government and shall be imprisoned at hard labor for the term of two years.

You have still another provision, section 5488, that every disbursing officer of the United States who transfers or applies any portion of the public money intrusted to him for any purpose not prescribed by law shall be deemed guilty of an embezzlement and shall be—

Punished by imprisonment with hard labor for a term not less than one year nor more than ten years, or by a fine of not more than the amount embezzled or less than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

You have still further, in section 5501, the provision that—

Every officer of the United States, and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States, in any official capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government thereof; and every officer or person acting for or on behalf of either House of Congress, or of any committee of either House, or of both Houses thereof, who asks, accepts, or receives any money, or any contract, promise, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, with intent to have his decision or action on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may, at any time, be pending, or which may be by law brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place of trust or profit, influenced thereby, shall be punished as prescribed in the preceding section.

Which also is by fine and imprisonment. You have made these provisions of law for the purpose of protecting the employés of the Government and for the protection of the Treasury. Every person who has intelligently read the testimony before us will find that except by the merest technicality it would be impossible for the Doorkeeper of this House to escape these penalties provided by your statutes if he were before a jury of the country. And why? In this matter of these employés was he not bound to put upon the roll of the House the men who were employed in accordance with law? The statute provided the number of messengers who were to keep the doors and wait upon committees, the number of laborers to serve under the janitor, the number of pages to do duty upon the floor. Mr. Polk made no such roll. He admits that he has employed a greater number than he had legal authority for, and he admits in his testimony that he has made no discrimination. Some of these employés had valid contracts with the United States. Who were they? How shall you find them? Where is the contract, or the valid entry of their appointment or list of their names? You look for it in vain. There is none.

He did not give you his lawful roll or make any record of the legal appointments. He has mixed the names on his lists and kept them mixed so that no man of them all till this time knew and no man at this time knows whether he is one of those who has a valid contract with the Government for his services, and for the lawfully established compensation.

Look a moment at one of the particular cases. We have the case of a poor colored man named Lyle who had been employed under the Doorkeeper of the preceding Congress, upon the understanding and with the assurance of the officers of the House that he was employed as a regular laborer at $60 per month. The testimony shows that he had faithfully served as a laborer all the summer sweeping and scrubbing the hall and the corridors, doing all the menial work that he was called upon to do. Then at the beginning of the session the janitor, who was in that respect the agent of the Doorkeeper, showed him his name on a list and told him those whose names were on that list were the regular employés of the House. Under those circumstances he served on till the 21st of December, and then was told there was no provision for his payment. That was his first discovery of the fact. He was further informed that as a mere gratuity from the House he might be paid $1 a day for the time he had actually served prior to the regular session of Congress, and he was obliged to take that, not as payment of his contract with the United States Government, which had been made by its officers and solemnly repeated when he was sworn as their servant, but as a gratuity from this House, out of its contingent fund, under a resolution which we passed at the close of the called session, in order to give some money, as we were told, to those serving here without any regular or authoritative employment, no other means having been provided for their payment.

Notice, if you please, that this man was not a hanger-on; he was a man who had been at work in a regular manner, and whom the present Doorkeeper found at work; who had been informed by the janitor that he was regularly on the roll. Now where is the contract? Does it become this House to allow him to be treated as one having no lawful claim? But this was only one of the many instances proven in the evidence before the committee—and the more it was examined the worse the facts became—one of the flagrant instances in which the Doorkeeper having employed a man lawfully, and that man having faithfully done the work for which he was employed, he has failed to get payment of the amount due for his services. I do not care where the money has gone. I do not care what plea of poverty or of sympathy is set up by gentlemen as an excuse for unlawful employment of men who have got this man's money. The money which the United States had appropriated for that laborer to do its work was not for pay to men who idled about here and did no work. Whether such were on the regular roll or not, I care not. To put them there and leave this poor laborer off, was only to add insult to injury. His title to his pay was sacred, and we shall not be held blameless if we do not punish the officer who has applied this man's money to other purposes.

Here was a contract made by an authorized officer who could bind the Government, and who did bind the Government to the extent of his power; and instead of putting that poor man's name upon the roll, who had earned the money, he kept it off the roll and paid the money to somebody else. Under the statutes I have referred to, you would find it very difficult to defend any officer from conviction under an indictment for that offense and from a verdict which would send him to the penitentiary. It will not do to talk of these things as trifling. We had before us several other cases of a similar kind, testified to by witnesses of respectable appearance and apparent truth. John F. Edwards, a most respectable man so far as appearance goes, was in October regularly appointed on the annual roll at the rate of $1,000 per year, and supposed he was secure in his place. Toward the last of November he was told that he was not on the roll, but to keep on at work and it would all be right. He did keep on under the personal direction of the Doorkeeper, who gave him a written promise of permanent employment, which was presented before the committee and was evidence of the fact that the Doorkeeper had given this man not only a verbal but a written engagement of permanent employment by the Government at the salary stated. But without any pretense of fault on his part, at the mere whim of his superior, or upon the "pressure" which is to excuse everything, he was summarily dismissed.

His pay at the rate of $1,000 a year was $83.33 per month, but at the time he was discharged he was paid at the rate of $62.25. Twenty dollars a month of his pay was kept back and used for some other purpose; we are told it was to pay others who were irregularly employed; but whether or not that be true, (for it requires all our charity to believe it, as there is no conclusive evidence) the statute was violated and the money which was appropriated for his pay and which ought to have gone to this employé of the Government was used elsewhere.

We have then the case of a Mr. Alcorn, another apparently respectable man, who worked steadily from the beginning of the called session until the 24th day of December. He was paid up to the 15th of that month only, but received no official notice of discharge until the 15th of February. His member of Congress told him that Mr. Polk had promised to put him permanently on duty. Mr. Polk put him on duty, as he says, on the assumption that Congress would pass a special resolution to pay him. Now mark you, in these cases the men were not irregularly employed. There were not more than two or three men who were told that they must look out for their own pay. There was an instance of that kind in which the witness testified that he had been working, but that he knew all the time that he might get something or get nothing. He hoped that the general benevolence of the House would pay him for doing nothing, for sitting at the door of a committee-room where no one wanted him.

But the cases which I have cited are not such cases; they are cases of regular employment. What I want the House to understand is that in the case of the whole of these sixty-three their employment was as regular as that of a member of the House; they were sworn into office; they were told that they were employed by those who were authorized to act for the Government, and we cannot get around that fact by declaring that these are irregularities. The roll in the Doorkeeper's department was made twice as large as it should be in the usual form under the law, and in some cases money was taken from some to be paid to others, as is alleged, though there is no book of accounts by which we can tell what men had claims and who had not. The Committee of Accounts tried to determine this in December, but were forced to rely upon such statements as the Doorkeeper chose to give them, for he testifies that he kept no time-book of the work done by men in his employ, and no regular list of appointments or discharges. None such has been produced.

Take next the pages' roll. The pages are employed under a statute which says that they shall be paid $2.50 a day for the time that they are actually employed. In fixing a daily payment the statute intended to limit the claim to working days, but lax custom is said to have modified this. In the month of December double the number of pages authorized by law were actually employed, as the Doorkeeper himself testifies. What do the rolls show? Nothing that accords with the facts. The truth is this: the Doorkeeper employed during the first half of the month, when we were here in session, that is to say, until December 16, when we took Christmas recess, which lasted until the 10th of January, or fully three weeks, double the number of pages allowed by the statute. But when we come to examine the roll we find this state of facts certified to by the Doorkeeper, as he was bound to certify on his official truth and honor to his roll, namely, that there were twenty-eight pages employed from the 1st December down to and including the 16th of the month. That on the 16th day of December he discharged twenty-eight and employed twenty-eight others, whose names are given, and whom he officially certifies were employed during the remainder of that month. Now every member here knows that there was no session of Congress during the remainder of the month, and the roll, therefore, was a fiction, was a false roll within the statutory definition. You may say that it was a laudable and benevolent thing to make it, after the unlawful thing of appointing fifty-six pages had been done; but the fact remains that he certified to that which was false. The truth is that there were three or four boys detailed at their own wish to serve during the recess, and no others were here at all. This also is admitted by Mr. Polk in his testimony. What form of excuse is attempted for this?

The claim is made that a habit has grown up of allowing those who are employed by the day to be paid during short recesses; usually our recesses are for one or two days, or a week at most, and no attention had ever been formally called to the matter. So far as we know, no such long vacation as this three weeks' vacation had occurred before in the progress of the connected sessions of Congress. Mr. Polk pleads that he was informed that pay was usually given to employes for the recess, when they were serving continuously before and after such recess, and that his decision was not necessary to get the payment from the Treasury of this extra money. But it will be seen that this is very far from excuse or explanation. The officers consulted, the Clerk of the House and one of the Comptrollers, put the matter on the ground that if the Doorkeeper himself officially certified that he had employed certain persons during a given time they could not deny his certificate and could not refuse to allow his vouchers to be paid under the circumstances. He made a certificate which was false, for if he had made it in accordance with the truth the money could not have been drawn from the Treasury. If anybody was by custom or otherwise entitled to pay for the recess it could only be the twenty-eight who had served during the first half of the month and had been discharged on the 16th of December. They did all the service which was in fact performed in the month, if they were the only regularly employed pages during the time stated, namely, from the 1st to the middle of the month. The custom pleaded, if a real custom, (which is doubted,) gave those boys the pay for the month.

It was either that or no one was entitled to it. But what was done was that a roll which accorded with no facts whatever was made up, and this fictitious roll was used to give pay to those who had been appointed contrary to law and in excess of the number allowed. Now, will you, merely because there had been great pressure from members or others to have more boys assigned to duty as pages than were allowed by law, justify a falsification of the records of the House and say that this is a trivial thing, to be condoned and not in any way to be treated as a serious offense, which should be punished so severely as by declaring the office of Doorkeeper vacant? Then for consistency's sake let us repeal at once the statutes I have read which declare these things to be crimes.

The things which have thus been done are not matters for which the members of this House are nearly as much responsible as some gentlemen are inclined to assume. The members were not fully informed, or if any one was he owes it to himself and to the Doorkeeper to rise in his place here and say that he knew an appointment would be made at his request which the law did not allow, and that he and his employes were notified that the appointment was irregular and illegal. But no such information was given.

There was a pressure upon the Doorkeeper no doubt, as there always is upon every one having the appointing power, to appoint this man or that man, without inquiring whether the roll was full or not. Gentlemen here often feel obliged to go and do go to the Departments and ask for appointments. I wish it were not so, but so it is. They do not inquire personally into the condition of the rolls there. They assume that the officer himself making the appointment shall be responsible for it; that he shall know whether there are any vacancies to be filled. They say to themselves that if he appoints the men it is because he knows he has legal authority to appoint them and a proper place in which to put them.

I will say in justice to members on this floor that I do not find in the testimony before us, and I am familiar with it all, that any member of the House deliberately asked to have an unlawful appointment made. I find that the Doorkeeper himself took these appointments into his own hands, determined how many he would make and made them merely to gratify his own feelings, to satisfy his personal friends, or to pay his political debts.

For example, we have the case of a man named Duffy, who made an affidavit at the beginning of this case. Upon his own testimony it appears that he was a member of the Pennsylvania State central committee of the democratic party; that he had served as chairman of his county and district conventions; that he bore such relation to his party as we may suppose pointed him out as a man fit to occupy a position here.

But he was not appointed for that reason. The Doorkeeper admits on the stand distinctly that he appointed him because he exerted his influence prior to his (Mr. Polk's) election in his favor, and with sufficient zeal and success to create what he regarded as a personal obligation. Mr. Polk therefore appointed Mr. Duffy, and subsequently quarreled with him and discharged him, and out of that quarrel grows a part of the exposure here. Duffy was to have a place with one of the larger salaries, $2,000, he claimed. There were difficulties in Polk's way in keeping the bargain. It did not seem so easy after his election as it did before. He tried to arrange it by having Duffy take a place with a twelve-hundred-dollar salary, the remainder to be made up in some irregular way. Mr. Duffy testifies that Polk told him that he knew he could force the payment of their salaries to all the appointees he created, for he had a "corner on Congress," meaning thereby that members were so much under obligation to him for appointments and favors that he could secure the payment of all his irregular appointments by law or by resolution of the House.

Mr. Polk denies that; but he is contradicted by so many witnesses on so many points that I am justified in assuming that the testimony of those witnesses, who are not themselves charged with any offense, must be relied upon rather than his, when they conflict. We followed this matter up and we find that it is corroborated both directly and circumstantially. The whole of Mr. Polk's reckless system of procedure in disregard of law can be explained only by assuming that he was inflated with the belief that he could use his patronage to secure the legalizing of his unlawful acts and argued, with the foolish sharpness or sharp folly of wrong-doers, that the more he increased his list of employes the greater would be the number of the members of the House who would be interested in covering up what he had done.

This man Duffy was, as I have said, to be paid a larger sum than the law allowed to be paid to any such employé of the House. He was made a messenger on the floor, and in order to pay him what had been promised to him money was taken from the pay of two other employes of the House and handed over to him. One of those other employes, in his anxiety to shield Mr. Polk, attempted to swear that he gave up a part of his monthly salary without knowing that Polk needed it for any purpose, to be kept by him as a gratuity in appointing him to place.

Of course Mr. Polk repudiated that explanation, because it came so plainly under the statute referred to by me in regard to accepting payment for appointment to or continuance in office as to have made it a plain case under the criminal law of the land. This is the manner in which the thing was arranged: two of the employes each month gave up to Polk about $16.66 each, in order that he could make up to Duffy a part of the salary which he had promised him for helping to secure his election as Doorkeeper of the House.

Although these men testified that they did it voluntarily, (everybody testifies that way under the same circumstances,) no one can doubt that the spirit of the law was violated. The thing was done under such circumstances as indicates, as the committee show in their report, that these men were coerced into paying over this money. Duffy swears that Polk told him that unless they paid that amount he would oust them from their places at once.

And so on through the whole of this case similar things are found to exist at every turn. Take the case of Holt, the militiaman from Boston, to whom the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] referred. The testimony shows that during the month of February Holt was paid the money which had been earned by Prescott, a disabled soldier. The testimony shows that Prescott did not know that his name was put on the roll after the 10th of January, when he was told he was discharged. Yet the name was put back on the roll without his knowledge. He was told that he was not on the roll, but that his name would be there from the 1st of February. Meanwhile the month expired, when Prescott was called upon to receive the amount of pay due to him according to the roll; but at the same time that he received for it, he was required to pay it over to this man Holt. He did so, and Holt received the money. On this point there is no difference among the witnesses.

Prescott did this under the direction of the Doorkeeper, acting by his command as the evidence showed, being in such a position that he had no choice except to do it or to lose his place. The money that was due to him was taken from him and given to somebody else. But it is said that Holt had been doing the work and Prescott had not. Prescott had been here; was kept in idleness, it is true, during those days, but he had been on expense; he was in this respect not differently situated from a score of men around the House, while at the same time the money which the official record showed was due to him, and which he alone could receipt for, was handed over to Holt. Will any one pretend that the criminal law of the land was not violated in this? The roll with Prescott's name on it was a "false roll." The payment to Holt was making Prescott receipt for more money than he got. Both these acts are penitentiary offenses, as I have shown.

Now, to my astonishment, and I will also say to my satisfaction, when one of the gentlemen from New England [Mr. PHELPS] rose the other day for a personal explanation he stated that he had himself been told that this man Holt was to be appointed because he had helped Polk in his election; not because the delegation from New England wanted it, but because Polk had incurred such obligations to the man that he [Mr. PHELPS] felt that the only thing to be done was to acquiesce. We thus see that this careful arrangement by which Holt, who was the sham soldier, was to receive $1,200, the highest pay given any class of messengers, and by which the money was to be taken from the real soldier, was not to gratify the New England delegation but to pay Polk's election debts incurred in his efforts to secure election as Doorkeeper of this House. I say this with pleasure in justice to the New England members.

We had also before us evidence which came out incidentally that Mr. Polk had said that these personal debts should be paid, he did not care where the men came from; that State or position made no difference; that he did not care if the men were from Patagonia, they should have the places, if they were among the friends to whom he had been indebted for active service among the members of the House in his favor prior to his election. When he wanted to use the public funds to pay these debts we were told that these men were necessary to the routine business of the House. The Committee of Accounts deserve great credit for their firmness (which I think in this respect has been almost unexampled) in insisting that they would recommend no payments except in accordance with law already enacted. It was this that brought the matter to a crisis. When it was found that the Committee of Accounts would not report in favor of payment, except where the appointment was made in accordance with law, an application was made from the Doorkeeper to the Committee on Appropriations to allow him a greater force, he stating officially, in a letter which you will find in the testimony, that the number of employes authorized was not sufficient to do the business of the House. Now, what do we know by experience?

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him by an inquiry?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman has alluded to what was stated by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHELPS] in a personal explanation the other day. Now, on the very subject upon which the gentleman is speaking, Mr. PHELPS said:

The matter remained in that condition until, in consequence of an excess of appointments by the Doorkeeper, it became necessary to reduce the number and revise the roll, when I was shown by Mr. Polk a printed list, giving to New England three appointments, namely, a soldier, a fireman, and a laborer. On this list the name of Mr. Holt appeared as a soldier and Mr. Prescott, of New Hampshire, and Mr. McDowell, of Connecticut, as fireman and laborer. I immediately stated to Mr. Polk that I thought Holt was incorrectly designated as a soldier, and that unless the mistake was corrected it would lead both himself and Holt into difficulty. He said Holt represented to him that he was a soldier and was entitled to that designation. I replied that I would see him and ascertain positively about it. I did so and found that my impression was correct. I reported at once to Mr. Polk, and he promptly made the necessary change by substituting the name of Prescott for that of Holt and entering Holt as fireman. In first placing Holt on the soldiers' roll, I have no doubt he acted in good faith. After the change was made, which considerably reduced the compensation of Holt, I stated to him I was confident Mr. Polk had done the best he could for him, and advised him to be satisfied. He said the pay was small, but he thought an arrangement could be made with McDowell and Prescott to equalize their salaries and have it satisfactory to them all.

That is the statement of Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. It is the statement of Mr. PHELPS; but it does not modify at all what I said, that the man was given the position to pay Polk's election debt and not at all to satisfy the delegation from New England. But further than that, (and the gentleman is too just to ignore the effect of this evidence,) after these facts had occurred and after Mr. Polk had thus been informed that this man was not entitled to be on the soldiers' roll, he produced him before the committee and had his counsel make him testify in the disgraceful manner exposed here by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.] He puts him on the stand to swear that he had been three years in the military service from Massachusetts. Mr. Polk's counsel put that question to the witness in order to draw out a statement which might excuse this nefarious employment. Things like this bear directly upon the question of the good faith, the credibility, and the honesty of your Doorkeeper in this matter. He could not innocently put the man on the stand to swear that he was a Union soldier from Massachusetts. It is evident that there was a deliberate design to cover these things up and to put them in such a guise as should not be at all in accordance with the facts, and should mislead the committee.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLYMER. I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended.

Mr. YEATES. If time is to be extended to others also, I do not object. The SPEAKER. The time of other gentlemen has already been extended.

Many MEMBERS. Go on!

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. YEATES. I shall not object if the same courtesy be allowed to others.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I trust there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the extension of the time of the gentleman from Ohio, and he will proceed.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I will not detain the House long, because my purpose is to touch only the outline of this matter. Nothing short of reading these four hundred pages of testimony could do it full justice. I call the attention of members to the fact that these are not things of which we can talk slightly. The majority of the House should understand that if they vote to sustain Mr. Polk they will be and ought to be held responsible for all the disgraceful facts that this book of testimony discloses. We have here before us evidence that the employes of the House as authorized by law are abundantly numerous to do the work. There has been no lack of service during the past two months. There have been one or two employes needed, who ought to have been taken from the list of those not doing any necessary work and transferred to the folding-room and elsewhere. You cannot get your Committee of Accounts or the committee whose report is now being considered to give any other information than that the employes of the House as authorized by law are in excess of its real needs. When, therefore, the Doorkeeper undertook to appoint twice as many subordinates as were necessary, thus extending his own patronage and power, he was doing it on his own responsibility. He owed it to the majority in this House, looking at the matter simply in a party point of view, as he had the credit of the party in his hands, to ascertain at the very earliest day the number of those already in his employ and see whether they were sufficient for the work. On the 9th of November, three weeks after this House was organized, he reports to the Committee on Appropriations that the force authorized by law was not enough.

That report, as all the evidence before us shows, was made without any authority of fact. It was made purely and solely to increase the patronage of that office. It was made when not one solitary man was needed. It was made when, if those who were allowed by law were diligently employed, your work would be thoroughly and easily done. Therefore we say there was no necessity for his action; that the necessity was manufactured and the appointees were manufactured also to suit the occasion.

But this is not all. We found upon examination that a class of the employes of the House engaged in the janitor's department were being allowed to employ substitutes. Now mark, there were two ways in which substitutes have been employed about the House of Representatives. The men who are engaged as messengers and have charge of committee-rooms have been often allowed to employ some other person on the Doorkeeper's list to do some small portion of the work, such as sweeping the room and the like. But the class I now refer to are the laborers of the House, about the corridor, scrubbing and cleaning, doing perpetual daily work requiring full daily time. The testimony before the House is that more than two-thirds of those now employed by the House are hiring substitutes at one-sixth of the pay which the United States gives them; that the work which is done under your janitor costs actually to those who do the work $10 per month while the parties appointed to do it are receiving $60 a month; that they are thus able to farm out at $10 per month the actual work and to receive the other $50 a month for themselves upon which they may live in idleness.

In this case there is no pretense the time is used otherwise. The men who are thus paid by the Government at a high rate are not doing any duty. The laborers who do it at $10, as the janitor himself testified before us, do the whole labor required, working through the whole day, while the fortunate nominal laborers upon the "regular roll" receive $60 a month. In other words, they get, after paying their substitutes, $50 a month for doing nothing, and this enables them to live at ease upon the Government or to run into the temptations of a vicious kind, to which idle men about town are subject. Gentlemen who believe in economy must understand they have that to face. It is not a system of allowing a man in charge of a committee-room to have some work of a trivial character done by a fellow-laborer, but it is the absolute and complete substitution of men at $10 a month to do the work for which another class who do nothing at all are paid from the Treasury $60 a month. We have had testimony before us bearing upon the question whether this has been done in former Congresses.

Mr. YEATES. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio whether it is not in the testimony that it has been done in preceding Congresses?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I will tell you exactly what was the testimony before the committee. The Doorkeeper of the Forty-third Congress, Mr. Buxton, was brought before us and testified that in his time it never was permitted at all; that nothing of this class of substitution was allowed; that only a little trivial work was done by one for another, both being in the employment of the Government. This hiring of men to do full work at a small price for those who got the places as a piece of political patronage and letting these secure an idle living without labor was unknown and not permitted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the work was not done more economically under Mr. Polk than under his predecessors? What is the comparison between the two systems—which cost the most?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I will answer that very gladly, because fallacies of that sort need to be exposed when made. It is not a question as to which cost the Government the most. It is the question whether you will take money out of the Treasury and employ a man at $60 a month to do certain work while he gets some poor negro to do it for $10 and puts the rest into his pocket, or whether you will see that the man who does the work gets his pay. If the work only brings $10 a month to the man who really does it, it is too clear for argument that the remainder should stay in the Treasury and then five-sixths of all it now costs will be saved to the tax-payer.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him with a question?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. I understood the gentleman to say the testimony shows nothing of that kind had been done before. Does it not show that some officer in charge of the statutory room of this Capitol, who was put in charge of it many years ago, and has continued to have charge of it, has a negro boy employed to do his work there for a less sum than he himself receives?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I spoke simply of the Doorkeeper's employés. There has been a question raised which needs to be investigated to which my colleague has just referred. But the testimony before the committee was that the person spoken of neither is now nor ever has been in the employ of the Doorkeeper, and consequently it was no part of his case. It is uncertain whether the person is in the employ of any officer of this House. The payment has been by special resolution.

Mr. YEATES. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, I wish to call his attention to the evidence of Mr. McMAHON, a member of this House, page 363. He says:

There are a good many evils about the running of the House. There are men on the rolls who do not do any work, but who have other men do their work. That is not an evil that grew up in the present House; it is inherited from the past.

That is the evidence of Mr. McMAHON.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. But I beg to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Mr. McMAHON does not testify to that as a matter within his own knowledge. He speaks of it precisely as I have heard scores of other gentlemen speak of it, and when you come to sift it by requiring witnesses to testify to what they know, you will find that the evil we are now talking of has grown up in this Congress, or the last at farthest, and had not existed for some years before that.

Mr. YEATES. The witness, Mr. McMAHON, further says:

The Committee of Accounts have been endeavoring to eradicate these evils, and I think that before we get through we will have entire success. This resolution was communicated to the Doorkeeper.

It was communicated to the Doorkeeper by the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Yes, sir; I have said the Committee of Accounts of this House have most nobly done their duty in endeavoring to stand between the House and this sort of raid upon the Treasury; and I have pleasure in saying this, because I know they have had to face all kinds of importunities and to act in the face of all sorts of statements as to what the custom had been. The plea of custom has been used to them, with every other ingenious plea that could be devised. What Mr. McMAHON has said is strictly true, as shown to us from other sources; and what I want is that the House shall stand by their Committee of Accounts and shall co-operate with them in their earnest effort to correct abuses. When that is done, I am satisfied this abuse will be corrected among others. But you will never do it except by putting the ax to the root of the tree. You will not do it by letting your Doorkeeper or any other officer put on his roll twice as many as are needed in order to make patronage for himself or places for your constituents. You will not do it by calling it a trifling and insignificant thing, when it is shown that work is done here for $10 a month for which the Treasury pays $60. You will not do it until you insist there shall be honesty and strictness of administration among all your officers, and by making it plain that, as you wish to investigate the Departments of the Government generally, so you are prepared to investigate your own officers and punish their malfeasancess.

Mr. YEATES. If the gentleman will look to page 325 he will find the testimony of Mr. Buxton, the former Doorkeeper. Being asked whether this was ever done before, he said it was:

Mr. COX. Fix the time.

The WITNESS. It was in the Fortieth Congress, I think. There was some trouble about the employment of substitutes, and the Committee of Accounts introduced a resolution that no man should be put upon the Doorkeeper's rolls unless he had actually performed the service, and they required the Doorkeeper; that is, they required me after I came into office, to certify that every man who appeared on the rolls had performed service except during the one month's holiday.

He says this was done in the Fortieth Congress, and there was a special resolution from the Committee of Accounts that prevented his continuing the practice. And there were none such here.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. The Fortieth Congress was ten years ago. This is the Forty-fifth Congress. What I ask is, are you so determined that abuses which existed prior to the Fortieth Congress shall be revived, that you will go back over a period of ten years and say that because it can be shown they existed then and were corrected and prohibited, your Doorkeeper shall go acquit because of the precedent thus shown?

Mr. YEATES. Not at all. But the gentleman will bear in mind this was an abuse which crept in gradually, and there never has been any action on it heretofore except what has come from the Committee of Accounts. It has not been by any investigation of this House.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. But, as Mr. Buxton testified, in the Fortieth Congress the Committee of Accounts reported a resolution that the abuse should be corrected, and it was corrected; and during the time that gentleman was Doorkeeper it was not tolerated. And now it is no defense for Mr. Polk to urge that he can go back over a period of ten years and find prior to that time a similar abuse. You are not able to show that it has existed in the interim. The argument the gentleman urges would give license to every kind of corruption you can think of. Because it was corrected then, we are bound to see that it shall stay corrected, and that he who introduces it anew shall be held to a most rigid accountability.

Mr. CLYMER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether these abuses exist now?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Yes, sir; I venture to say that they do, from the knowledge I have been able to get of the facts, as a member of the committee. The progress of the investigation has not even begotten caution for the moment in the practices of the Doorkeeper. The tolerance of substitutes, such as I have described, exists to-day. No regular method of employing or discharging subordinates has been adopted. Every man in the Doorkeeper's employ is in uncertainty now, as before, whether he is on any permanent roll. The Government has no contract with him and he has no contract with the Government upon which he can rely.

There have been within the last month, ay, within the last week, changes made in the rolls of those employed the previous month, putting off one man and putting on another, according as the Doorkeeper saw fit to regard the one or the other as an employé of the House.

I know that one man who worked here as fireman has been put upon the disabled soldiers' roll, and is credited with pay there, when he himself was not notified of the change at all when it was made, and did not know it was done till he drew his pay the present week. In this way the whole thing has been a mere sham and a cheat, in which the Doorkeeper claims to have the whole of his roll, as he calls it, to use as he pleases, and at the end of the month employés are in doubt as to whether they will find their names upon any roll or not.

What honesty is there in this treatment by the officer of the Government of the laboring man, after he has been employed and sworn into an office, to let him find at the end of a month or two that he has no claim at all upon the Treasury and his pay is simply a question of mercy or charity between him and the House.

It should be insisted upon that from the inception of the business the refusal to make a distinction between regular and irregular employés is a fraud upon the Government and upon every man whom the Government employs. He has a right to know whether he is in the employment of the House or not. Inquire among your constituents who have come here seeking appointments, and all of them will tell you that they came believing that their employment was as thoroughly valid and reliable as appointments to clerkships in the Departments; but afterward they found out that they had no appointment at all. Somebody cheated them, and it is no answer to say they were unfortunate for place. The Doorkeeper owed it to the House and to the country to tell applicants plainly and honestly that only so many could be appointed by law, and when the number was full to say so. The plea of good-natured yielding to pressure is, in plain English, a confession of having yielded to temptation to violate the criminal law of the land.

Mr. EDEN. I would like the gentleman from Ohio to point to the page in the testimony in reference to the removal of this fireman.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I beg pardon of the gentleman; he was not listening to me. A question was put to me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER], whether these things existed to-day, and I answered that they did and instanced this case as one of them.

Mr. EDEN. Where shall I find the evidence of that in the testimony, so that I may examine it?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. The gentleman is still misapprehending me. I have been answering a question as to my personal belief whether these things have continued since the committee has been making the investigation, and since the Doorkeeper was thereby put on his good behavior.

Mr. EDEN. Then you were not speaking of anything that appears in the testimony?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I repeat that I am answering the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to what has occurred since the investigation began. If gentlemen do not want me to refer to anything that has occurred since that time, they must not ask me questions about it, but if I am asked I must answer the question candidly.

Mr. Speaker, we have no rule, no order, no adhesion to law on the part of this officer of the House in the performance of his duties. I would therefore repeat my demand upon gentlemen to answer how the Doorkeeper could escape if he were before a jury under indictment, under the statutes which I have cited, by whose provisions to make a false roll is a penitentiary offense?

Every time the roll is juggled with and a man is told that he is employed, and afterward learns that he is not employed, a false roll is made, and for every time it is done an indictment would lie, under the statute, or else your statutes are not worth a copper.

Before I sit down I want to call the attention of the House for an instant to the singular position in which the minority of the committee have placed themselves here. They tell us at the outset of their report:

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, feel constrained to differ from the majority in the report made upon the resolution offered by Hon. JOHN H. BAKER and referred to said committee on the 1st February, 1878. After long and tedious investigation and due consideration given the testimony, we find, as to the first allegation, that John W. Polk, Doorkeeper, did employ many persons in excess of the number authorized by law, who, together with others serving without employment or appointment by him, amounted to the number of sixty-three, and all of these were paid by resolution of the House adopted December 15, 1877, under the supervision of the Committee of Accounts.

Now there is a fact, a substantive fact. They then go on to say:

That this employment was notorious and public, Polk, on the 9th November, 1877, having communicated the fact to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

I put it to gentlemen upon this floor what does this language mean? Why was an open and notorious violation of the law any the less an offense because of its openness and notoriety? Yet these gentlemen who are defending the Doorkeeper admit, nay, they allege with emphasis, that it was open and notorious, and was even made known to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Has this House at any time said that it would strip itself of the power to punish this open and notorious violation of law? And will gentlemen rise here and tell us that the majority of your committee have not acted in accordance with their duty, when they have said, what is admitted by the report of the minority, that this open, notorious violation of the law is the very thing that was charged in the resolution that was presented by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER?]

Mr. CRAVENS. I wish you would read all that sentence.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Some gentleman on that side can read it; or, if there is anything I have not read which should be read to make my statement of the case fairer and more plain, I will read it.

Mr. CRAVENS. Does it not further state that, with the knowledge that this so-called violation of the law was notorious and public, this House appropriated money for the payment of these persons?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Let us look at that. That is precisely the kind of argument that you will always hear in such cases as this, and which demonstrates the necessity of such action as the majority of the committee recommend. What did this House do? On the 16th of December last, the Committee of Accounts brought in a resolution to appropriate the sum of $3,800 to pay the poor men who had been serving here and who could not get their pay. Who were these men? They were men whom your Doorkeeper told they had been regularly employed. They were men who had been sworn into your service. They were men whom he, as the agent of this House, made your employes and then refused to pay them. Either his pretended appointment of them was a fraud upon them and upon you or his refusal to pay was a fraud; one or both.

Now, when we were told that these men had not been paid, what was done? Your Committee of Accounts would not make any recommendation, but only reported to the House the fact for its action, as your RECORD will show. They stated to us that certain men had been at work under employment not authorized by law, and presented a resolution appropriating $3,800 to pay them, if the House desired to do so; but they did not recommend the passage of the resolution. In the hurry of the last hours of the session, with no time for inquiry, unwilling to have men go unpaid who had worked, even irregularly, the House passed the resolution.

What is argued from that? Why, that the House has justified the employment of these men! Now if my knowledge of either law, decency, or justice amounts to anything, I tell you that we shall be bound to pay a great many more men for work which they have done under contracts which have been made in the name of the Government by your authorized agent.

There is the poor colored man Lyle, who served all through last summer and never had a penny paid him. He was never informed that he was not regularly on the roll until the 29th of December last. He has a claim on you. You elected a man to make contracts for the Government; he is ostensibly clothed with authority to employ these men. It would be dishonorable to every man of us here if we did not pay them and then punish the one who put them falsely on the roll, or who refused to put them on the roll when they had performed the service. Instead of this being a condoning of the offense, it shows that the United States Treasury has already been mulcted in $3,800 in consequence of this man's illegal acts. And yet gentlemen tell us that that is a condoning of the offense!

Mr. CRAVENS. It is very remarkable that a man should serve here for eight months, knowing that the employes of this House are paid monthly, and not find out in all that time that his name was not on the roll.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Yes, it is very remarkable.

Mr. CRAVENS. The testimony in this case shows that each and every one of the men was paid by resolution of the House.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. The gentleman is surely mistaken. The testimony shows that there are still some men who are served in that way. Various pretexes have been given them to keep them quiet and at their labor.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Who put this Lyle at work; Mr. Polk or Mr. Patterson?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Both of them are responsible for it. There have been but two democratic Congresses here lately; and both of the democratic Doorkeepers are responsible for this man being in the service here. Patterson put him in, and Polk found him in and kept him in. Polk found him here, and swore him in anew into the same position on the 3d day of November. That is what was done.

Mr. REED. Ask him some other questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I say, then, that the fact amounts to this: absolutely without any necessity whatever, absolutely without law, as the gentleman who has just interrupted me [Mr. CRAVENS] has himself reported, in a manner that was a public, open, and notorious violation of law, you have been forced to pay $3,800 out of the Treasury, and will have to pay much more, unless we dishonestly repudiate obligations which we gave this Doorkeeper the opportunity to impose upon us by clothing him with authority in the matter.

There is no distinction between these men. You cannot point to any of the testimony and show that one of these men has not as good a right as another to receive his pay. If you pay anybody whose name is on the roll, or who has been employed here in this House, you must pay them all, because they were employed here by the authority of your officer, who swore them into office and told them that they were to receive such and such wages for their service. There was never any possible opportunity given to them or to anybody else to learn that there was any difference between them.

Your Doorkeeper has used simply "his own sweet will" to employ and pay whom he liked. If a man he had employed offended him in any way he simply dropped his name from the roll at the end of the month, and the man had no redress and could get no pay for the labor already done. An examination of the rolls of the House will show that they have been scratched and rescratched, so that no employe could possibly tell whether he was on the roll or not.

In one instance, as the testimony shows, the attention of Polk was called to the fact that the name of one man that he favored was not on the roll. He simply scratched the name of another man off the roll and put the name of his friend in the place, saying that some one had to be off the roll, and it might as well be that one. The one whose name was scratched off had served during the month, had been promised his pay, and the pay was not given to him. When we asked him if he was authorized to put on the soldiers' roll the names of any except those who were really disabled Union soldiers, what was his answer? He said, No; he did not claim that at all; he thought, himself, that the law requires that disabled Union soldiers should be upon that roll; but he was driven to do it by his kind-hearted inability to do the right and lawful thing and stick to it.

When he was asked if he was authorized to make payments in the manner in which he had made them, and to make up his rolls as he made them for the month of December, for instance, he said, No; I do not think that was right. But I thought I ought to pay by the day those who were employed for so much a day, and not to pay them to the last of December, when the House was not in session. But the clerk told me I could do so and that the Treasury officers said I might do it.

But when your committee called the Clerk of the House and inquired of him in regard to this statement of Mr. Polk, they were told that when the Doorkeeper of the House on his responsibility as an officer submitted a certificate with his name signed to it that these men had served in the manner in which and for the time the roll indicated, they were not authorized to go behind his certificate but were compelled to pay the men as he certified.

If anybody believes that that takes the responsibility from Mr. Polk, they are welcome to the belief. Thus the matter stands. Do not try to laugh it down. I am dealing as a friend with gentlemen on the other side of the House in giving them the case on which their action will be judged by the country.

It cannot be said that this practice has been followed because there have been no warnings given.

Mr. Polk has been warned that neither the Committee on Appropriations nor the Committee of Accounts will favor the introduction of resolutions to pay unnecessary men, men not authorized by law to be employed here. And all honor to those committees for that.

Nor is this all. The Doorkeeper tells us in his testimony that he himself drafted a bill which he got the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] to introduce here and have referred, to change the roll of his employes. If you will look at that bill you will see the manner in which he has attempted to profit by it. I have here the bill itself, and find this clause in it:

For salary of forty-six messengers, at the rate of $400 each for the short session, and $500 each for the long session of the House of Representatives, and at the same rate for extra sessions.

Here it is proposed to employ forty-six messengers when according to the present law there should be but thirty-two on the roll. Take another item:

For salary of forty-six pages, at $2 per day while employed.

The law now authorizes the employment of twenty-eight pages, of whom three shall be riding-pages. This is the plan prepared by the Doorkeeper himself, and introduced here into the House for the purpose of increasing his patronage and increasing the rolls of this House unnecessarily. Yet he was bound to know from the first week of his employment that he had more men than he needed for his work.

But this is not all. Under his idea of his "corner upon Congress," (for, whether he used that term or not, he acted upon the idea,) he appointed a man to an entirely new place, one not provided for by law. That man actually drew $160 a month, although there was no law for the place and no authority for his employment. The Doorkeeper made the place for him; he enacted the law for you, and succeeded in getting pay for the man for at least one month, until the Committee of Accounts put its foot on that matter also. Thus the thing has gone on.

And now a word or two as to the charge of lobbying and I shall have done. Your committee has reported that we do not find that during the present session of Congress the Doorkeeper has an interest in anything commonly known as a lobby scheme. He deserves the full credit for that fact, whatever it may be. But since allusion has been made to the testimony on this point, I will say that there is here an instance as significant as you need ask for, showing how this system of giving the Doorkeeper such enlarged patronage has led to the employment of men who ought not to be tolerated about the House.

The Doorkeeper admits that he was concerned in one lobbying scheme during the last Congress.

We have his statement that he employed a man to assist him at that time, in part at least because that man claimed to have influence over a member of Congress who was also a member of the Committee for the District of Columbia. Now, if there is anything which members of Congress have learned to despise, about which they have rightly been sensitive, and toward which they are unwilling to show the least leniency, it is the lobbyist who trades upon the pretense of being able to control the votes of members. If there is one thing more than another which is not to be lightly condoned, which deserves execration from every man on this floor who is conscious of honesty, it is the conduct of him who makes profit by falsely pretending to have power to control the votes of members. Yet here is a man who admits, as though it were a trivial affair, that he did employ in a lobbying scheme assistance for that purpose, the member of Congress being named—a gentleman of such repute that the moment his name was given there was no trouble in the mind of the committee as to his freedom from any such influences. But the man who employed this person, guilty of falsely pretending to be able to sell out one of this body, is your successful candidate for Doorkeeper. Further than that, in the prosecution of his canvass, we find that this identical man was his confidential agent, carrying on the correspondence from which extracts have been made, in which he was assuring Mr. Coryell, who has been referred to, Mr. Duffy, and others, that Polk would stand by them though they came from Patagonia and that your democratic members of Congress should not control the patronage to their disadvantage, because they had made themselves useful to him. This is the person who was the confidential go-between of the Doorkeeper, managing his canvass for him.

These are facts which appear in the book of evidence. The majority of this House must face them, and had much better do so here than face them before the country by and by. If gentlemen on this floor choose to say "We did right in making this selection;" if they wish to say, as has been jocularly said, "We have about as honest a man as we are likely to get as things go;" if they want to sanction such uses of official patronage, such modes of employing and discharging, paying and refusing to pay, all they need do is to vote that the resolutions offered by the majority of the committee are not such as ought to pass; and the responsibility will be of course where we must assume that they as well as we shall be glad to have it.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I understand the precise question that the House is called upon to decide in this case. I had not supposed that we were to determine in this controversy whether Mr. Polk was the very best man that could be selected as a Doorkeeper, or whether he had done precisely right in every instance since he has filled that office, or whether he had corrected all the abuses that have grown up in that department of the House for the last twenty years. I had supposed we were called upon to determine the question whether or not he had been guilty of corruption and malfeasance in office that would justify this House in giving judgment against him, to deprive him of his office, and put the brand of disgrace upon his brow. If I understand the issue aright, it is simply whether Mr. Polk has been guilty of misconduct that would justify such a judgment by this House. Hence I shall not undertake to meet gentlemen who have discussed this question with the view of determining whether in every single instance Mr. Polk has done what was precisely right. Nor will I undertake to decide whether he has corrected all the abuses which we know have existed in his department for a long time past. This House, in submitting the subject to its committee, adopted a resolution reciting—

Whereas it is alleged that John W. Polk, the Doorkeeper of the House, has employed sixty-three persons in the service of the House in excess of the number authorized by law; and

Whereas it is alleged that men have been employed by said Doorkeeper who were not borne on the roll of employés, and that others have been continued in service after they had been dismissed and dropped from said roll; and

Whereas it is alleged that said Doorkeeper has been guilty of corruption and malfeasance in office, requiring employés under him to pay to other employés a part of the salary to which they are entitled by law, as a condition of their appointment or retention in office; and

Whereas it is alleged that he is interested in claims and bills now pending or about to be brought before the House for action.

In view of these allegations the resolution directed the Committee on Civil-Service Reform to investigate the charges and report their conclusions to the House. The committee has investigated, and has submitted its report. The testimony, which I have examined with a great deal of care, fully bears out the statement of the report that there is no evidence whatever to convict Mr. Polk of any corruption or lobbying in reference to any legislation pending before this House, or to come before it. So far from any proof being presented that he was interested in such legislation, the proof is clear, conclusive, and overwhelming that he is not so interested.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I apprehend if there had been no charge made against Mr. Polk when this resolution was adopted except that he had been employing a force in excess of the number required, the committee would never have had anything to do with the case at all, because after the House had been informed by Mr. Polk and by the Committee of Accounts that he had employed an extra force, after the House had been asked to pay that extra force nearly $4,000, after it had passed a resolution to that effect and the money had been paid, I do not suppose the House would have been guilty of the farce of referring that question to the Committee on Civil-Service Reform to make any investigation.

Mr. HOOKER. And it was passed by a unanimous vote.

Mr. EDEN. Yes, sir; it was passed by a unanimous vote of the House, without a dissenting voice. If it be true, then, that the only real charges preferred by this House and sent to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service have not been sustained, but on the other hand have been disproved, I ask if we would be doing our duty as Representatives of the people and doing justice to Mr. Polk by finding him guilty, discharging him from office, and putting the brand of disgrace upon his brow?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to shield myself for my responsibility for anything I have done on this floor behind Mr. Polk. I voted for this resolution to pay for this extra force with my eyes open and I understood exactly what my act meant when I did it. I presume other gentlemen on this floor understood it as I did, and I do not intend to try and sneak out of my responsibility by throwing it on Mr. Polk, whatever may have been my own opinion as to the necessity of this excessive force.

I do not seek to justify anybody, Mr. Speaker, by a wrong precedent. I do not intend to go very far back in the history of this House and show what the precedent has been. I do not think there is any politics in this question at all. We have heard a great deal said in this House about judicial questions. If we have ever had a judicial question before the House this strikes me as being one, because the effect of our verdict is to deprive the accused of a valuable office and to brand his name with infamy and disgrace. I do not think any gentleman upon this floor, no matter what may be his political predilection or what may be his opinion as to the qualifications of Mr. Polk for this office, can afford to give a judgment in this case other than such as he would give if he were sitting on the bench and trying the man under the rules of law.

The real charges being disposed of leaves but little more to be said. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] referred to some statute (I have not time to refer to it specially just now) under which disbursing officers are not permitted to pay out money except in pursuance of appropriation made by law. Nor did Mr. Polk violate that law. He never paid out a dollar, and could not pay out a dollar, until the House authorized him by the resolution which we passed. Neither could he create any liability on the part of this House, or on the part of the Government of the United States, to pay for a single employé that he put on service about this House in violation of law. Mr. Polk is not a disbursing officer, as I understand it. There are certain specific appropriations made for payment of services under the Doorkeeper of the House, but not a dollar can be paid to any employé of the Doorkeeper except in pursuance of law.

A MEMBER. Payments are made to all these officers by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. EDEN. These officers are paid by the Clerk of the House, and not by Mr. Polk.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that whatever of abuse exists in the Doorkeeper's department in this House came to Mr. Polk by inheritance, and the fault has been more the fault of Congress than of the officers of the House, because Congress held in its own hands the power to correct whatever evils were found to exist, and it has not done so. What are the facts? In the last Congress—and I shall not go back further than that as I am not seeking any political advantage at all and I do not intend to go back and quote precedents of republican Congresses—going back to the last Congress, what do we find? We find in the last session of the last Congress, a short session which lasted but ninety-two days, this House by resolution paid $8,959.21 for extra force under the Doorkeeper. We have appropriated $3,832 under the present Doorkeeper for extra force, and if you intend to put this question before the country as a question of economy Mr. Polk has a right to claim a balance of $5,127.21 in his favor. I do not think it would be civil-service reform if this system prevailed when Mr. Polk came into office by which this large amount was paid at the last session of the last Congress—I do not think it would be good civil-service reform to turn him out because he had been more economical than his predecessors.

But that is not all, Mr. Speaker. I find that on the 15th day of December last, the same day the resolution passed to pay this extra force to which I have already referred, another resolution was passed to pay nineteen more employes of the House who had been at work during the recess when there was no law whatever authorizing their employment, and the whole amount appropriated by that resolution was over $3,000, almost as much as was appropriated to pay this extra force employed by Mr. Polk. And who do you suppose opposed the passage of that resolution? I confess, Mr. Speaker, I was a little shocked myself when that resolution came in; and I was looking out for my leader in civil-service reform and in the practice of economy because ever since my distinguished colleague from Chicago [Mr. HARRISON] made that eloquent and glowing speech of his in favor of paying one and a half millions of the people's money to the centennial exhibition, and especially ever since he made that still grander effort in behalf of the marine band, I have always followed in his footsteps on these questions of economy and civil-service reform. And when this resolution came in I looked for the white plume of my distinguished colleague to lead the way in the path of retrenchment and civil-service reform, but did not see him. Before I got over the shock I found the resolution had passed the House by the unanimous vote of every gentleman in it. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was a resolution paying the employes of this House during the vacation between the close of the Forty-fourth Congress and the commencement of the Forty-fifth, men who were on no roll, men for whom the law made no provision, and for whose appointment Mr. Polk was not responsible. Let us see what was done in the last session of the Forty-fourth Congress.

On the 3d day of March, 1877, the House by resolution authorized the payment of sixteen laborers during the session which was then just closing at the rate of $720 per annum, deducting what they had received. (See RECORD, volume 23, page 2244.)

On the 3d March, 1877, the same day, a resolution passed to pay Thomas Dugan, messenger, for two months, at $60 per month. (See RECORD, same volume.) On the same day, as appears from the same page of the RECORD, a resolution was passed to pay a messenger for the post-office $300.

On the 3d March, 1877, a resolution passed to pay William Deegan $240 for services under the Doorkeeper. (See RECORD, volume 23, page 2244.)

On the 3d March, 1877, as will be seen by reference to the same volume and page, a resolution passed to pay Henry A. Olcott $3.60 per day from January 1, 1877, as messenger to the Clerk. On the same day, as appears from the same volume and page, a resolution passed to pay Frank S. Donnelly $193.60 for services as messenger.

On the 3d March, 1877, a resolution passed to pay Patrick Doran, as messenger to a committee, $3.60 per day during the session. (See RECORD, volume 23, page 2250.)

On the same day there will be found on the same page of the same volume a resolution to pay Nathaniel S. Clark as messenger under the Doorkeeper from the 1st of September to December 4, 1876, at $3.60 per day.

This makes twenty-three messengers and laborers, all but two of whom, I believe, were under the Doorkeeper, provided for just at the close of the last session, who had been employed and had already rendered service without authority of law.

Then in the case I have already referred to the appropriation was made for nineteen more laborers at the extra session of the present Congress, making over forty extra employes of the last House provided for by resolution after the services had been rendered.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Polk came here an entirely new man at the beginning of the extra session, and however honestly and anxiously he may have desired to make the number of employes correspond with what the law requires, I say it was utterly impossible in the first month or two of his service to break up this custom in that department which he found existing when he came. But he may well have believed from the precedents that he saw before him that a larger force than the number required by law was necessary, and that following those precedents he would appoint the force he regarded to be necessary and submit the matter to the House of Representatives for them to make the appropriation, as had been done in preceding Congresses.

This resolution of investigation passed on the 31st of January, and I verily believe from the examination that I have made of this testimony—and I have examined it very thoroughly—from the moment that Mr. Polk ascertained it was not the disposition of this House to continue the employment of this extra force, he has done the very best he could under the circumstances, with his inexperience in the office and in the business of the House, to try to make his rolls conform to the law. At all events, knowing as I do that he is not responsible for these customs, I do not propose to find a verdict against him and dismiss him in disgrace from the office to which we elected him, because he failed in the first two months of his service to correct all these irregularities.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be understood as saying that all this extra force was necessary. I do not wish to be understood as saying that I am in favor of the employment of extra force at all.

On the other hand, I am of the opinion that the force ought to be fixed and prescribed by law in such a way that it would be impossible for any man to be paid whose name got upon the roll, unless the law authorized the payment and the employment before the service was rendered. I do not wish, I repeat, to be understood as saying that the employment of all this extra force was necessary, but I do insist that this House was responsible for the payment of this extra force by the unanimous vote of the House, the extra force that Mr. Polk employed at the beginning of the session, and that the last Congress and preceding Congresses are responsible for the custom out of which those appointments grew, and in the opinion of Congress the employment of such extra force was necessary. Should Mr. Polk, after having seen the determination and disposition of the House to have no more of this extra force, persist in going on and employing extra force in opposition to the known will and determination of the House, then I should be ready to vote to dismiss him from office, not upon the charge of corruption, but upon the charge that he has violated the will of the House and the law of the land willfully and defiantly, and therefore is not longer fitted to serve in that or any other capacity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have heard a good deal said here about the employment of persons on the soldiers' roll who were not entitled to it. Upon that subject I can readily conceive that Mr. Polk would be liable to be imposed upon in making up that roll. But I have yet to see the evidence that shows that he has been guilty of willful violation of the law in reference to the soldiers' roll. I have in my hand the soldiers' roll for the month of March last. There are five men on that roll who were on the roll before Mr. Polk came into office. I notice that two or three of them are republicans. I do not complain of that, for I think there ought to be no discrimination in that regard so far as the soldiers' roll is concerned; and I will state that, so far as the action of the Illinois delegation is concerned upon that subject, the man from that State upon the soldiers' roll is a republican, retained there at the request of the democratic delegation from Illinois.

The first man upon the soldiers' roll is from the Soldiers' Home, J. H. Ensign; then comes the name of S. H. Decker, a republican, with no arms; J. D. Hutton, one-armed; J. H. Knapp, disabled and a pensioner; John Ryan, one leg; C. E. Diemar, a republican, and one-armed; D. L. Payne, who has a surgeon's certificate of disability; W. H. Prescott, seriously wounded.

William S. Dulin is the next on the roll, and was employed from the 1st to the 7th of the month, only he was on the soldiers' roll when he was not entitled to be on it, but he was put on there by the predecessor of Mr. Polk in 1877, and Mr. Polk continued him on the roll until the 7th of March, when, owing to the fact of his being disqualified, he was discharged and another man, I think his name was Davenport, was put in his place, and he was disabled by two wounds.

Mr. PUGH. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] if Mr. Polk was not notified on the 9th of January that Dulin was not qualified for the position, and if after that notification he did not continue him on the roll until the 7th of March last?

Mr. EDEN. If the evidence discloses that fact it has escaped my attention; but at all events Mr. Polk found him on the roll when he came into office, and continued him there until the 7th of March. When he was first notified that Dulin was not qualified for the place I do not know, but if the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PUGH] asserts that fact of his own knowledge, of course I accept his statement.

The next name on the list is that of William Swint, who was employed from the 1st to the 8th, and had received two wounds.

The next name is that of J. I. McConnell, who has but one leg.

The next name is that of M. J. Flannegan, to whom reference has been made, and who served ninety days up in Pennsylvania, and was put upon the roll in May, 1877. I suppose that when Mr. Polk found these persons on the roll he had a right to assume that they were qualified for the position. He could not travel all over the country, up in Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and Massachusetts, and everywhere in order to ascertain whether the men he found on that roll were qualified or not.

But on the 7th of March Flannegan was removed and Mr. Knight was put upon the roll; and I have here his affidavit showing that he served during the entire war, and became disabled; and there is no doubt that he is qualified to fill the place.

So far as Rogers, who has been referred to, is concerned, I have here a certificate from the War Department stating that this man Rogers served during the war, and was honorably discharged at its close.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. EDEN. Certainly.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I wish to call his attention to the fact that the Mr. Rogers to whom he refers has not served here at all, but that his pay has been drawn by his brother, by power of attorney.

Mr. EDEN. I do not desire to go outside of the testimony. I have not seen that in the testimony, and I feel bound in this case, as I would be in a court of justice, to decide on the testimony that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] and the other gentlemen on the committee saw fit to report to the House.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. My reason for interrupting the gentleman was to state that the appointment of this soldier was not made until the testimony had been closed. The man who served on the soldiers' roll under the name of Rogers was not a soldier at all.

Mr. EDEN. I do not dispute that; but if it was desirable to bring these facts before the House for our information and judgment I think it would have been proper to have the case reopened and the new testimony brought before the House so that we could have read it for ourselves and judged of it, to see what effect it should have. I know that my friend from Ohio is too good a lawyer, if he were sitting on the bench trying a case, to allow somebody to come in with an ex parte statement after the evidence had been closed and to take that ex parte statement into consideration in making up his judgment without any opportunity for cross-examination.

I find that Mr. Eugene Durnin, who was on the roll in March, has a certificate of discharge.

Mr. HARRISON. Have you the certificate?

Mr. EDEN. I have not the certificate in that case, though I have in another case. I am speaking upon information which I credit. Mr. Bennet, who was on the roll at that time, served, according to the information that I have, in the Mexican war, as well as the late war; and if that is so I think he ought to be qualified to serve on the soldiers' roll.

Now some complaint has been made about Mr. Holt. The truth is that he never served a single day on the soldiers' roll. He was placed there, but almost immediately afterward, or, as Holt expresses it, "before the ink was dry," Mr. Polk learned that he was not qualified to serve on that roll and discharged him. Mr. Prescott, who was placed on the roll in lieu of Mr. Holt, is amply qualified for a position on that roll, according to the testimony.

I have not time to talk further about this soldiers' roll. I repeat, I have seen no evidence to convince my mind that Mr. Polk has willfully omitted to put proper persons on the soldiers' roll or that he has willfully placed there persons not entitled to be there. There are numerous instances given in the testimony where he did put on persons who were not qualified; but, so far as I know, as soon as the facts were brought to his attention, he discharged such persons from the roll and put others in their place.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another peculiarity about the soldiers' roll. When this investigation was set on foot, when these charges were made against Mr. Polk, there was no charge that he had violated the law in reference to the soldiers' roll. There had been no complaint brought before this House that he had been derelict in his duty in that regard. If it was intended to go into an investigation in reference to the soldiers' roll, it was no more than right and proper that the matter should have been regularly laid before the committee and that Mr. Polk should have been allowed a fair opportunity to answer any charges in reference to the matter. Mr. Polk had a right to assume that he was only called upon to answer the charges that had been made against him by the affidavits filed in this case and recited in the resolution authorizing the investigation. The other side of the House may be more sensitive upon this subject of the soldiers' roll than I am; and yet if I were satisfied that Mr. Polk had willfully and intentionally violated the law in reference to the soldiers' roll, I would upon a proper presentation of the case before the House vote to dismiss him, because I think that when these gallant men who served their country in the hour of danger have been promised by the resolution of the House and the laws of Congress that they should have fourteen of the appointments under the Doorkeeper of the House, that promise should be sacredly kept.

But I will not turn a man out of office almost as soon as he has received the appointment because he has made some mistakes or perhaps has been imposed upon in some instances in reference to whether men upon that roll were qualified or not. I repeat that I believe Mr. Polk has in good faith attempted to carry out the law on this subject. At the same time I give notice to the House and to Mr. Polk that, if he is not removed under this proceeding and if it shall appear at any future time that he is willfully violating that law, I will, upon a fair investigation of the charges and upon proper evidence, vote to turn him out. Before I take my seat I intend to offer a resolution upon this very subject and upon some other questions which I think require the action of the House.

Now this whole proceeding is taken in the interest of civil service reform. This committee, composed of gentlemen for whom I have very high regard—especially my distinguished colleague from Chicago, [Mr. HARRISON]—is constituted for the express purpose of bringing to the attention of the House remedies for all the evils found in the civil service, not only in this House, but in all departments of the Government. They have found what they deem a very serious and crying evil in reference to the employment of extra force under the Doorkeeper of this House. They find that at the time of making their report eighteen men were nominally under the Doorkeeper and belonging to his department whom Mr. Polk did not appoint and whom he notified he had no right to pay. Ten of these persons are employed right under the noses of members of Congress; I refer to the "boys" who wait upon them in the cloak-room. These eighteen persons, according to the finding of the committee, are now employed in the Doorkeeper's department without any authority of law, and only three of them, the riding pages, are there by appointment of Mr. Polk. All the others he has notified that he has no power under the law to pay them, and that they must not look to him for pay.

Yet this Committee on Civil-Service Reform, seeing these facts and seeing these evils which have grown up about the employment of an extra force—which have existed here so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary—instead of bringing in a law which would correct these evils, propose as a grand victory in the interest of civil-service reform to turn out old man Polk as Doorkeeper and to put in some one else, and then to start in with these eighteen officers without warrant of law, and I suppose as soon as they got him in to turn him out again to make way for some other. And that is the way civil-service reform is to be glorified in this country. I do not know that I have any reputation on this subject any how. I have been following the leadership, as I said awhile ago, of my distinguished colleague.

But, sir, there is one thing I do know: I endeavor on all occasions when I can, as a member of this House, to prevent extravagance in the appropriation or use of the money of the Government. But when you call upon me as a judge to pronounce sentence against a man because he has not performed a miracle and himself instituted and carried out reforms which could only be instituted and carried out by this House, I beg to be excused. It is a grave and serious matter to try a man for an offense which is to deprive him of a valuable office and consign his name to infamy. I have had some little experience in courts of justice. I used to be a prosecuting attorney, but I could never equal my colleague in the zeal he has shown in this case, and I have been considered a pretty good prosecutor; but I was a great deal younger then than I am now.

When I have seen men arraigned at the bar, the jury called, and the witnesses in the stand to testify to the truth, and the jury to decide according to the law, whenever I have seen anything wrong attempted against the accused, the slightest deviation from the rules of law, I have always taken prompt measure against it. Therefore, when you call upon me, upon charges which have been disproved, to find old man Polk guilty, I beg to be excused. If the democratic party cannot live and do justice to Polk it ought to die; and if my republican friends, sitting here as judges in this case, cannot do justice to Mr. Polk they ought to resign, because there is no partisan advantage to be found in the decision of this case one way or the other.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, with all my prejudice, if you please, against extravagance in the expenditure of the public money, favoring the strictest and closest economy, when you call upon me to violate the law and rules of evidence, to consign a man, however humble he may be, to infamy and disgrace, I beg to be excused. I will have no part or lot in it. I will not attempt to shield my responsibility, if anything has been done by this House in reference to the payment of extra force, by making John W. Polk the scape-goat.

Before I take my seat I give notice I shall move the following as a substitute for the report of the committee:

Whereas neither the majority nor the minority of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to whom was referred the charges against John W. Polk, Doorkeeper of this House, have found or reported that said Polk has been guilty of any corruption in the administration of said office, but have found and reported that he has in some instances placed upon the rolls a greater number of employes than was authorized by law, trusting to the House to ratify said action and provide compensation for said employes, which was in fact done, in part, by the House before any charges were made against said officer; and

Whereas it appears from the testimony taken before said committee and reported to the House that the names of some persons who were not in fact crippled or disabled soldiers have in some instances been, by mistake or otherwise, placed upon the soldiers' roll: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House it is essential to the proper and economical administration of said office that the number of its employes and the amount of its expenditures should at all times be regulated and controlled by the laws in force when the persons are employed and the expenses incurred, and hence the conduct of said Polk in making appointments in excess of the number authorized by law, and in placing even temporarily, under any pretext, on the soldiers' roll persons not entitled to be there, is hereby disapproved and censured; and that the said officer is hereby ordered and directed to examine and revise the soldiers' roll at the earliest practicable moment, and remove therefrom the names of all persons, if any yet remain, who are not crippled or disabled soldiers; and that he shall hereafter conform strictly to the statute and rules of the House in regard to the employes on said roll.

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform relating to the charges against the Doorkeeper of the House be recommitted to that committee, with instructions to inquire into the organization of the employes serving under the Doorkeeper, and to ascertain the number necessary in each branch of that service, and what changes, if any, are demanded to secure greater efficiency and economy in transacting the business of the House under charge of the Doorkeeper; and what further legislation, if any, is required to prevent the employment or payment of any messenger, laborer, or other employe of the Doorkeeper in excess of the number authorized by law; and whether the appointment of laborers under the Doorkeeper should not be discontinued and the duties now performed by the laborers be turned over to a superintendent or janitor, with authority to hire, at the usual and fair price for labor, such persons as may be necessary to do the work required to be done by the laborers now appointed by the Doorkeeper; with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

Mr. COBB. I desire to move an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN,] just read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois stated that he had his substitute read for information, and that at the proper time, if permitted, he would offer it as an amendment to the report.

Mr. COBB. And at the proper time I will submit an amendment, if I am permitted to do so.

Mr. EDEN. If I have any time left I yield it to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COOK. I wish to know if the time for this debate is limited.

The SPEAKER. The time has not been limited.

Mr. COOK. Then I propose to speak in my own right.

Mr. EDEN. I do not desire in any way to limit the gentleman from Georgia. I merely desired to place at his disposal the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] who made the report merely gave notice that the previous question would not be asked till the debate had occupied four hours.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to know, when the gentleman from Georgia has occupied the ten minutes yielded to him, if I will then under parliamentary rules have the right to move the previous question.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope that will not be done. There are other gentlemen who desire to be heard besides members of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois who makes the report has the control of it.

Mr. EDEN. We have yielded time to gentlemen on the other side until they have occupied some four or five hours.

Mr. HARRISON. At the end of the ten minutes yielded to the gentleman from Georgia I propose to move the previous question.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, if I had not been one of the minority of the committee who made the report in this case I should not consume the time of the House. On the 31st day of January last this House by resolution referred to the Committee on Civil-Service Reform the following allegations:

Whereas it is alleged that John W. Polk, the Doorkeeper of the House, has employed sixty-three persons in the service of the House in excess of the number authorized by law; and

Whereas it is alleged that men have been employed by said Doorkeeper who were not borne on the roll of employes, and that others have been continued in service after they had been dismissed and dropped from said roll; and

Whereas it is alleged that said Doorkeeper has been guilty of corruption and malfeasance in office, requiring employes under him to pay to other employes a part of the salary to which they are entitled by law as a condition of their appointment or retention in office; and

Whereas it is alleged that he is interested in claims and bills now pending or about to be brought before the House for action: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire into the several matters and things so as aforesaid alleged against said Doorkeeper, and to report at any time to this House whether said Doorkeeper is guilty of any said alleged acts. And the committee is authorized to send for persons and papers.

It is a universal rule, Mr. Speaker, prevailing in all the courts of this country and I trust of all others, that whenever a man is charged with crime it shall be specified, he shall be notified distinctly of the charges and accusations made against him; and in most States—it is so in mine—the name of the accuser has to be upon the accusation or indictment and the person accused shall be furnished with a copy of it and with a list of the names of the witnesses who are to testify against him and he shall be confronted with them. I say I believe such a rule is universal in all countries where the rights of a citizen, his property, and his character are to be protected and vindicated; and where crime is to be punished the trial shall be public and he can be tried before no criminal court in this country upon any other accusation than that which is contained in the written charge preferred against him.

Now, sir, as to these specific charges referred to this committee by this resolution, I undertake to say that not a solitary one of them has been sustained by such evidence as any twelve men selected from this House upon a sworn jury would find sufficient to induce them to return him guilty. We are required by the specific terms of this resolution to inquire into these specific charges and to say whether he is guilty or not guilty upon those charges. That is the precise and the only verdict which we have to render in this case. It matters but little to this House or to this country whether one man or another be its Doorkeeper, provided he discharges the duty of that office in good faith to his country; but when a man has been elected and put in charge of that office it does amount to a great deal to him and his posterity whether he shall be degraded and driven in disgrace from our portals upon false charges and false accusations which he never was called upon to defend himself against. This man, sir, bears a name honored in the history of our country, the name of a man who presided in your place, to whom he is closely allied by blood, and who conducted as President of this country the only foreign war ever waged by us, adding to the distinction and renown of our arms and extending our borders to the Pacific Ocean. And I undertake to say on the evidence submitted here that this man has brought no disgrace and no discredit upon that name by any act or willful violation of law, by any act for his own personal benefit, by any act of corruption. He has committed blunders and such blunders have been committed and have been condoned by every Congress that has assembled here since this Hall was opened.

Now, sir, the first accusation in this bill of indictment against Mr. Polk is that he employed sixty-three persons in the service of this House in excess of the number authorized by law. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, said with a great flourish yesterday that our committee had discovered this fact.

If the gentleman or others who desire to read it will turn to the evidence in this case, to the prefix to it, they will see that as far back as the 9th of November Mr. Polk reported that fact to the House.

Remember that Congress assembled on the 15th day of October and on the 9th day of November, twenty days after, Mr. Polk reported the fact that these employes had come down upon him for their pay. They were Mr. Patterson's appointees who had remained during the absence of Congress in power and place; that they claimed that they were rightfully and lawfully entitled to it, until the 1st of December and ought not to be turned out on the 15th day of October when the extra session assembled. That fact was reported to the House, and the House passed a resolution appropriating an amount of money to pay all these men, many of whom never saw Mr. Polk, but had been retained in power because they had been inherited from Mr. Patterson's administration. The committee, therefore, did not make that discovery; they could not make it; it was an open and notorious fact and had been reported to the House.

These men wish to speculate on their chances of drawing money from the Treasury of the people.

But Mr. Polk on the 9th day of November notified the Committee on Appropriations of this excess in the number of employes and of the claims of these men, and asked what he should do. Does that show bad faith? Does that show an utter disregard and contempt for the authority of law, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] with all his fairness insisted on so strenuously? On the contrary, does it not show the utmost good faith on his part and that he was calling the attention of Congress to the fact?

Why, sir, he testified that some of these men he could not kick off the floor; he could not drive them away; they were standing around at every threshold and in every corridor. No matter where you turned you were met by these men, who claimed that they were rightfully in office and were entitled to their pay. I say, therefore, that if that was wrong it was done before the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service had this matter committed to it; that the House had full notice of it and the committee discovered no such fact; it was discovered by Mr. Polk himself a month before the committee ever undertook to investigate the matter.

Now, sir, as to the other charge:

Whereas it is alleged that men have been employed by said Doorkeeper who were not borne on the roll of employes, and that others have been continued in service after they had been dismissed and dropped from said roll.

Now, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] to it, the evidence of every witness who was cognizant of the fact, Mr. McMAHON and the Clerk of the House swore to the fact that there was no law that required any roll to be made out until the end of the month, and that no roll has for years and years ever been made out of the employes of the House until the end of the month. The gentleman doubtless recollects that that was the testimony.

Mr. McMAHON, when before the committee, said:

We wanted this rule for various reasons, among others for the protection of the employes. The roll has been made up for years at the end of the month. If there is a roll in existence prior to the end of the month it is a secret affair in the desk of the Doorkeeper's office; it is not known to the law or to any outsider, so that you never can tell until the end of the month who is actually on it. We considered that that gave too much power to the officer.

The committee of which that gentleman is a member, offered a resolution, and it was referred to the Committee on Rules, requiring that every officer of the House should make out a roll of his employes on the 1st of the month and put the name of every employe upon it, and that proposed rule is before the committee yet. The Doorkeeper, therefore, has violated no law, because there is no law requiring that he should make out a roll at the end of the month. He had a right to dismiss any page, messenger, or laborer at any time during the month that he thought proper, without consulting anybody. He has the absolute power of appointment and dismissal. He could dismiss a man on the 10th day of the month and put a man in his place, who would draw pay from that date to the end of the month.

How, then, can it be said that he violated a law when there was no such law in existence, except in the opinion of the committee or of some gentleman on it, that it ought to be the law. And in that opinion I concur, but that never has been the law; it has never been the practice. So much for that accusation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] made the statement, as did the gentleman from Ohio, which I was surprised to hear from him, though not from the gentleman from Illinois, because he does not know what fairness is; he has no knowledge of it; he has no more knowledge of it than he has of the precise location of the North Pole, and if it was suggested to the committee, I have no doubt he would start out in search of it in the interest of civil-service reform. [Laughter.] Another statement was in reference to the number of pages on the roll. I desire to say this, and I ask the gentlemen on the other side of the House to hear it: that while it is true that the Doorkeeper had upon his roll fifty-six names as testified to, he swore, and the Clerk of the House swore, and the man who pays the employes of the House swore, that but twenty-eight pages were paid for the month of December, the number which he was allowed by law, and that only the amount allowed them by law was paid them. And yet the press of the country have complained of the matter, and gentlemen upon this floor have come to me to-day and asked how it was possible to defend Mr. Polk from that charge when he had fifty-six names on his pages' roll. Yet the testimony is clear, as will be seen upon examination, that there were but twenty-eight pages paid for the month of December. Remember that on the 15th day of December Congress took a recess. Mr. Polk then had twenty-eight pages on his roll. He then notified them that they were no longer needed, and they were dismissed. He says that upon a conversation with the Clerk of the House, and with the approval of the Auditor of the Treasury, who said that it had been the universal practice of the Government, and that the House was entitled to have twenty-eight pages during the recess, he put on the names of twenty-eight whom he expected to retain as permanent pages; and they were paid from the 16th to the 31st of December. That accounts for the fifty-six names that appear for the month of December. Mr. Polk had a right to discharge these pages on the 15th of December, and he did so.

I say that as the law required him to keep no roll he had a right to put on a man and to take him off when he pleased; and that he made up his roll according to the practice of every Doorkeeper of the House for years before him.

Mr. PUGH. Is it not a fact that he had fifty-six pages on the floor of the House at the same time?

Mr. COOK. No, that is not the fact. Mr. Polk said that members would come to him and get permits for boys to come on to the floor; that the sons of members would come up here and slip in on the floor by the doorkeepers and they could not prevent it; and being upon the floor, then members would call them up and send them out for documents and for other things as though they were pages. I have myself called upon a dozen little chaps here that I supposed were pages, and afterward found out that they were sons of members or of gentlemen who were visiting here. The Doorkeeper could not keep them out, they were brought in here by their fathers as they are brought in here to-day. Mr. Polk is not responsible for it, nor should he be censured for it.

The next charge against Mr. Polk is that he has been guilty of corruption and malfeasance in office. And the specification is that he has required employes under him to pay to other employes a part of the salary to which they are entitled by law, as a condition of their appointment or retention in office.

Now, I say that every witness that we examined upon that subject swore that that was an absolute falsehood. Take this New England delegation, the three men who were appointed from New England. Every one of them swears that when they pooled their salaries it was done without Mr. Polk's knowledge, consent, or suggestion. Prescott, Holt, and the other man swore unqualifiedly that Polk had no knowledge of it, that it was an agreement between themselves. They all testified that they never spoke to Polk about it until afterward. They say that the agreement was written at their suggestion by one of the members of this House, reciting that fact, about which Polk had no more to do than the man in the moon. That charge is absolutely false and unsustained by any evidence. Two other men, Mr. Payne and Mr. Bacon, pooled their salaries.

Mr. PUGH. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to some testimony on page 47 of this testimony.

Mr. COOK. What is it?

Mr. PUGH. The question is there asked of Mr. Holt, "Did you ever speak to him (that is, to Colonel Polk) on the subject?" The answer is:

Not at all. I might remark here that my member suggested the arrangement to Colonel Polk, and it was agreeable to Colonel Polk that we would enter into it and arrange the places as we chose.

That is not only the testimony in this instance, but there is testimony in other places that Colonel Polk did know of this pooling arrangement.

Mr. COOK. That is after the agreement had been made between the parties; Polk had nothing to do with making the arrangement. When a man draws his salary, if he chooses to give it to me or to anybody else, what has Polk to do with it? He has nothing to do with the salary after it has been drawn. What authority has he to say whether a man shall pool his salary with another man or give it to his family as he ought to do? Nothing. The men did it because they had the right to do it. They felt that it was justice among themselves and to their delegation, and they agreed to do it. Polk had no knowledge of the agreement until after it was made. Then one of them asked Polk if he had any objection to it, and he told him that he had nothing to do with it. What control had he over a man's salary after he had drawn it? That is my reply to the gentleman.

Now what is the truth about Payne and Bacon? It seems that Mr. Polk had promised a worthless fellow a position here, and that is the only complaint I have against him.

He agreed to give this man Duffy some place that would be worth $1,600 or $1,800. In consequence of his annoyance and the pressure brought to bear upon him by persons for places, he found it necessary, in order to accommodate some of his friends, to give this eighteen-hundred-dollar place to some other man, as he swears. To keep from being annoyed by Duffy, what did he do? You will find if you will read the testimony that Duffy tracked him like a dog, hour by hour, day by day, in the hotels and on the highway, in his office and at his residence; wherever he went Duffy was forever pegging away at him for office and place. In order to shake him off Polk said to Duffy, "I cannot give you the place I promised to you, but I will give you another place, and I will pay you the difference out of my own pocket between the salary that that place will give you and the salary I was to give you." Had not Polk the right to do with his own money what he pleased? That is the fact about Mr. Duffy. He said, "Get that place and I will see that you get the difference—$200; I will pay it;" and when Bacon and Payne found that Mr. Polk was going to pay this money they came up like men, and Mr. Bacon said, "Mr. Polk, we won't expect you to pay this $200; we will pay it ourselves."

They paid him, I believe, one month, and Polk took the money and gave it to Duffy. But after that he went and told these men, "This is all wrong; don't pay Duffy another dollar." This is what they swear to; and the money was returned long before the resolution for this investigation was introduced.

He has proved himself utterly unworthy of credit. Why, sir, he was taken from the seat of a member on this floor in a drunken stupor and carried out of the Hall by the employes of the House. For that offense he was most properly and righteously dismissed from the service of the House, and Mr. Polk is censurable for suffering himself to be imposed upon by so trifling a man as Duffy.

When this House had Hallet Kilbourn in confinement Duffy, then an employe of this House, was put in charge of him, was his custodian, required under the obligations of his office to keep him in prison every night. What did he do? He swears himself that he took Kilbourn out at night to visit his family.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this whole proceeding was predicated upon the affidavit of Mr. Ingham Coryell. Now, any gentleman who examines the affidavit furnished by Coryell to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] as the foundation for this investigation, and then reads the testimony of Coryell before the committee, can arrive at no other conclusion than that Coryell swore to a lie from beginning to end. If gentlemen will take the trouble to follow me I will convince them of that. If the candidate from Chicago for this succeeds, I suppose that Coryell will be one of his aids. Here are the charges that Coryell swore to:

I charge John W. Polk, the present Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, with being cognizant of and interested in bills now before or to be introduced in the present Congress.

In proof, I was offered by J. W. Polk, in consideration of my sending him my resignation as clerk, an interest in the several bills as aforesaid, by which, as he said, I could make more money than I could by the position and salary of clerk. This offer was made me in person by the said Polk, at his residence, on the evening of December 31, 1877.

The majority of the committee find no such fact to be true.

I further charge John W. Polk with having a large amount of money due him for lobby service from parties who had the contracts for paving Pennsylvania avenue during the past year, and that the payment of this money is now dependent on future appropriations by Congress, which makes him interested in aiding such further legislation and appropriations by the present Congress, of which he is Doorkeeper.

In proof of this charge I name H. A. Silver, of Mexico, Missouri, (who is interested with Mr. Polk in the matter,) Mat Taylor, of the city of New York, and General Averill, of this city, as witnesses.

INGHAM CORYELL.

I also charge that H. A. Silver, above named, told me that Mr. Polk, in consideration of Polk disappointing him in giving him (Silver) a position under him, made him (Silver) substantially the same offer he (Polk) made me, and refer to said Silver as a witness in proof.

INGHAM CORYELL.

JANUARY 28, 1878.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 29th day of January, 1878.

ZACH. B. BROOKE,
Justice of the Peace.

Now, when Coryell was brought before the committee he does not sustain a single allegation thus made. He virtually shows that every statement in his affidavit is absolutely untrue.

Mr. HARRISON. In justice to Mr. Coryell, I will ask whether Mr. Silver does not confess that he led Coryell to believe these charges true?

Mr. COOK. Well, I believe he did. He said Coryell went down to draw his molasses, and he drew Coryell's molasses.

Mr. HARRISON. That is, he led Coryell to believe all these things that Mr. Coryell swore to in the affidavit.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Coryell does not swear upon information and belief; he swears positively.

Mr. HARRISON. But he says he will prove it by this man Silver.

Mr. COOK. But he does not do it. Silver swears that Mr. Polk was never interested to the extent of one cent in any measure before Congress.

But who is Coryell, to begin with? He was the clerk of Mr. Patterson, the former Doorkeeper, and to secure his place under Mr. Polk, when he thought his chances of an election were best, he goes to Polk's friends and tells them, "I am the private secretary of Mr. Patterson; I know his plans, his schemes, and his hopes; I know how he expects to be elected, and if Mr. Polk will help me I will put him or his friends in possession of every fact in regard to Colonel Patterson's movements." This he did. From day to day he kept Mr. Polk's friends posted as to every move, every step that Patterson was making to secure a re-election. This is a nice man to come to your committee and ask any decent man to believe him upon his oath!

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. COOK. Yes, sir; I yield for that purpose only.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I move that the House now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, and Mr. FREEMAN, for ten days, on account of their duties as a subcommittee of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that that body insisted on its amendment to an act (H. R. No. 3102) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriations for detecting trespass on public lands, and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes, and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. BECK as managers of said conference on its part.

It further announced the passage of the following bills without amendments:

An act (H. R. No. 1254) for the relief of John H. Darling; and An act (H. R. No. 596) to amend section 540, chapter 1, title 13, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

It further announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

An act (S. No. 954) for the relief of Thomas A. Walker;
An act (S. No. 997) for the relief of William L. Adams; and An act (S. No. 1012) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to abate a certain tax erroneously assessed.

It further announced concurrence in the resolution of the House to print 5,000 copies of the report of the United States entomological commission.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. ELLSWORTH, indefinitely, on account of important business;
To Mr. RAINEY, for three days, on account of illness in his family;
To Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania, for two days; and
To Mr. HUMPHREYS, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. ELAM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 596) to amend section 540, chapter 1, title 13, Revised Statutes of the United States; and
An act (H. R. No. 1254) for the relief of John H. Darling.

ABOLITION OF THE FOURTH AND FIFTH AUDITORS' OFFICES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the proposed abolition of the offices of the Fourth and Fifth Auditors; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

POWELL'S REPORT ON ARID LANDS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report of Major J. W. Powell, geologist in charge of the United States geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region, on the lands of the arid regions of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOT SPRINGS COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, announcing the time prescribed by the act authorizing the appointment of the Hot Springs commissioners has expired and urging Congress to take action to extend the time; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

HOG CHOLERA.

Mr. SAMPSON. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for action at this time:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of Senate Executive Document No. 35, second session, Forty-fifth Congress, being the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the subject of hog cholera, be printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. This must under the law be referred to the Committee on Printing. The gentleman will lose nothing by its reference, as the Committee on Printing has the right to report at any time.

Mr. SAMPSON. It will not cost $500.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. SINGLETON. This resolution has not been heard by the House, and I hope it will be referred.

By unanimous consent the resolution was received, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

WILLIAM A. AND ADELICIA CHEATHAM.

Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4237) for the relief of William A. and Adelia Cheatham, for property taken and used in the construction of Federal defenses at Nashville, Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. WILLIS, of New York, (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: Resolutions of the Boards of Trade of Buffalo and Oswego, New York, against the transfer of the life-saving service to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BAYNE: Memorial and resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, favoring the protection of American labor, commerce, ships, and manufactures—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BICKNELL: Memorial of Argus Dean, of Clark County, Indiana, relating to the improvement of the Mississippi River—to the Committee on Levees and Improvements in the Mississippi River.

By Mr. BRAGG: Memorial of the Wisconsin State Grange, against any reduction of the tariff on wool—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CALKINS: The petition of William Crawford and W. G. Wheelock, crockery dealers, against the proposed tariff on earthenware—to the same committee.

By Mr. CANDLER: The petitions of John D. George, Robert J. Mitchell, H. C. Home, J. J. Hunt, and 275 other citizens of Griffin; of Robert A. Alston, J. N. Wilson, John B. Wommack, and 135 other citizens of De Kalb County; of Campbell Wallace, A. Austell, P. Brown, V. R. Tomme, Lucius Gartrell, A. C. & B. F. Wyly, Garrett & Bro., Dunn, Ogletree & Co., Benjamin E. Crane, R. F. Maddox, E. P. Howell, Frank P. Rice, and 1,400 other citizens of Atlanta; and of R. C. Harris, J. G. Phinazee, D. G. Proctor, Jefferson Hogan, B. H. Napier, and 400 other citizens of Forsyth, Georgia, that Government aid be extended the Texas Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina: The petition of 96 citizens of North Carolina, for the creation of a fund from the sales of public lands for distribution among the States in aid of popular education—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. ERRETT: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, opposing the passage of section 21 of the new tariff bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. EWING: The petition of Samuel Barr and others, against the reduction of the duties on imports—to the same committee.

By Mr. GIDDINGS: The petition of citizens of Galveston and Harris Counties, Texas, for an appropriation to remove the bar at the mouth of Cedar Bayou, Galveston Bay, Texas—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HASKELL: The petition of citizens of Kansas, for the improvement of the Osage River—to the same committee.

By Mr. HISCOCK: The petition of citizens of Oswego, New York, and of Keokuk, Iowa, for the repeal of the bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of Henry T. Alcott, Charles T. Sprague, and 75 other citizens of Antrim County, Michigan, for an appropriation to build a ship-canal from Torch Lake, Michigan, to Lake Michigan—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of 100 citizens of Moran township, Mackinac County, Michigan, against the passage of the bill to regulate fisheries—to the same committee.

By Mr. HUMPHREY: Memorial of the State grange of Wisconsin, for the protection of the wool-growers of the country—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of Mrs. Margaret Snowden, Miss Margaret L. Buckley, Frank Shoop, and other citizens of Freeport, Pennsylvania, for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LYNDE: The petition of 75 citizens and members of the Board of Trade of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the working of the interstate railroad system of the United States—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MANNING: The petition of S. P. Pool, for compensation for property taken for the use of the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. METCALFE: The petition of Thomas R. Cross, of Missouri, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of Samuel B. Hutchinson, guardian, for the restoration of a pension for the benefit of Mary A. Shurlock, his ward—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Frederick Heidelberg, for an increase of pension—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Samuel L. Webster, S. A. Goodwin, Ellie Kelton, and other citizens of Jennersville, Pennsylvania, for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PHELPS: The petition of Davis Hatch, of Norwalk, Connecticut, for an investigation of certain transactions between the United States Government and the Republic of Dominica, and for indemnity and compensation for personal injuries and loss of property—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. RICE, of Ohio: Papers relating to the petition of John C. Douglass—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers relating to the bill for the relief of John Hipp—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SWANN: The petition of G. E. Langston, Henry S. Taylor, George T. Rosenteel, jr., and 42 others, against reviving the income tax—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois: Petitions of citizens of Effingham County, Illinois, for the passage of the bill repealing certain sections of the Revised Statutes in relation to the removal of causes from State to United States courts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of Jearum Atkins, for relief—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Also, the petition of W. H. Hartgrove, W. W. Stringfield, and 64 others, of Haywood County, North Carolina, for the abolition of the Western North Carolina judicial district—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin: Memorial of the Wisconsin State Grange, against any reduction of the duty on wool, and for specific instead of ad valorem duties—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of Mary Beasley, (by James E. Beasley,) of Memphis, Tennessee, for the refunding of the amount for which her land sold for direct taxes in excess of tax and expense of sale—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Meshack Franklin, administrator, &c., for compensation for quartermaster stores taken by the United States Army—to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 4, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, a copy of the report of a board of engineers on the preservation of the water front at Vicksburgh, Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of letters and telegrams from Colonel B. H. Grierson, Tenth Cavalry, objecting to the reinstatement of officers dismissed from the Tenth Cavalry, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of certain officers of the Fifth Infantry, praying reimbursement for losses sustained by the sinking of the Government steamer Don Cameron; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the Chief of Engineers and a copy of a report from Captain Charles B. Phillips, Corps of Engineers, upon the improvement of the Cape Fear Harbor, in North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 1st instant, a report showing the number of vacancies in the naval establishment above the grade of captain, &c.; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I present the memorial of John G. Campbell and a large number of others, citizens of Prescott, Arizona, in reference to certain legislation in that Territory in aid of the Southern Pacific Railroad, in regard to which there is pending in the Senate a joint resolution disapproving of the same, and in favor of the passage of that measure. As the measure is before the Senate, I suppose the proper course is for the memorial to lie upon the table. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I present the petition (by request) of Thomas M. Bradford, Cornelius D. Harper, Thomas J. Hughes, and others, citizens of Clarksville, Habersham County, Georgia, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting these several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex. This petition is signed by gentlemen, and it does not appear that any women want the privilege. I move its reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of Hon. N. H. Brown and others, citizens of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Warrior and Tennessee River Railway; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. WHYTE presented the memorial of William Woodward, William W. Taylor, and others, citizens of Baltimore, Maryland, remonstrating against the passage of any act imposing a tax on incomes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of George B. Coale, president of the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company; George J. Appold, president of the Boston and Baltimore Steamship Company; A. Schumaker & Co., C. Morton Stewart & Co., E. G. Merolla & Co., agents of the Transatlantic Steamship Company; and a large number of the leading merchants of Baltimore, Maryland, in favor of the passage of the bill proposing to transfer the life-saving service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of George Hill and others, citizens of Steuben County, New York, praying for the passage of an act for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the Wisconsin State Grange, remonstrating against any reduction of the duties on imported wools; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL presented additional papers relating to the case of Dr. Edward Evers, late United States Navy, praying the passage of an act authorizing his reappointment as an assistant surgeon in the Navy; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SARGENT. I present a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco. This memorial recites that—

Whereas silver certificates issued by every subtreasury of the United States are redeemable in the city of New York, except those of the subtreasury of this city, [San Francisco:] and whereas this interferes with their free use and circulation throughout the United States, a privilege enjoyed by the certificates issued by all the other subtreasuries, and great injury is thereby done to the interests of this coast by this discrimination against us;

They therefore resolve—

That our delegation in Congress is hereby requested to use its influence to have this evil removed and to secure to us the same advantages which are granted under the law to the citizens of every other section of the country.

I wish to say briefly that I do not think silver certificates should be redeemed at any subtreasury except the one that issues them; otherwise the Government is put to the enormous cost of transporting a very heavy metal backward and forward. To allow certificates issued in the city of San Francisco to be redeemed in New York and those issued in New York to be redeemed in San Francisco would require the transportation across the continent of a great bulk of metal without any advantage or compensation to the Government, and it would soon wear away in effect the whole value of that metal in the hands of the Government by the way of expenses of transportation; and the same is true if they are issued at Buffalo or Cincinnati or any other place where there is a subtreasury and redeemed in New York. That is an objection to the silver-certificate system, and it will be intensified and enhanced provided the certificates are issued for silver bullion; but if the eastern cities are to have this advantage, then I join with the petitioners in claiming that the same privileges be extended to the city of San Francisco.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 475) authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to extend the patent of Horace A. Stone, for improvement in the manufacture of cheese, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 72) for the relief of the heirs of William A. Graham, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Herman E. Davidson, and the heirs of Charles H. Davidson, to report it adversely with a written report, and to ask that it be indefinitely postponed. Inasmuch as the Senator who introduced the bill [Mr. HOAR] is absent I move that it be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 134) making further appropriations for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, and for continuing the work in Galveston Bay, State of Texas, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jesse Turner and others, praying the passage of a law relieving them from liability as sureties on the bond of George W. Clarke, former agent of the Pottawattomie Indians, submitted a report thereon accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1038) for the relief of Jesse Turner and others, sureties upon the official bond of George W. Clarke, formerly Indian agent.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON FORESTRY.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a House concurrent resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the subject of forestry, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 25,000 copies of the report upon forestry, transmitted by the President to Congress from the Commissioner of Agriculture on the 13th day of December last; 15,000 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives, 7,500 for the use of the Senate, and 2,500 copies for the Commissioner of Agriculture: Provided, however, That the total number of pages of said report shall not exceed six hundred and fifty.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1039) for the relief of Jacob Brandt, jr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Richard Middleton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1041) to provide for the protection of attorneys doing business before the Patent Office and the other bureaus and Departments of the Government; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1042) to remove the political disabilities of R. T. Chapman, of Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) providing for the distribution and sale of the new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BAILEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1043) for the relief of William A. and Adelicia Cheatham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire to introduce without previous leave, and ask unanimous consent to do so, a bill conforming to the suggestions of the War Department in relation to a dry-dock at Baltimore City.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1044) granting a site for a dry-dock in the city of Baltimore, upon certain conditions; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. McMILLAN, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Elisha Boss, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and whereon an adverse report was made, be withdrawn by the attorney in said case.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

On motion of Mr. CHAFFEE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Territories be authorized to have the testimony printed in the investigation now pending in regard to matters in the Indian Territory.

TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of seven Senators be appointed to take into consideration the propriety of making some provision for taking the tenth census, and report by bill or otherwise.

I merely desire to say that this is an important subject of legislation, and should be attended to at the present session. At the next session, which will be a very short one, there will not be time to properly consider a measure of this importance. I think it is none too early to take into consideration the propriety at least of this legislation, and, if the committee see fit, to report a proper bill.

The resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

JAMES FISHBACK.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2096) for the relief of James Fishback, late collector of internal revenue, tenth district, State of Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Fishback, late collector of internal revenue of the tenth district of the State of Illinois, $521.35; being the amount paid by him for services of a clerk in his office as collector for the period from July 1, 1873, to December 20, 1873, inclusive, and for which he has not been reimbursed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS March 20:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2096) for the relief of James Fishback, report as follows:

Having carefully examined the evidence in the case, we adopt the report of the House Committee of Claims, as follows:

"That said James Fishback was collector of internal revenue from the 23d day of May, 1873, to the 16th day of August, 1876; that said collector employed in his office, as a clerk, George W. Balsley, from the 1st day of July, 1873, to the 20th day of December, 1873, and paid him for his services as such clerk for the time mentioned the sum of $521.35; that said clerk was actually necessary to enable the said collector properly and faithfully to discharge the duties of his office, and was continuously and constantly employed in said office during the period named in making the reports required, keeping the records of said office, and performing other work clerical in character; and that during all the time stated said collector gave his constant personal attention to the duties of his office, and was occupied in the discharge of his official duties and in the supervision of his office.

"The committee further report that said collector had a large district, embracing ten large counties; that when said collector entered upon the duties of his said office on the 23d day of May, 1873, he found said clerk in the collector's office; that he was allowed pay for said clerk up to the 1st day of July, 1873; that after that time he continued said clerk, and did not know he was not to be allowed a clerk until the month of September, 1873; that then said collector instituted a correspondence with the Internal Revenue Office, with the view of satisfying the Commissioner of the actual necessity of such clerk in his office, but, not succeeding, he finally discharged said clerk December 20, 1873.

"Inasmuch as it clearly appears that such services were actually rendered by said George W. Balsley, and were for the benefit of the Government, and that said clerk was absolutely necessary to a proper and faithful discharge of the duties of said office, and as the compensation of the collector was not large for the labor and responsibility of his office, being only $2,500, out of which he had to pay all his traveling and other expenses, the committee believe said collector should be reimbursed the amount paid by him to said clerk.

"A letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the committee states that vouchers were filed with the accounts of said collector for the services of said clerk, and that the collector has not been reimbursed the amount paid for the same; that by the act of Congress of February 8, 1875, the Department is now debarred from making an allowance to cover this expenditure, more than a year having elapsed since the services were rendered; and the Commissioner recommends the passage of the bill.

"From the statement of said collector it further appears that, after his correspondence with the Internal Revenue Office, prior to the discharge of said clerk, December 20, 1873, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue became satisfied that a clerk was necessary, and allowed said collector to, and he did, re-employ the said Balsley as a clerk in his said office, and retained him while he held the office.

"The committee therefore report back the bill, and recommend its passage."

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee how much the compensation of this collector was during that time?

Mr. HARRIS. His salary was $2,500 a year.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I merely wish to say that if this case shall be opened to further remuneration of the collector, I suppose there are thousands all over the country who have employed clerks and paid for them out of their own funds. It seems to me it would be setting a precedent that would perhaps plague us hereafter with a great many similar cases. There is a fixed and certain sum by law as the compensation of all these collectors throughout the whole country; and now if we are to treat one with this additional favor four or five years after the time, I am very sure that it would open a large batch of these accounts to be considered by Congress. Notwithstanding the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I should feel very reluctant to open the door to a class of claims of this character.

Mr. HARRIS. While I quite concur in the general rule announced by the Senator from Vermont the case now under consideration does not fall within the rule that he suggests and which I concede is a very proper one. Under the law, a collector is not authorized to employ a clerk except with the permission of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. When this collector was appointed this clerk had been in the employment of his predecessor under the authority of the Commissioner to so employ a clerk up to the 1st of July, 1873. The authority given by the Commissioner did not extend beyond the 1st of July. This collector supposing he had a right to employ the clerk, and finding it absolutely necessary to retain him, did retain him in the office. He supposed he had the right to do so, and was not aware of the fact that he did not possess such right until September, 1873. The collector then applied to the Commissioner for permission to employ a clerk. The Commissioner hesitated for some time, up to the 20th of December, when the collector discharged the clerk, having paid from the 1st of July to the 20th of December out of his own pocket for the services of the clerk. Immediately afterward the Commissioner of Internal Revenue became satisfied that a clerk was absolutely necessary to the proper discharge of the duties of the office. Under this authority the clerk was re-employed and was retained in the employment of the collector up to 1876, when the collector's term of office expired. The Commissioner had authorized the employment of this clerk and the predecessor of this claimant had his services in the office under the authority of the Commissioner, but that authority extended only to the 1st of July, 1873. The authority to employ the clerk was regranted in the latter part of December, 1873, but between July and December the collector had retained the clerk in his office without the authority of the Commissioner and therefore the collector was not reimbursed the salary paid the clerk for that time.

That the clerk was absolutely necessary appears clearly from the proof. The officer who had the clerk prior to July, 1873, was authorized by the Commissioner to employ him, and he was so employed. His services were absolutely necessary. The only question is whether the Government shall pay the salary of the clerk or whether it shall come out of the salary of the collector, who receives, in view of the responsibility of the office and the labor of the office, a very small salary, in my judgment, it being $2,500 a year.

Mr. MORRILL. I still think it is a very bad precedent. The ignorance of the law on the part of the collector that this clerk was not authorized is no reason why the amount should now be paid, and it is not shown that the salary received by the collector was not an adequate one and full compensation for his services.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. The facts in this case have been very correctly stated by the Senator from Tennessee. It seems to me the facts stated in the report fully justify the conclusion at which the committee have arrived. The duties to be performed in this office of collector were so great and onerous as to require in fact the employment of a clerk. A clerk had always been employed with the consent of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue up to the 1st of July, 1873, a portion of which time the collector Fishback had been in office. Whether it was from ignorance of the law or from the fact that he supposed the authority of the Commissioner would justify the retention of the clerk is not stated distinctly, but it does appear that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue assented to the necessity of the employment of a clerk in the office by his subsequent consent to the employment of this clerk by this collector, Fishback. Where the Commissioner has given his assent to the employment of a clerk on the ground of the necessity of such employment both before and after the period embraced in the time for which this allowance is to be made, I cannot see why it must not be inferred that there was a necessity for his employment at the time this collector paid him. It seems to have been merely an oversight upon the part of the Commissioner in withholding his assent to the employment of a clerk by the collector. The salary of the collector was but $2,500 and he was compelled to pay this clerk, and did pay him out of his own means. The services were rendered to the Government, they were necessary, the Government received the benefit of the services, and I cannot see why the collector should be compelled to pay the clerk, and therefore I think the bill should pass.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, I would be glad if the Senator from Tennessee would let this bill pass over. I have a letter here from a lawyer of standing in Jacksonville, Illinois, who has no objection to the passage of this claim. He does not know anything about it, but he states that Mr. Fishback was a defaulter and his bondsmen paid $3,000 to relieve themselves from liability and he wants to get the benefit of this payment.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Illinois inform me as to what position it is alleged Mr. Fishback was a defaulter in?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not know except what is stated in this letter. I gave the letter to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] who is upon the Committee on Claims and requested him to show it to the committee. I do not know anything about it except what is contained in this letter. I do not know whether the defalcation grew out of the same transaction or not.

Mr. HARRIS. If this be a request that the consideration of this bill shall be postponed at the instance of some creditor of this claimant in order that he may intervene for the purpose of saving a debt—

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is all.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I am not inclined to consent to its going over; but if there be a question as to whether or not this claimant is a defaulter to the Government, either in the position of collector or in any other position, I shall most cheerfully consent to the bill going over.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I can read the letter, and that is all I know about it. The writer says:

It appears from the Senate proceedings, in the newspapers, that a bill has been reported for the relief of James Fishback, late collector of internal revenue for the tenth district of Illinois. I wish to inquire whether there is any proviso made as to the payment of his defalcation. If not, can you have it done? Mr. Fishback was a defaulter, and his bondsmen paid $3,000 to relieve themselves from liability and settled with the United States.

Now, whether it was his bondsmen as collector or not who had to pay I do not know.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill is reported from the Committee on Claims, with the recommendation that it pass; but the claimant is a constituent of the Senator from Illinois, and if the Senator from Illinois desires that the further consideration of the bill shall be postponed, so far as I am concerned I shall consent to its postponement.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The only reason why I wanted the bill postponed is that I may ascertain whether the defalcation grew out of this same transaction, that is, if he was a defaulter to the Government as collector; then if he gets any money back from the Government it ought to go to the bondsmen.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can find that out at the Treasury by letting the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If there is no great hurry about it let the bill go over for a week, and I can find out.

Mr. McMILLAN. So far as the Committee on Claims is concerned this is the first intimation it has received that this collector was a defaulter or that Mr. Fishback was a defaulter in any other capacity. If he is a defaulter, perhaps it would be just that any allowance of this kind should go to his bondsmen; but I confess that it is not a very professional way of collecting a debt, as it seems to me, for an attorney to apply through the Senate of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The attorney is one of the men who has paid the money for him.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Minnesota will allow me to call his attention to the fact with reference to this very claim, that the Committee of Claims of the House of Representatives corresponded with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the answer of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is here discussing this officer's connection with the Government, and there is not the slightest intimation of default to the Government upon the part of this officer; there is no intimation of any other than a faithful performance of duty, and that his accounts are all right with the Department. This is the first intimation that I have ever heard of this claimant being a defaulter in any sense or to anybody.

Mr. McMILLAN. Surely I have no objection to the case going over, but I rose more to advert to the fact that this was an unusual mode of collecting a debt.

Mr. MORRILL. But the Senate, Mr. President, should know the facts as to whether he is at the present time a defaulter or not, whether it has been compromised with a smaller sum than was due to the Government, and all the facts in the case. I trust there will be no objection to allowing the Senator from Illinois to communicate and gather the facts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee accept the suggestion that the bill go over?

Mr. HARRIS. So far as I am personally concerned, I do.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I take entire issue with the Senator from Minnesota. If any persons have paid money for this man, and they believe that if this claim is paid to him directly from the Government it will not be paid to them, and if the claim has grown out of this transaction, I think that the bill should pass with some proviso securing the bondsmen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President—

Mr. OGLESBY. Do I understand that the pending bill has gone over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has gone over.

Mr. OGLESBY. By the consent of the Committee on Claims?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator moving the bill and advocating it to assent to its going over.

Mr. McMILLAN. In this connection I desire to state that I have just been called to the door by Mr. Fishback who says that his accounts are fully settled with the United States.

Mr. OGLESBY. Unquestionably, and settled long ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but by his sureties, they say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is not before the Senate, unless recalled.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask the Senators to wait until I hear from my correspondent.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no objection to the bill going over.

Mr. OGLESBY. I only want to state that, so far as my knowledge of this matter is concerned, it is utterly new to me. Mr. Fishback was one of the most competent and efficient officers the Government ever had in the revenue service, as I understand; and, finding that this claim had been passed upon by two committees and was indorsed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I felt quite surprised that any serious objection should be made to the passage of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I want to reply to my colleague if he discusses the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. OGLESBY. I will look at the letter to my colleague and see what it is.

WAR DEPARTMENT CONTRACTS.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2257) to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation, submission, and opening of bids for contracts under the War Department.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation and submission and opening of bids for contracts under the War Department; and he may require any bid to be accompanied by a bond in such penal sum as he may deem advisable, with good and sufficient security, conditioned that the bidder will enter into a contract agreeably to the terms of his bid, if the same be awarded to him within sixty days from the date of the opening of the bids, or otherwise pay the penalty. No bid shall be withdrawn by the bidder within the period of sixty days.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state in connection with the bill that it passed the House of Representatives on the 26th of February. It is stated by the Secretary of War to be necessary for the protection of the Government. It was sent to the Senate and by the Senate referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, unanimously concurred in by that committee, and reported here. The report is in writing, and, if desired, it can be read.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAKOTA SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 927) to authorize the construction of a narrow-gauge railroad from Bismarck to the Black Hills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I notice that the eighth section of this bill raises some new and unprecedented questions, and for myself I want a little time to consider them before taking up this bill for consideration. I will say that I am in favor of the general object of this bill, and, if the committee or the Senator having it in charge will allow it to go over until to-morrow or next day, it will give me the time I desire.

I would say further that in the three minutes remaining of the morning hour there will be no time to offer such amendments as strikes me are necessary.

Mr. WINDOM. In view of the remarks made by the Senator from Michigan, I will not press a vote now. I wish to say, however, that the particular purpose of this bill is to build a road connecting the Black Hills with the Northern Pacific Railroad at Bismarck, and it is believed that it can be built this summer if the right of way be given early and the corporation authorized to build.

Mr. SARGENT. Is there any subsidy in the bill?

Mr. WINDOM. There is no subsidy, no land grant, nothing in the world but the right of way.

Mr. WHYTE. Not in the way of money, but all the timber they need for cross-ties, I judge, could be obtained under one section of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will take all the timber there is.

Mr. WINDOM. I am entirely willing if desired that that be stricken out, because there is no timber along that region of country.

Mr. SARGENT. There is very little timber there. I should not think there would be any objection to its being taken for the purpose if there was.

Mr. WINDOM. I give notice that I will try to call up the bill in the morning hour to-morrow. In the mean time the Senator from Michigan can prepare his amendments.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. WINDOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 802) establishing post-roads in the several States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to say that, if I can have the consent of the Senate to-morrow morning after the strictly morning business shall have been concluded, I shall ask that during the remainder of the morning hour the Senate consider the naval appropriation bill. There are not many amendments to it, and those are not of an important character. I think we can get through with it in the morning hour, if there is no more than the usual amount of morning business, and not interfere with the unfinished business, at any rate not to much extent.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. DORSEY. I offer the following order:

Ordered. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 490) supplementary to an act entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas," approved March 3, 1877.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator would explain what that means, as the bill passed the Senate two or three weeks ago, and the time for reconsideration has gone by.

Mr. DORSEY. The bill as it came from the Committee on Public Lands provided for the extension of the time for the commissioners appointed to dispose of the Hot Springs reservation. An amendment was put upon the bill by the Senate on my motion which seems to be objectionable to the committee of the House and also to some of the citizens at the Hot Springs. I hoped I might get unanimous consent that the bill be sent back to the Senate and then to have the amendment stricken out, and simply pass the bill extending the time of the commission. Early action is very important indeed. The time is now out, the commissioners are there with all the records in their hands, and nothing further can be done until some legislation is passed by Congress. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not object. I expected to get unanimous consent. Of course I can do nothing with it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope, if it is within the rules, that the resolution will prevail. The bill as reported from the Committee on Public Lands had simply the scope that the Senator has indicated. The amendment which he proposed, of course, related to a subject that the committee had not considered; they knew nothing whatever of it, and they accepted it from the Senator of that State, believing that he knew best what should be done in respect to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think I shall object to the passage of this resolution, but I think it a very bad precedent to establish as one to be followed. Here a bill has passed the Senate two, three, or four weeks ago, whatever the time was, in a particular condition. It is now suggested that it be recalled for the reason that some of its provisions are understood not to be agreeable to the House of Representatives, and then to get unanimous consent to reopen the question and put it in a condition so that it shall be agreeable to that body. I do not think that is a very good precedent for legislation as between the two Houses; but as my friend from Arkansas wishes to do it at this time and as it is a local affair, I do not know that I shall undertake to make any great opposition to it, but I should not want it to be drawn into a precedent by a good deal.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 15) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. MATTHEWS.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, it is with very great and sincere reluctance that I intrude again upon the attention of the Senate in this debate. I should not have done so but for a turn which it took, which it seemed to me made it necessary that I should have some words to say in reply.

The dignity of the debate (which is usually synonymous with its dullness) has been relieved to some degree by the entrance into it of what seemed to me to be some personal feeling and at least some extraneous matter. I was, for instance, somewhat taken by surprise when I ascertained that my distinguished colleague who has charge of the bill on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, [Mr. THURMAN,] whose organ for that purpose he is, seemed disposed to resent with some zeal and some indignation what appeared to me to be nothing more than proper opposition growing out of differences of opinion; and he seemed to think that, if what had been said by Senators as grounds and reasons for their opposition was true, it amounted to such a condemnation of the members of the Judiciary Committee as to indicate that they were no longer fit for their functions and that they would have nothing to do after such a sentence but to admit the judgment and resign.

I am unable to agree, Mr. President, with my distinguished colleague in his opinion construing the constitutional powers of Congress in their proposed application to this subject. Am I to be silenced on this floor because to speak makes me to differ with that committee? What becomes of the propriety of his complaint when in the same debate he accuses the other committee of this body with having brought in a bill which subsidizes these companies beyond the original grant? Certainly, Mr. President, I cannot yield to the argument which he made on the floor yesterday that it was sufficient ground to support his bill because it was unconstitutional; otherwise we could never have that question judicially settled! I think that it is a sufficient reason to vote against any proposed legislation that in my judgment it comes in conflict with the limitations of the fundamental law, and on such a question no Senator has a right to surrender his own personal convictions. I have unfeigned respect, which I take the utmost pleasure in publicly avowing, for the Judiciary Committee of this body and for each individual member of it, including my honored and distinguished colleague, whose value and worth as man, lawyer, judge, and citizen I have known so well and so long, but I cannot afford to yield one jot or one tittle of my own deliberate and considered opinions on a question of constitutional right out of mere deference to any person.

There was another matter referred to by several Senators, and I believe particularly by the Senator from Vermont who is on that committee, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] that I was very much pained to hear broached as the ground of argument in such a discussion; and that was that the corporations in reference to whose rights and interests this legislation was proposed were powerful bodies seeking to influence legislation in their favor by improper approaches and solicitations, the tread of whose messengers and agents it was said was to be heard on the very floor of the Senate, who were packing the lobbies and filling the galleries. Whatever grain of truth may be in such a statement, certainly the language is the language of hyperbole; and unless Senators are prepared to make distinct and specific charges involving the integrity of the body itself or of its members, the only possible effect of such insinuations, however guarded and professedly excluding accusations of impropriety of conduct on the part of public men, is, nevertheless, that they go forth to the world calculated, if not intended, to throw the cloud of suspicion upon those who for reasons satisfactory to themselves feel impelled to a course different from that approved by the committee. And my friend, the Senator to whom I allude, referred only yesterday afternoon to those who, like myself, found insuperable objections to supporting the bill of the Judiciary Committee as the friends of the railroad companies, as if the railroad companies were a public enemy and as if they, and they alone, were the defenders and the champions of the public interest and the public rights.

I repeat again my sincere respect not only for the wisdom and the learning, but for the disinterestedness and patriotism of the members of the Judiciary Committee. They are the select men out of this select body, "the expectancy and rose of the fair state." And yet, Mr. President, I cannot yield to them one particle in the advocacy of opinions and doctrines that however in this case in their application may seem to favor a corporate right, in my judgment nevertheless lie at the foundation of every right that is dear to a freeman.

But, Mr. President, it was reserved to my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] to direct the shafts of wit and argument intended for my exclusive and personal benefit. In form he was not otherwise than complimentary, and yet he represented me as making a great show of apparent law without any law at the bottom.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The Senator will excuse me for saying that I did not pay him quite that compliment of saying it was apparent law, but I said no man had succeeded in making a thing appear so much like law with so little law in it.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Of course, Mr. President, as usual and as always my friend is literally correct, and if I had the same means of arriving at a knowledge of the truth which he informed us he possessed himself, I should be without that excuse for my error and shortcoming that I trust under the circumstances he will graciously allow me, because it appears from his own speech what his way of arriving at a knowledge of legal conclusions was, and it turns out to be an instinct; for, while reproaching me with having referred deliberately to all the authorities which were favorable to my view and as deliberately ignoring all those the other way, he spoke of that mental paralysis which had come over me when I stopped at the first volume of Otto and refused to make the Senate aware of that array of authorities contained in the fourth volume which it seems he had not himself at the time when I delivered my speech either read or studied.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I had read them.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Well, I find on the thirteenth page of his printed speech that in referring to these cases he said:

I read these cases when they first came out. But from that time until I had prepared all the foregoing portions of my argument, last Saturday evening, I never examined one of them.

Now the Senator from Michigan proceeds to inform us how he arrives at his conclusions. He says:

When I undertake to reason upon principle I prefer to carry out the principle first, without mixing up cases and authorities with the line of thought. Then I am in the habit, when I have the time, of looking into authorities to see how others have reasoned upon the same principle: and to see if there is any occasion to modify my own course of reasoning: and to correct myself, if I find I have been wrong. But in this case, having since looked carefully into those authorities, I find not one word to correct.

The wonder is that the courts have so often guessed the law as coincident with the instincts of the distinguished Senator from Michigan; but the most amazing part of the whole performance is that the authorities which I cited were the very cases quoted by the Judiciary Committee, and that I stated them as proving in the same sense the very conclusions which they reached and stated that the only difference between us was as to the application of the principles which they establish, for after citing the very extracts referred to by the Judiciary Committee from several cases I said:

These expressions constitute the best judgments attainable in our decisions upon this question, and I have quoted them because they constitute the common ground of our argument, as they are relied upon not only by myself but by the distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee who specially argued this question. The difference between us, then, is not so much what constitutes a true expression of constitutional law on this point as whether it is rightly applied in this case in the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

And now, Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to listen again to the propositions which in point of fact and as matters of law I maintain as against the essential principle of the committee's bill. In the first place these corporations are private corporations. They are not public corporations in the sense in which this bill touches them, and in the sense put upon them in the argument. The fact that they were chartered or empowered by act of Congress impresses no public character upon them that would not have equally existed if they had been chartered by the general assemblies of the States through which they pass. They are not public corporations in any sense other than that in which all railroad companies are public. In respect to their proprietary rights, in respect to their contracts other than the public contract which constitutes the franchises of the corporation as a corporation and as a railroad company, they are as private in their artificial persons as either of us is in our natural person. They have the same rights of property and the same rights of contract and the same rights of defense, and this proposition I establish by the authority of the case in the eighteenth volume of Wallace's Reports, where the direct question was presented to the Supreme Court of the United States, the companies seeking to defend themselves against the State of Nebraska levying a tax upon their property on the ground that they were a public corporation chartered for the purpose of executing an agency on behalf of the Government, and therefore not capable of being taxed by State authority; but the Supreme Court of the United States held that for all the purposes of acquiring and possessing or using property they were private corporations and subject to the law of private persons. Of course they were called into being for a public purpose, for the purposes of the United States, for the purpose of constituting great highways of trade and travel between the Atlantic States and the Pacific border for military purposes, for commercial purposes, for postal purposes. But just as the Government could and might and does continually use private persons and private property in the execution of its public objects, here, rather than construct and operate these lines of road itself, it called into being artificial persons whom it endowed with existence and with certain rights in order to enable those persons to execute those uses.

So that, Mr. President, and it is one of the most significant features in this discussion, when it is proposed to adopt and apply to these artificial persons in that relation which they occupy to the United States Government by virtue only of their private powers and their private interests certain rules, it ought to be remembered that we are laying down the rules that govern every natural person situated in like circumstances and that if we are putting into force hostile rules directed against corporate authority the same rules will determine private rights. We cannot hereafter shield and protect and defend ourselves against the application of identical principles where no corporation has any interest. The doctrines which belong to this case are the doctrines which belong to the case of every man and of every citizen, and affect equally and everywhere the interests of property and all that property means as well as the interests of corporations. It is a very cheap and easy thing to join in the hue and cry against unpopular things and people, but it is a very dangerous thing. No man knows how soon his curses may come home.

The next point which I wish to call attention to is this, and it was well and forcibly brought out by the Senator from California who spoke yesterday, [Mr. BOOTH,] and that is that the fact that in this case the United States is a creditor and that it is legislating in reference to its own interests as such is utterly immaterial and irrelevant. The fact that the United States has advanced these bonds which at some distant day these corporations are under the obligations of the contract contained in these laws to repay, neither gives to the United States nor takes away from its Government any right of legislation whatever.

The rights of the United States as a creditor, with the single exception of its statutory preference and priority in the distribution of an insolvent estate, are exactly alike and exactly equal to the rights of any other creditor. They are neither greater nor less; they are not other and different; they are the same. And the situation, Mr. President, is precisely as if these railroad companies did not owe to the United States, and were never bound to pay to the United States a single dollar; the situation is exactly what it would be if these companies owed their first mortgage to the bondholders secured by it, and their second mortgage to other bondholders scattered throughout this and other lands, private persons, and had never had a pecuniary transaction with the Government. If the United States Government has the right, by a change in the law, to anticipate the promised payment to itself, it would have the same right to make the same alteration of the law in favor of the first-mortgage bondholders or the second-mortgage bondholders, being private persons, and it would apply not only to these railroad companies but to every corporation created by the United States or subject to its jurisdiction, in respect to whom it had the power of general legislation. Now, I think there can be no reasonable doubt of this. It is the same principle which was announced and applied by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Davis vs. Gray, in 16 Wallace, on page 232, in reference to a precisely similar state of things between the State of Texas—the Senators from that State know well the facts and the law of the litigation—between the State of Texas and the railroad corporation created by it; and the Supreme Court in referring to it said:

When a State becomes a party to a contract, as in the case before us, the same rules of law are applied to her as to private persons under like circumstances. When she or her representatives are properly brought into the forum of litigation, neither she nor they can assert any right or immunity as incident to her political sovereignty.—Davis vs. Gray, 16 Wallace, 233.

We are therefore in a situation in which we have a right to lay out of view as immaterial and irrelevant the fact that the United States has made an advance of bonds in reference to which there arises the ultimate right of repayment, and we are at liberty in this discussion to treat the case precisely as if some third person indifferent and a stranger was the holder of that lien and mortgage which in point of fact the United States now holds; so that all these exhortations in reference to the duty incumbent on us as members of the National Legislature to look carefully to the interests of the Government as a creditor, while perfectly just and appropriate, should not be allowed to carry us one inch further in the assertion of power and the exercise of authority than we would do if it was to secure the debt of the Senator from Kentucky or any other private person.

The United States as a creditor, as a co-contractor, has the right to negotiate, has the right to parley, has the right to treat, and if its debt is of present obligation to sue and to recover and to pursue with all the processes of the law; but it cannot while in that attitude and pursuing that interest put on the crown and the scepter of sovereignty and make use of those national rights and those powers of government given for the equal benefit of all the States and all the people for the petty purpose of collecting its own debt. It has a right to its debt when due according to the terms of the obligation; it has no more, and it cannot give itself any more. It is a mistake to suppose that the frame and instrument of government organized under the Constitution of the United States is an original and indefinite reservoir of power on which it can draw at any time for any purpose and to any extent under the plea of public necessities and public interest, and we ought to thank God that it is so, and not otherwise; for in spite of the exhortations of my learned friend the Senator from Michigan, I shall never live long enough and grow old enough to forget to be jealous of power wherever it is placed.

Why, he asks, not bestow generous confidence upon the public authorities and believe that they will not abuse unlimited power? Mr. President, do the records of history furnish an example of unlimited power that was not abused? What is the meaning of our Bill of Rights? What is the meaning of our several constitutional amendments? What is the meaning of our written ordinances of Government? It sounds like reciting axioms to repeat the plain and simple words that protect life, liberty, and property against the arbitrary exercise of the powers of Government. But, Mr. President, who can count the cost of those truths? How much treasure, how much blood have been shed in order to establish the simple and axiomatic prop-positions that life, liberty, and property shall not be taken without due process of law, that private property shall not be taken for public uses without just compensation, and that it shall not be taken for private purposes at all under any circumstances and at any price? Why, Mr. President, the whole of civilized life is wrapped up in these simple axioms of political conduct, and it is no mere sentiment that extols Magna Charta as the most valuable possession of the English-speaking people. Let us take care that in assuming the protection of pecuniary public interests we are not overriding that higher, that greater, that more valuable public interest worth more than all the tons of gold and silver that come from the rich States of the Pacific.

Mr. President, it has been assumed by those who have argued in favor of the bill of the Judiciary Committee, without proof, that the reservation of power in the statutes which constitute the charters of these companies is unconditional and unlimited; that it is absolute, and dependent on the existence of no other fact than the mere will and pleasure of Congress. It is true that in the act of 1864 the language is simple and general and unconditional, a reservation without any qualifications in that section, of the right to alter, amend, or repeal what? That act, the act of 1864. But it is said by the Senators on the other side of the question that by a well-known canon of interpretation the two acts must be construed together because they are in pari materia. I admit it. What does that mean? It means that they must be construed as if, instead of being two separate statutes, they were only one actual statute; in other words, as if they had been passed at the same instant of time.

Now, then, they say that construing the two statutes in that way, as if they were but one, you must import the unconditional reservation of the right to repeal into the language and context of the act of 1862, so as to strike out of that act all the qualifications and conditions that are admitted to be in it; in other words, you must put the two statutes into one and then, merely for the purposes of construction and interpretation, you must blot out and erase and cut away from the section of the statute of 1862 the words and the language and the ideas and the restrictions which Congress put into it. By what right; by what authority? Here my learned friend from Michigan comes in with another one of those wise saws which I suppose were evolved by his instinctive knowledge of jurisprudence, of legislative jurisprudence; and that is that the section contained in the act of 1864, being the latest expression of the legislative will, must be construed as repealing all prior and inconsistent provisions. Latest! Latest expression of the public will; when, by the supposition, it was passed at the same instant! How can there be former and later when they were both brought forth co instanti?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to inquire what that remark applies to?

Mr. MATTHEWS. To what?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Does the Senator apply that to the acts of 1862 and 1864 as taking effect at the same time?

Mr. MATTHEWS. If the Senator had been as intent upon hearing me he would not have needed to ask that question. I was replying to the argument made by the Senator that the repealing clause of the act of 1864 is a substitute for the repealing clause of the act of 1862, on the ground that they are to be construed as one act, and then, having gotten them together into one statute, which implies of course its passage as an integer at one moment of time, he substantiates his argument by speaking of the act of 1864 as the latest expression of the legislative will.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Then, if the Senator will permit me, if he will turn to my speech, he will find that I took a very different ground from that.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Well, Mr. President, the Senator's speech is quite convenient, and I will on that challenge exhibit the proof of what I say. I read from page 8 of the pamphlet edition of his speech, wherein he says:

And very clearly, according to well-settled principles of construction, if the power to alter, amend, or repeal, in the act of 1862, was a restricted power, then, the unrestricted power in the later act, covering the entire ground of the same subject-matter in the limited provision of the act of 1862, and even more, must repeal that limited provision; because being the later provision on the same subject it repeals it to the full extent of the difference. It is the last declaration of the legislative will upon that whole subject, and would operate as a repeal to this extent from the time of its adoption, whether declared to be an amendment or not.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. That is not the point.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I do not propose to read the entire speech. Now, the only ground on which the repealing clause of the act of 1864 can be made to reach back to the act of 1862 at all is upon the ground of the canon of interpretation that requires them to be construed as one act, in pari materia, because the language of the clause in the act of 1864 expressly confines its operation to that particular statute. Now, then, Mr. President, I say conversely that construing the statutes in the way required, and welding them together as if they had sprung into existence at the same moment, the conditions and qualifications which belong to the right of repeal, as reserved in the act of 1862, immediately lay hold of and embrace and conform to themselves the otherwise unlimited and unrestricted section of the act of 1864.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Let me point to the Senator a part of the speech to which he has not alluded.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I am a little fatigued, and shall be more so, and I humbly submit to my learned friend from Michigan that as far as I am concerned he shall have abundant opportunity to reply. There is nothing that I more desire than that this debate shall be prolonged sufficiently to enable every Senator thoroughly to understand the principles on which he is expected to act.

Now, Mr. President, what are the conditions and qualifications contained in the act of 1862? They are contained in the eighteenth section of that act. They are as follows:

That whenever it appears that the net earnings of the entire road and telegraph, including the amount allowed for services rendered for the United States, after deducting all expenditures, including repairs and the furnishing, running, and managing of said road, shall exceed 10 per cent. upon its cost, (exclusive of the 5 per cent. to be paid to the United States,) Congress may reduce the rates of fare thereon, if unreasonable in amount, and may fix and establish the same by law. And the better to accomplish the object of this act—namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes—Congress may at any time—having due regard for the rights of said companies named herein—add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The first qualification upon that right of amendment and repeal is that you shall not lay your hand upon the net earnings of this road until you have allowed the stockholders to have received from its operation, in addition to the 5 per cent. to be paid to the United States, 10 per cent. upon its cost, for the reservation is in Congress to change the rates of fare and freight established by the companies only when, and in the event of, the net earnings exceeding that amount; and in violation of that, in utter disregard of that solemn legislative pledge, the Judiciary Committee of this body call upon its members to vote away the entire control of these companies over their earnings to the extent of 25 per cent. of their net amount.

More than that: the power reserved to amend is described in this section as reserved for certain express and specific purposes and no others. It is to promote the public interest and welfare by certain means, and those means are first the construction of the railroad and telegraph line, second keeping the same in working order, and third securing to the Government at all times, but particularly in time of war, the use and benefit of the line for postal, military, and other purposes.

For those purposes you may add to, alter, amend, or repeal the act, and for no other; and these companies and all who either put their money originally into them or who have since become interested by the negotiation of their securities had a right to rely that whether Congress had the power abstractly and as a sovereign or not, here was a solemn legislative pledge that it should be used only in these contingencies and to accomplish these objects. And now on the invitation of our Committee on the Judiciary we are invited to the exertion of power which a Congress with equal power has agreed should not be exerted, and that to accomplish no purpose of the original act. It is not even professed or pretended to be for any one of the enumerated purposes contained in this section. No, Mr. President, the purpose is altogether different. Although it is not avowed, it is so plain that it cannot be disguised. The purpose of this enactment, if it becomes such, is that it may not so much alter, amend, or repeal these statutes as that it may reverse a judgment and decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. That court has decided that these companies do not at this present time owe the Government on account of interest a single cent, that nothing will become due until the maturity of the bonds themselves. If that decision had been otherwise, this proposed legislation would not have been thought of, there would have been no plausible pretext for it, and it is because there is nothing due, because there is nothing accruing, because the Supreme Court of the United States has so decided, that we are called upon, not by direct act, but by indirection, to put the companies into that position as if the Supreme Court had decided the other way.

Mr. President, every single authority that has been cited or that can be cited admits that even in reference to a reservation of a right of repeal in absolute and unconditional terms, nevertheless there is a limit. What that limit is is a more difficult question. That there is a limit, the authorities all say. That there is a limit must be, if our Government is a free Government, and if we are a free people. Otherwise, we are living under the dominion of absolutism, of that unlimited authority and power and government which, in old times, was supposed to be of divine origin, when kings ruled by right divine. That doctrine, which found so illustrious an exponent in Hobbes, and which is not altogether exploded even in modern times, and who describes it where he says, in endeavoring to demonstrate the origin of government in that consent and concord which constitutes the community as if it had but one will:

As if every man should say to every man, I authorize and give up my right of governing myself to this man, or to this assembly of men, on this condition: that thou give up thy right to him, and authorize all his actions in like manner. This done, the multitude so united in one person is called a COMMONWEALTH, in Latin CIVITAS. This is the generation of that great LEVIATHAN, or rather, to speak more reverently, of that MORTAL GOD to which we owe, under the IMMORTAL GOD, our peace and defense.—Hobbes's English Works, volume 3, page 158.

That is the doctrine of absolutism. Do Senators understand what that means? Do they suppose that that as an exploded theory of human duty and human right in the constitution of government has been relegated to the limbs of lost and unremembered things? It is living to-day. Its name is COMMUNISM. It means that the state absorbs unto itself all the power of all the individuals that compose it, that there are no such things as separate or separable individual rights, that all rights are common rights, that the Government must own and regulate and operate all the railroads and all the telegraph lines, that it ought to own as common stock all the lands, no citizen having a right to acquire a fee, an inheritable estate, but only a tenancy, that the state shall control and own all the workshops and employ all the labor and fix all the wages and all the incomes of all its people.

It may be thought, certainly a few years ago it would have been thought, a very vain alarm to sound, that any such wolf as that was at our doors; but nevertheless, the offspring of poverty and hard times, of discontent and of ignorance, it is here, and is hunting everywhere for legislative precedents on which to build and found its theories and justify its vagaries, and when the time comes, as the time soon may, when the organs and representatives and exponents of such ideas and their authorized places in these seats or in the Chamber at the other end of this building, they will look a long time before they will find a case more completely in point to establish that theory of constitutional power in the Federal Government which they most desire and need, than in the very bill which we are considering, the bill which, in the minds of many of its advocates, does not need to rest upon reservations of power contained in express words in the statutes themselves, but rests upon an inherent right, a supreme power that cannot be subtracted from, no matter how much it is spent. But as lawyers, in undertaking to define, at least negatively, what limits there are upon such a power, there is as yet, so far as I have been able to discover, in point of doctrine theoretically no actual difference, for it is admitted by all who have spoken on the other side that, no matter how unconditional and absolute is the right in question, it cannot extend so far as to divest a vested right, and the question really is, what are vested rights, and how are they affected by this proposed legislation?

My learned friend the Senator from Michigan undertook to do what none of his colleagues attempted, and that is to draw the line; and in order that I may not misrepresent him I will refer to the language of his speech; I read from the eleventh page of the pamphlet edition:

I do not contend, I never have contended, that the power extended so far as to authorize Congress to divest property or rights which, though originally depending upon, or growing out of, that contract, have become so far vested as to be able to stand upon another foundation, without the direct present or future support of that contract. The lands which have been patented to the company, for instance, which might rest upon the patent, and so of any other rights not dependent for immediate support upon the contract, whether those rights are still vested in the companies or in third persons derived from them. Property or rights thus vested cannot, I admit, be divested by the legislative power.

Now, Mr. President, let us apply that rule, let us apply line and plummet, and see whether the learned Senator from Michigan has built square work. A right which, though originally springing from the law, has acquired another foundation than the law, is a vested right, but one which must continue to depend upon the continuance and subsistence of the law itself is not. That is the standard and rule.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The Senator will allow me. I put it on the ground not of the law as a law but as a contract.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Call it what you will, it is the thing which you are talking about repealing, and it is the contract though in the form of law. Now I premise, any man acquiring a right, for instance, under the contract between the United States and the railroad companies under the act of 1864 has no other, better, or higher rights than the corporations, for whoever takes takes under the law, by virtue of the law, through the medium of the law; he has notice of its provisions; he is not a stranger. There is a privity of title, of estate, of contract, so that his right has not become vested on this account; the repeal of the contract contained in the law takes it away just as thoroughly and effectually as it takes away unvested rights of the corporation.

Now one step further. The act of 1862 reserved in favor of the United States as security for the repayment of its advances of bonds a first-mortgage lien upon the property of the companies. The act of 1864 authorized the corporation to make an issue of first-mortgage bonds, and subordinated the lien of the United States, which by the prior act was a first lien, to the now first lien authorized under the act of 1864. That mortgage has been executed and those bonds are outstanding. Are the rights of the holders of those bonds vested, or are they not? Why, my learned friend from Michigan, I anticipate, will say, "Certainly they are." Certainly they are, as holders of a mortgage and bond against the corporation; but the priority of the lien of that mortgage is continuously, daily, hourly dependent on the continuing subsistence of the act of 1864. Take away the act: your mortgage is there, your bonds are there, but where is the priority of your right? Where is your first-mortgage lien? It is gone; gone by the repeal; gone—if the Senator from Michigan is right in his definition of what constitutes a vested right—because the distinction is between the claim of the bondholder against the company and his claim of priority as against the United States. The claim of the bondholder against the United States is dependent perpetually on the continued existence of the statute which constitutes the contract.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean the first-mortgage bondholder?

Mr. MATTHEWS. Certainly. I am not arguing that they are subject to any such contingency, but I do argue, as I do most firmly believe, that if Congress has the power to compel the companies to do what they will be required to do by the terms of the pending bill, then Congress has equally the right to subvert the present priority of lien vested in the first-mortgage bondholders.

Mr. President, the contrast is so striking that it continually reverts to the fact that lately this Chamber resounded with appeals to the national honor and to the national faith to stand by contracts, where the contract as it was interpreted was against the express letter of the only laws under which it was claimed to have been made and based upon, an implication merely resting upon the expectation of the parties claiming the benefit of it. Those who were then arguing in favor of the contract as written, as expressed in the statute, were handled as breakers of the national faith, as violators of the national public pledges, as repudiators of the national credit. Some of the same Senators are now clamoring for the exercise of power in another direction, directed against other parties, upon the ground that it is derogatory to the dignity and honor of the nation to admit that it can be bound by its own pledges.

What are vested rights? An estate in land is a vested right; a title which gives right to a future possession, a contingent estate as distinguished from a mere expectancy, is a vested right; it cannot be taken. An estate in personal property, a right to its possession, present or future, cannot be taken. Are there none others? Certainly there are. A right of action is a vested right; a promissory note, though not yet due, an obligation to pay money held by another, is a vested right, and that right of action cannot be taken away. So a right of defense is a vested right. If one holds against another a right of action which has ceased by law to be such, as, for instance, where it has been barred by the operation of the statute of limitations, the right to plead that statute in bar of that action cannot be taken away. The right of action cannot be taken away by the passage of a statute of limitations which gives an unreasonably short time in which to bring the suit. A right of defense once perfected under an existing law is not affected by the repeal of the law.

Can the United States sue the railroad companies for the recovery of money to be put into a sinking fund? Can it sue these companies for the recovery of money due on account of the interest on these bonds? That has been tried and decided. It cannot sue to recover money to go into a sinking fund, because there is no such existing right. If it should bring any such suit as that, the company has a perfect defense to such an action for the recovery of any money on the ground that by the contract with the Government it owes nothing. Unless, indeed, it can be claimed that the right to a sinking fund is an implied incident to every debt payable in futuro. To state such a claim is to refute it.

You propose to take away that defense, you propose to alter that contract, you propose to change the relation between these parties established originally by their joint consent, so that now, without the consent of the defendant, the United States may lawfully bring an action for the recovery of money not due and never promised, and failing that, not merely to have judgment rendered for the specific sum with execution awarded, but to forfeit every other right, every right which by the existing law it has to all its possessions. That is what the distinguished Senator from Vermont calls legislative jurisprudence. Without intending offense, it is what I call legislative injustice, legislative wrong.

If what is proposed can be done, why cannot a law be passed declaring that, whereas the United States are largely in advance on account of the interest on these bonds, hereafter from this time, by virtue of this amendment and enactment, that amount of money shall become presently due from these companies to the United States? Why not do it in that express and direct way? For the objection is not to the form of the thing; it is to the thing itself. If you cannot do that I defy mortal man to point out a rational distinction, an intelligible, common-sense distinction, between that and that which is proposed.

It has been said by the advocates of the Judiciary Committee's proposition that they do not claim they have the right to make the debt now not due for twenty-odd years presently due. They admit that that would be divesting a vested right, but that although not due they can make the defendant pay it; for where is the difference between contributing annually to a sinking fund compulsorily exacted and required to be paid and piled up in the coffers and treasury of the other party, to be held there and applied by it when the time does come for the maturity of the debt, and to declare in express words that the debt is now due and to be collected? It would take a Damascus blade to draw the line of distinction. As it stands it is a clumsy subterfuge. It is not legislative jurisprudence, it is a legislative stratagem. It is doing one thing by indirection where there is neither the courage nor the manliness to do it outright. What is the difference between declaring an obligation due and payable which is not so and declaring that the obligor shall pay an obligation now which is not due for twenty years? What is a sinking fund but a mode of anticipating payment by paying before maturity? Or, if it be mere security, where is the right to demand security when the agreement was to lend without security?

What are the excuses put forth? On what pretenses founded in any system of jurisprudence is this thing based? My friend the Senator from Vermont said yesterday afternoon that it was sufficient to found it on the right of visitation, and I understood him to express a little sort of impatience, not to designate it by any other name, at the Senator from Massachusetts for not knowing enough of the horn-books of the law to know that that was a plain and perspicuous ground upon which it could be based. Now, I read from a horn-book of the law, the second volume of the commentaries of Chancellor Kent, on the subject of the visitation of corporations, wherein he says:

I proceed next to consider the power and discipline of visitations to which corporations are subject. It is a power applicable only to ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations; and it is understood that no other corporations go under the name of eleemosynary but colleges, schools, and hospitals. The visitation of civil corporations is by the Government itself, through the medium of the courts of justice.

Again:

This visitatorial power arises from the property which the founder assigned to support the charity; and as he is the author of the charity, the laws give him and his heirs a visitatorial power; that is, an authority to inspect the actions and regulate the behavior of the members that partake of the charity. This power is judicial and supreme, but not legislative.

Again:

There is a marked and very essential difference between civil and eleemosynary corporations on this point of visitation. The power of visitors, strictly speaking, extends only to the latter.

Again:

The visitatorial power, therefore, with us, applies only to eleemosynary corporations. Civil corporations, whether public, as the corporations of towns and cities, or private, as bank, insurance, manufacturing, and other companies of the like nature, are not subject to this species of visitation. They are subject to the general law of the land and amenable to the judicial tribunals for the exercise and the abuse of their powers. The way in which the courts exercise common-law jurisdiction over all civil corporations, whether public or private, is by writ of mandamus and by information in the nature of quo warranto. It is also well understood that the court of chancery has a jurisdiction over charitable corporations for breaches of trust.—2 Kent's Commentaries, 363, 364, 367.

Now, three things appear: first, that the power of visitation applies only to corporations; secondly, it applies only to eleemosynary corporations, and not to civil corporations; and thirdly, that the power of visitation is not legislative but judicial. Yet, the learned Senator from Vermont cited the case in 4 Otto, of Munn vs. Elevator, as a case where the Supreme Court of the United States had decided that the power of visitation was rightfully exercised.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will be good enough to read that part of my remarks, I should like to hear them, and they have not been changed.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I have not the remarks by me. If the Senator says he did not say so, that is enough.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I should like to have the Senator be sure.

Mr. MATTHEWS. The Senator had better be sure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My observations are never doctored after the reporter takes them down. The Senator will find them, therefore, exactly as he heard them, if he heard them as stated. Now, if he will be good enough to turn to any place where I said the case of Munn (which I suppose is the one he refers to) had been decided by the Supreme Court on the ostensible ground of visitation, then I shall admit that I am wrong and he is right, because they did not decide it on that point.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I appeal to the Senate if the Senator did not speak of the case of Millers and others in the cases, of which there is a whole array in 4 Otto, as cases of visitation; for I was so astonished at the remark that I took special pains to interrogate the Senator as to his meaning. He said the power of visitation, though not the only ground on which the authority could rest, was a sufficient ground, and he cited the cases in 4 Otto as proof of the decisions of the court in the application of that doctrine. The leading case was the case of a private person where the Legislature of the State of Illinois first declared that his vocation was public and then because it was public that they had a right to regulate the rates of his charges to his customers. I do not purpose at this time on this occasion in this way to comment on the decision or on those which followed it in the same series of that volume of reports. The ground of the decision was not the right of visitation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the ground?

Mr. MATTHEWS. The ground was that an elevator was property which by the act of the party had been dedicated to a public use, which vested in the public, represented by the Government, a certain interest coupled with the right to regulate that public interest according to its notions of the general welfare; and so they held in regard to the railroad corporations, in which it was held as to this very doctrine of the limitation on the right of repeal to be immaterial, for the reason that the court in the Munn case had already held that as to private property the same right of regulation existed, and nobody contended that the property of the corporation was in a better category than that of private persons. I think the only visitation that can appropriately be spoken of in this connection is a visitation of Providence in the concoction and urgency of this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly Providence had not anything to do with the Railroad bill.

Mr. MATTHEWS. It may have. Those on whom the tower of Siloam fell were perhaps not more unjust and wicked than those who escaped.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not remember that case.

Mr. MATTHEWS. No, sir; that is not a case in Gray. That brings me to a consideration of this famous case, cited with so much array of conclusiveness from the fourth volume of Gray's reports, the case of the Massachusetts General Hospital against the Mutual Life-Insurance Company of Worcester. If I am not mistaken it was claimed that this case was a direct authority for the proposition that, under the general power of amendment of a provision in the charter of a corporation which defined net earnings in a particular way so as to require the payment of only a certain amount, the Legislature could subsequently pass another act giving another definition to net earnings so as to make the company responsible for another and a larger amount. It has to mean that to mean anything pertinent to this discussion, and it does not mean that. There is not one word in the case approaching it. The facts in the case are simply that, by the previous legislation of the State in the charter of the Massachusetts General Hospital, a life-insurance company was chartered who were required to devote one-third of their net profits to the support of the hospital. That charter contained a proviso that no other life-insurance company should thereafter be chartered except upon the like conditions. Subsequently, in 1844, a charter was given to the defendant company, which was a company on a mutual plan and had a guaranteed capital stock of a hundred thousand dollars, on which they had agreed to pay interest at the rate of 6 or 7 per cent. per annum as a security to the holders of the deposits. It was claimed by them that under this act they were not liable for the payment of any net profits at all, because they made none, it being a mutual company and the interest on the guarantee capital being a part of the expenses of operation. In order to make the charter of that company conform to the original contract between the State and the Massachusetts General Hospital and to supply the defect in the subsequent charters in respect to that obligation, for it took all its rights with the knowledge of the prior law, an amendatory act was passed declaring that they should pay one third of the net profits over and above the 6 per cent. of the guarantee. That is all there is to that case. It was not a case in which by an amendatory statute a new right was given to the State or any third person, or any new obligation imposed upon the defendants; but more clearly to require the subsequently organized company to conform to the very obligations which constituted the conditions of their corporate existence.

If I understood the argument correctly, this measure was justified on another ground, and that is that it was in the nature of a special act relating to bankruptcy, an act in prevention of bankruptcy, an act to provide for the distribution of the assets of this company, so as that it should not become a bankrupt, for the protection of creditors and stockholders. It is to be observed, in the first place that no creditor of the company, including the Government, has any lien by virtue of the existing law upon the income of the company derived from the use and operation of its property. The mortgages are confined to the body of the property, and do not express that they include the right to receive the income; and, even if they did, there could be no right to receive the income until after default made and until after the court had taken actual possession of the income by the acts of its officer, a receiver. That point has been expressly ruled by the Supreme Court in a case in 1 Otto, of Gilman and others vs. The Illinois and Mississippi Telegraph Company, to which I shall merely refer as establishing that proposition. Is there any ground of remedial justice that secures to a creditor or a stockholder of a corporation the right, upon any equitable principle, to intervene in advance upon the ground merely of his apprehension, and ask the court to protect him over and above and outside of the actual legal securities with which he is invested by the terms of his contract? The Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] not now in his seat, when I first addressed the Senate on this subject, seemed to think that there was a ground on which intervention could be successfully justified, by providing a new remedy; but a new remedy implies an existing and ancient right. Under pretense of giving a remedy you cannot change and substantially alter actual obligations and duties and rights. There is a jurisdiction in equity at the suit of a stockholder, of a creditor sometimes, by invoking the preventive justice of that court to prevent the corporation from diverting their capital, from misapplying their property and income so as to defeat the legitimate purposes and objects of their existence; but that intervention is expressly limited to two classes of cases. There must be some sufficient and distinct acts alleged as justifying the grounds for the application, and they must be either, first, ultra vires, beyond the corporate power, and therefore null and void as against complaining stockholders or creditors, or else they must be breaches of trust. Beyond that, outside of those categories, there cannot be found, I venture to say, any reported case in which a court of equity has intervened to regulate the interior and domestic management of the affairs of a corporation. Wherever it has been attempted it has been refused. The principles on which the courts act in such cases are laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Dodge vs. Woolsey, in the eighteenth volume of Howard. The court say:

The result of the cases is well stated in Angell & Ames, paragraphs 391, 393: "In cases where the legal remedy against a corporation is inadequate, a court of equity will interfere, is well settled, and there are cases in which a bill in equity will lie against a corporation by one of its members." "Though the result of the authorities clearly is, that in a corporation, when acting within the scope of and in obedience to the provisions of its constitution, the will of the majority, duly expressed at a legally constituted meeting, must govern; yet beyond the limits of the act of incorporation, the will of the majority cannot make an act valid; and the powers of a court of equity may be put in motion at the instance of a single shareholder, if he can show that the corporation are employing their statutory powers for the accomplishment of purposes not within the scope of their institution. Yet it is to be observed that there is an important distinction between this class of cases and those in which there is no breach of trust, but only error and misapprehension, or simple negligence on the part of the directors."—Is Howard's Reports, 343.

I recur to an observation made in the prior part of this argument, important now to be noted, that we are called upon to act in this instance, not by virtue of any powers or rights belonging to the United States as a creditor, but as a legislative power, as sovereign; and that we have the same right to put in motion this species of legislation in behalf of other persons as creditors as though the Government was itself not a creditor at all. That is the principle on which the bill of the Judiciary Committee proceeds; for it does not apply the sinking fund to the technical payment of the debt due to the Government or to become due, but claims to preserve it for the general purposes of those to whom it may be assigned as creditors of the corporation. The same power invoked now would be lawful, if lawful here, over every other corporation within the purview of the jurisdiction of Congress.

But more, Congress has jurisdiction to pass a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcy, and that applies not to corporations merely, but to natural persons, to all persons. If in reference to corporations subject to its control Congress has a right to anticipate the possibility of insolvency at a future day by reason of that jurisdiction to require the accumulation of 25 per cent. of their net income, why may they not pass a bankrupt law far more efficient than that cumbersome machine which my distinguished friend, the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY,] who is listening to me now, desires to remove, which shall not undertake to cure bankruptcies but to prevent them, and to say in advance that in order to meet the case of possible insolvency 25 per cent. of the net income of every citizen of the United States shall be paid into the Treasury to accumulate as a sinking fund at such rate of interest as it may suit the interest of the United States to pay, in order to be distributed in the event of insolvency among the creditors of the party? Why not? Congress has jurisdiction of the person, it has jurisdiction of the subject, exclusive jurisdiction, and if this preventive legislative jurisdiction can be invoked to the extent and in the degree requisite to sustain the present measure, why not make it general and apply it to all cases of possible insolvency? My objection to this bill is that it takes away from a citizen his property for no public use where compensation is proposed, but for private use, for the use of his creditors, who have not yet any claim against him, and without his assent. It is said the land is not taken the visible and tangible property is not taken; it is only the income. But where you take away from property its profit, what valuable interest is there left in it? You take away a man's income and where is his capital? You take away a part; by what right can he maintain and defend the rest? It takes it away not only without his assent, but in spite of his protest and in violation of your agreement with him.

It takes it away, as I say again, for no public purpose but for a private purpose. That you cannot do in this country lawfully under any circumstances as against any man. You cannot buy a man's property against his consent; you cannot compel him to sell it at any price for anything except a public use, and it is a mere abuse, a perversion of words, to call the use public because it is to pay a debt due to the Government, for, as I have again to repeat, as a creditor the Government is a private person. There is no end of the fancies in which men may indulge as to what constitutes that public right which will furnish the excuse for invasions of private property. In the early days of Kentucky, when large bodies of land were unoccupied it was a great public necessity that population should be invited and that improvements should be made. Accordingly, in 1824 I think, a statute was passed by the Legislature of that State which required every holder of such a quantity of lands to put certain improvements upon them within a certain time, failing which any other person might enter, occupy, improve, and own. The validity of that statute, passed upon those apparent grounds of public policy, was questioned and decided as far back as the first volume of Dana's Reports in the case of Gaines vs. Buford, in which one of the judges, Judge Underwood, says:

I know of no principle which will allow the Government, any more than an individual, after fairly selling and conveying land, to take back the land and resume the title, at its own pleasure, against the assent of the grantee. Neither am I acquainted with any principle which will allow the Government to annex new conditions, unknown at the time of the original contract; and for a violation of them seize the land, divest the citizen of his title, and retain the consideration which the citizen paid or rendered, without remunerating him therefor.—1 Dana's Reports, 486.

So in modern times, (for I shall not continue to offend the intuitive sense of jurisprudence dwelling in the breast of my friend, the Senator from Michigan, by referring perpetually only to old cases,) in the case of Palanet's appeal, reported in the sixty-seventh volume of Pennsylvania State Reports, the Legislature of that State sought to cut up by the roots and destroy forever the estates in perpetual rents, ground rents, a favorite mode of investment in that State, and particularly in the city of Philadelphia. Accordingly they passed a statute which authorized a sale of the reversion upon the petition of the tenant. The Supreme Court of that State held that without the consent of the owner of the fee it was an attempt to take private property for a private use, although it was attempted to justify it upon the ground of a public policy, and that it was unconstitutional and void.

Therefore, Mr. President, the apprehension is not a vain one that legislative ingenuity is unlimited in seeking out unknown methods of undermining the foundations of private right, and that it is well after all to stand by the ancient landmarks of the law and not to go in quest of these new discoveries in legislative jurisprudence.

As to the details of any arrangement which can be come to between the Government and these companies, I am entirely indifferent. Whatever they can be induced to consent to pay, whatever they can lawfully be made to pay, consistent always with that higher public interest which is contained essentially in their permanence as great national highways of trade and travel for carrying men and merchandise to and fro, I am willing and desirous that they should pay; but I stand here to-day suitably impressed, as I believe, by the solemnity of the responsibilities, public and private, under which I rest and act, and say that if the Government has to lose all the millions it has invested in the advances to these companies, I think it had better lose them than for Congress to give its assent to the propositions contained in this bill, a bill which settles nothing and unsettles everything, which in effect and in intent upsets the consequences of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States judicially determining the very right between these parties, and refuses again to enter into any bond and obligation, no matter how severe and onerous to the other party, simply because Senators are unwilling to give up the power to tease, to harass, to oppress, and impoverish. That may be regarded by some as a precious inheritance, the right to exert power merely to show that you have power, but my instructions in jurisprudence and political philosophy have taught me that power ought never to be exerted except upon justifying grounds and for beneficial and useful purposes.

When I addressed the Senate on a former occasion I announced my intention to move, and accordingly moved, that the bill reported from the Railroad Committee should be substituted for that reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. I now withdraw that motion in order that the vote when it comes to be taken may be taken directly and expressly upon the merits of the Judiciary Committee's bill.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Mr. President, I move to substitute Senate bill No. 1032 for the bill of the Judiciary Committee.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves an amendment by way of substitute as stated. The Secretary will report the substitute.

THE CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That in order to establish a sinking fund for the purpose of liquidating the claims of the Government on account of the bonds advanced under said act of July 1, 1862, and the acts amending the same or supplemental thereto, to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized to carry to the credit of a sinking fund for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, the successor, by consolidation, of the said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and to the credit of a sinking fund for the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the amount due, or which may be due, the said companies, respectively, for the carriage and transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores for the Government, under the acts aforesaid, up to and including the 31st day of March, 1878, which, if not amounting at said date to the sum of $1,000,000, shall be made up by the respective companies to that sum each, and any amount so found due said respective companies over $1,000,000 shall be paid over to said companies respectively.

SEC. 2. That the said Central Pacific Railroad Company and the said Union Pacific Railroad Company shall each pay into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of said sinking fund, either in lawful money or in any bonds or securities of the United States at par, annually, the sum of $1,250,000, in equal semi-annual installments, on the 1st day of April and October in each year, commencing on the 1st day of October, 1878, and continuing such payments until and including the 1st day of October, in the year 1900. Interest on all sums placed to the credit of the sinking fund shall be credited and added thereto semi-annually, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Upon the maturity of the first-mortgage bonds of said companies, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the same or any part of said bonds remaining due and unpaid out of the said sinking fund: Provided, however, That the said companies, or either of them, shall have the right to fund said first-mortgage bonds into a new bond, upon such time and terms as may be agreed upon with the holders thereof, and the present lien to secure said bonds under existing law shall remain valid until said bonds are finally liquidated. Any balance remaining due the United States from either of said companies on the 1st day of October, A. D. 1900, after deducting the amount standing to the credit of said sinking fund from the amount of said bonds, together with all interest thereon which shall have been paid by the United States, and interest on the principal of said bonds from the maturity thereof respectively to the 1st day of October, A. D. 1900, shall be then divided into fifty equal semi-annual installments, to be paid by said companies respectively, one of which shall be paid on the 1st day of April and one on the 1st day of October in each year, with all accrued interest from October 1st, in the year 1900, upon said balance remaining unpaid at the date of maturity of each installment, payable at the same rate of interest per annum as paid by the United States on the larger part of the public debt on the 1st day of January preceding the date of payment of the several installments.

SEC. 3. That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in lieu of all payments required from said companies under said act of July 1, 1862, and the amendments thereto, in relation to the reimbursement to the Government for the bonds so issued to said corporations. In case, for any cause unavoidable by said companies, or either of them, there shall not be net earnings made sufficient for such payment, and for the payment of the interest on the first-mortgage bonds for any one year, the payments hereby required shall be abated for such time: Provided, That no dividend shall be voted, made, or paid to any stockholder in either of said companies at any time when the said companies, or either of them may be in default in respect of the payments required to be paid into the said sinking fund, or in respect of interest upon any debt which may be a prior lien to that of the United States; and any officer or person who shall vote, declare, make, or pay, and any stockholder who shall receive any such dividend, contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be liable to the United States for the amount thereof, which, when received, shall be paid into said sinking fund. And every such officer, person, or stockholder who shall knowingly vote, declare, make, or pay any such dividend, contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding one year.

Sec. 4. That said sinking fund so established and accumulated shall, according to the interest and proportion of said companies respectively therein, be held for the protection, security, and benefit of the lawful and just holders of any mortgage or lien debts of such companies respectively, lawfully paramount to the rights of the United States, as well as for the United States, subject, however, to the provision in section 2 of this act, but the provisions of this section shall not operate or be held to impair any existing legal right, except in the manner in this act provided, of any mortgage, lien, or other creditor of either of said companies respectively, nor to excuse either of said companies respectively from the duty of discharging out of other funds its debts to any creditor except the United States.

Sec. 5. That said companies shall not in any manner be released from their present liabilities to keep the said railroads and telegraph lines constructed under the acts of Congress aforesaid, in repair and use, and to transmit dispatches over said telegraph lines, and transport mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroads for the Government, whenever required to do so by any Department thereof, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation (said rates not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service,) the whole amount of which shall be paid by the Government to said companies on the adjustment of the accounts thereof, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid.

Sec. 6. That the President of the United States shall forthwith nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a person skilled in the management of railroads, to be styled "the Pacific Railroad commissioner," whose duty it shall be to establish, from time to time, rules and regulations (subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior) to govern the operation and use of the several roads of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the branch companies, and to enforce the observance thereof so as to afford and secure to the public and the Government all the advantages of communication, travel, and transportation over the said road and branches, as stipulated and defined in the several acts of Congress relating to the operation and use of said roads as one connected, continuous line, as well as to secure and enforce the mutual rights and duties of said companies to each other; which rules and regulations shall govern said companies in the operation and use of their respective roads until the same shall be found to be inconsistent with the requirements of said acts of Congress by final decree of the courts of the United States, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 7. That if said companies or any of them, shall neglect or refuse to conform to the said rules and regulations, the commissioner shall report the fact to the President of the United States, who, being satisfied of such neglect or refusal, shall, by his order, require said commissioner to direct the operation and management of the road of the company or companies so neglecting or refusing, and, if need be to take the absolute possession and control of and operate the same in accordance with such rules and regulations: Provided, however, That any of said companies may file a bill in equity against said commissioner and the other companies in the circuit court of the United States of any circuit within which any part of its road may be situated, praying a decree restraining the enforcement of such rules, regulations, or order, and declaring the rights and duties of the parties to such suit under the acts of Congress relating to said companies; and every such suit shall have precedence in the courts in which the same shall be pending, and service in such suit may be made anywhere in the United States by copy of the bill.

Sec. 8. That if the complainant, in any bill which shall be filed under this act, shall not implead all the other companies, any company omitted from such bill shall, upon its petition, be made a party defendant thereto.

Sec. 9. That such commissioner shall continue in office until he resigns, or until removed by the President, and his salary, which shall be fixed at — thousand dollars per annum, to be paid quarterly, together with all his reasonable and proper expenses for clerk hire, office rent, stationery, and other incidental expenses, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid by the said several companies in proportion to the gross earnings of their respective roads, and as adjusted by said commissioner, after examination by him of the books and reports of said several companies.

Sec. 10. That it shall be the duty of said commissioner, from time to time, to report to the Secretary of the Interior in answer to any inquiries he may make of him touching the condition and management of said road and branch roads; and he shall communicate at any time such information as he may deem advisable to be in the possession of the Department, and he shall perform such other duties as are required under existing law to be performed by the five Government directors provided for by section 13 of the act of July 2, 1862, and that part of said section requiring the appointment of said five Government directors is hereby repealed.

Sec. 11. That upon the faithful compliance with, and performance of, all the requirements of this act relative to said sinking fund by said companies, or either of them, this act shall be deemed and taken as a final settlement between said companies, or either of them so complying, and the United States as regards the payment of said bonds and interest; in case of failure or neglect by either of said companies to perform all and singular the requirements of this act in regard to said payments as hereinbefore mentioned for the period of six months next after such performance may be due, such failure shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights, privileges, grants, and franchises derived or obtained by it from the United States, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to cause such forfeiture to be judicially enforced.

Sec. 12. That nothing in this act shall be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress at any time hereafter to further alter, amend, or repeal the said acts hereinbefore mentioned or this act, except as provided in the preceding section; and nothing herein contained shall be held to deny, exclude, or impair any right or remedy in the premises now existing in favor of the United States; and each and every of the provisions of this act contained shall severally and respectively be deemed, taken, and held as in alteration and amendment of said acts of 1862 and 1864, and of the amendments thereto and supplemental acts thereof.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Mr. President, several months ago I had the honor of addressing the Senate upon the subject of the Pacific railroad system, and more particularly upon the manner of the operation of these respective roads one with the other, the main line with the branches. Speaking of the unjust discrimination practiced by the Union Pacific Company toward the branch companies, I used these words:

In my judgment it works a greater hardship than would be entailed by the entire loss of all the bonds loaned to the several companies, the ultimate payment of which the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is so anxious to secure.

Sir, these were not idle words. I propose briefly to give some reasons why I used them then and why I repeat them now.

The Senator from Ohio, who sits near me, said yesterday that my prorate bill had no business with the funding bill, or words to that effect. I must beg leave to differ with my learned friend upon this point. In my judgment it has much to do with this question, and very much to do with the welfare of the public and with the honor of the Government.

Let us inquire for one moment what were the objects of the acts of 1862 and 1864. Why were these munificent grants made? Why were $64,623,512 in bonds of the Government issued and loaned to these corporations? Was it simply to enable the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to invent some plan by which the Government can be made more secure and ultimately to be repaid? Did the Government make this vast loan for the benefit of the interest upon the loan? Did Congress part with these bonds and agree to pay the interest on them for thirty years as a business transaction for profit and accept a second mortgage upon the roads as security? Yet my honorable friend from Ohio and his associates upon the Judiciary Committee seem to act upon the theory that the speedy repayment of this money overshadows every other consideration of public policy in relation to the management and conduct of these several companies. In order to arrive at a proper consideration of the subject before the Senate, I propose to inquire into the object of the legislation which called these corporations into existence. The act itself declares this purpose in the following words. I cite section 18 of the act of July 1, 1862:

And the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes.

Again, in section 6 of the same act the companies were required to keep the roads in repair, so that the Government can at all times transport troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores, and the mails upon said railroads, &c., so that we see that the declared object of the Government was to promote the public welfare, as well as to enable the Government to use the roads for its own necessities and benefit, that this aid was extended to these corporations.

Mr. President, the theory of the whole legislation had upon this Pacific railroad system is upon this principle, and the branches reaching to widely separated points upon the Missouri River were included in the subsidy so lavishly bestowed, in order to better accommodate the public and the Government. If these were not the main objects sought for, why subsidize any branch roads? Why subordinate the security of the Government for the bonds issued? It is specially provided that the "track upon the entire line of railroad and branches shall be of uniform width, so that, when completed, cars can be run from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast."

Section 12 of the act of 1862 provides that—

The whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected continuous line.

Then, again, in section 15 of the act of July 2, 1864, it is provided:

That the several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line; and, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others.

The idea of operating all of these roads as one family, without any discriminations of any kind, has never been lost sight of in any legislation had upon the subject. Now, sir, how has the object of the law been complied with in this respect? The Union Pacific Railroad Company has never complied with the law. On the contrary, it has openly defied the law and the Government by practicing the most unjust discriminations against the branches, utterly prohibiting them from any benefits of through traffic or travel and denying the public and Government any use whatever of the branches for transcontinental business. I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate now to show at any great length how the people of this country are damaged by the conduct of some of these companies; but I desire to read one or two letters from merchants in Denver to show how the State I represent in part upon this floor is practically embargoed by the unjust and unlawful discrimination of the Union Pacific Company:

DENVER, COLORADO, January 2, 1878.

DEAR SIR: I have read with much pleasure your speech upon the management of the Pacific roads. You are certainly on the right track, and I trust you will lay on vigorously and spare not until the laws of Congress shall be obeyed by all the Pacific roads, both in letter and spirit.

As an illustration of the unjust discrimination which has been practiced against Colorado business, I will state that the firm of Martin & Cornforth, of Denver, of which I am the senior partner, has been compelled to pay on fruit shipments for Denver, Sacramento to Cheyenne, $425 per car-load; the same car would be taken, Sacramento to Omaha, (five hundred and sixteen miles more distance,) for the same sum, $425. The rate to Chicago from Sacramento is $500 per car-load. The rate per car-load Cheyenne to Denver is $90, making the through rates from Sacramento to Denver $515, to Omaha $425, to Chicago $590. This is but one illustration. There is the same kind of discrimination against Denver and Colorado whenever we wish to ship in dried fruits from California, or grain, fruit, or potatoes from Utah, and the same injustice in a marked degree on canned goods. The rates from the Pacific coast or Utah to Omaha, Chicago, Cincinnati and Saint Louis are less than to Denver. I may add that the same discrimination is practiced against us when we desire to travel, as their published tariff shows: Omaha to San Francisco, $100; Cheyenne to San Francisco, $100.

Yours, very truly,

J. H. MARTIN.

Hon. J. B. CHAFFEE,
United States Senator for Colorado.

I will read another letter dated January 3, 1878:

DENVER, COLORADO, January 3, 1878.

DEAR SIR: Your speech has attracted the attention of all the business men of Colorado, and fairly elicited the most satisfactory comment by all parties.

Denver and Colorado have been suffering from the discriminations of the Pacific roads ever since they were thrown open for business. The law, as we common business men understand it, has been openly and flagrantly violated. Hundreds of thousands of Colorado's best acres having been donated to the Pacific Railroad Companies by Congress upon certain conditions, one of them being that there should be no discrimination for or against the business of any of the branches, we believe we have a right to at least fair play in the handling of our business by the Pacific roads.

To illustrate how we have been treated, allow me to state the following case: Since the completion of the Colorado Central Railroad between Denver and Cheyenne, I applied for a rate on a car-load of Utah dried peaches from Ogden to Denver. They gave me the following quotations: Ogden to Cheyenne $500; Ogden to Omaha, $300—a discrimination of $200 per car-load against business for Colorado. I did not accept the rate, but will be compelled to purchase in Kansas City or Omaha.

Another case in point: Some months since I purchased in San Francisco a car-load of canned goods, and shipped to Denver, paying freight $300. The same car of goods, according to their advertised tariff, could have been delivered in Saint Louis for $300. So that, as a matter of fact, I am compelled to go to Saint Louis or Chicago to buy California canned goods at the best rates for Denver market.

Another transaction: I purchased three car-loads of sirup in five-gallon kegs. Upon inquiry I found that the cost from there to Denver direct, via Cheyenne, would be $4.10 per keg; but by shipping through to Omaha and down to Kansas City, consigned to an outside party, and from thence, via the Kansas Pacific road, to Denver, the sirup could be delivered for $1.25 per keg. Of course I shipped by the latter roundabout route, the goods being subjected to about fourteen hundred miles extra and useless travel and my house liable to serious loss and vexatious delay incident to the numerous transfers.

I could make a long list of these discriminations against Denver and Colorado which have fallen under my personal observation, if it was necessary to do so. It is a matter of public notoriety that Utah potatoes can be shipped from Ogden to Omaha cheaper than they can be to Denver.

In traveling between Denver and Utah and the Pacific coast we are discriminated against in the same manner. Your Colorado friends desire you every possible success in your efforts to have the laws of Congress honestly and faithfully enforced in this matter, so that Colorado business interests may not be repressed and dwarfed by the very agency the Government intended should foster and build them up.

Very truly yours,

WOLFE LONDONER.

Hon. JEROME B. CHAFFER,
Washington, D. C.

I vouch for the truthfulness and respectability of these gentlemen; they are among our most respected citizens. The States of Kansas and Missouri are in the same situation. Indeed, sir, the people of all the States south of the Ohio River are compelled to go north to Omaha in order to reach the Pacific coast, instead of embarking at Saint Louis in a palace car and going over the Kansas branch so as to intersect the Union Pacific at Cheyenne. The entire half of this Union is compelled by the unlawful conduct of the Union Pacific Company to travel several hundred miles north to Omaha and traverse the entire line of that road in order to reach the Pacific coast.

But, Mr. President, I do not intend to cover the same ground that I went over upon a former occasion to show the unjust discriminations of these companies. That they exist is a fact as patent as is the fact that the debt of the Government is accumulating from year to year. That these abuses of power ought to be corrected I contend is more important than merely to devise a plan to secure the money advanced to construct the roads; yet my honorable friend from Ohio is willing to ignore the immediate commercial interests of the people for the greed of the almighty dollar. I claim that if any settlement is to be made between the Government and these companies, this pro rata question should be made one component part of it; and this brings me to the bill I introduced yesterday, and to which I now desire to call the attention of the Senate. I shall briefly discuss this portion of the bill relating to the legal and proper mode of operating the main line and branches before referring to the other part proposing a sinking fund for the ultimate payment of the amount that will be due the United States. The bill simply provides that, by and with the advice of the Senate, the President shall appoint one commissioner who shall establish rules and regulations, from time to time, to govern the use and operation of these roads with each other, in accordance with existing law, adding nothing whatever to the law in this respect. If any of the companies refuse to conform to such rules and regulations made by the commissioner and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the President is authorized, if need be, to take possession of the road of such defaulting company and operate the same. I will read section 7 of the proposed act:

That if said companies, or any of them, shall neglect or refuse to conform to the said rules and regulations, the commissioner shall report the facts to the President of the United States, who, being satisfied of such neglect or refusal, shall, by his order, require said commissioner to direct the operation and management of the road of the company or companies so neglecting or refusing, and, if need be, to take the absolute possession and control of and operate the same in accordance with such rules and regulations: Provided, however, That any of said companies may file a bill in equity against said commissioner and the other companies in the circuit court of the United States of any circuit within which any part of its road may be situated, praying a decree restraining the enforcement of such rules, regulations, or order, and declaring the rights and duties of the parties to such suit under the acts of Congress relating to said companies, and every such suit shall have precedence in the courts in which the same shall be pending, and service in such suit may be made anywhere in the United States by copy of the bill.

Section 9 provides that such commissioner shall continue in office until removed by the President, and that his salary shall be paid by the respective companies according to the gross earnings of their respective roads.

Section 10 provides that the commissioner shall perform the duties now required of the five Government directors, whose duties are nominal and wholly unnecessary in my judgment, and consequently it repeals the provision of the law requiring their appointment. I do not suppose the Judiciary Committee or any member of it will question the constitutionality of the power of Congress to authorize the President to take possession of any of these roads as provided in this bill.

I do not propose to enter upon any full or detailed exposition of the power of amendment reserved by Congress in the acts of 1862 and 1864. That has been conclusively done in the speeches which have been recently made in the Senate during the discussion of this question; and in all of the authorities cited upon the subject, it is conceded that the power of amendment, however it may be otherwise limited, extends so far as may be at any time necessary in order to accomplish the original purposes of the acts. This is very distinctly stated in Miller vs. The State, 15 Wallace, 498, in these words:

The reserved power may be exercised, and to almost any extent, to carry into effect the original purposes of the grant.

And again, in the Holyoke Company vs. Lyman, 15 Wallace, 500, it is said that the provision—

Reserves to the Legislature the authority to make any alteration or amendment of a charter granted subject to it, which will not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant or any rights under it, and which the Legislature may deem necessary to secure either that object or other public or private rights.

The last expression of opinion by the United States Supreme Court on this subject is in the case of Wright vs. The State of Ohio, not yet reported. Mr. Justice Swayne, speaking for the court in that case, says that the power of amendment is not without limitation. He does not state the limits in terms, but instances cases on the one side and on the other, to indicate how far the power may go. On the one side, to show the limit of the power, he says "that it has been decided by the court in New York that the Legislature cannot under the power of amendment require a railroad to build a bridge which is not in any way connected with its works or useful to it in the transaction of its business." The reason is that it is beyond the power of the Legislature to divert the property of a company to any object entirely foreign to the purposes of its creation. An instance on the other hand, cited by the learned judge to show how far the power may go, is a case decided by the court in Massachusetts, where it was held that a railroad company may be required to erect a station-house at a certain point, remove its structures and its track thereto, and operate its road in connection therewith, the power there being exercised simply to accomplish a purpose of the creation of the corporation, namely, to afford to the public conveniences in connection with the use of the road. These instances are but applications in particular cases of the rule as laid down by the United States Supreme Court in the cases in 15 Wallace, namely, that amendment may be made to almost any extent in order to accomplish the original purposes of the charter. The proposed legislation in this bill seeks to do nothing further, and is therefore clearly within the power of amendment reserved in the act as defined by the Supreme Court in the adjudged cases. Many other cases might be cited, but these are sufficient to establish beyond cavil all that is necessary for my present purpose.

But it may be said that the remedy proposed is equivalent to the taking of property without due process of law. In support of this proposition it may be insisted that the Union Pacific Railroad Company occupies toward the Government and the public the relation simply of a private party, and that as such its property is protected by the constitutional provision mentioned. But the Union Pacific Railroad Company is not, in respect of its duties to operate its road with the branches as one continuous line, simply a private party and to be dealt with as such. The case of the Union Pacific Railroad Company vs. Pennington, 18 Wallace, 32, 33, was a bill of injunction filed by the company to restrain the taxes levied by the State of Nebraska upon its road, claiming to be exempt from such State interference because it was an agency of the Government. Mr. Justice Strong, delivering the opinion of the court in that case, states in very full and impressive language that this company is an agency of the Government for certain great public purposes, but the court holds that as such its property is not withdrawn from State taxation. In that case the court proceeded upon precisely the same view which was taken by it in the case of The Merchants' Bank vs. The Commonwealth, where the question was the right of the States to tax the national banks. Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the opinion of the court in that case, held that the national banks were the fiscal agents of the Government, but not in such wise as to withdraw them from State taxation. So that the railroad company and the banks stand upon precisely the same footing as agencies of the Government and as public servants. The same view of the Union Pacific Railroad Company is taken by the court in the case of The United States vs. The Union Pacific Railroad Company, 91 United States Supreme Court Reports, 72, and in several other of the cases to which that company was a party.

Statutes of the United States have from a very early period authorized most summary process against public officers and agents and their property when delinquent in respect of the performance of their duties. In 1813 an act was passed providing such a process against a public officer receiving public funds and in default in accounting therefor. The act was revised in 1820 and is now embodied in the Revised Statutes. It provides that if a public officer receiving public funds shall not duly account therefor to the Treasury the First Comptroller shall state the account and certify it to the Solicitor of the Treasury, who shall thereupon issue his warrant directed to the marshal of the district in which the delinquent lives. Upon this warrant the marshal may seize the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the alleged defaulter and also of his sureties and sell the same on short notice; and he may even seize the body of the delinquent. No judicial process is had by any officer on behalf of the Government, the act simply providing that if the debtor feel aggrieved by any of these proceedings he may enjoin the same upon bill filed in the proper United States court. The validity of this act was called in question in the case of Murry's lessee vs. The Hoboken Insurance Company, 18 Howard, 266. In that case it appears that Swauntont was collector of customs of the port of New York. Being delinquent in rendering his accounts to the Treasury, a warrant was issued against him and a certain lot of land was sold by the marshal upon it, and upon the one side title to the property rested upon the validity of this sale. Judgments were also recovered against him in the supreme court of the State of New York, upon which executions were issued to the sheriff of the county, who sold the same property to another party, which party claimed title under these judicial proceedings. The question was whether the proceedings upon the Treasury warrant were valid, two objections being taken thereto: first, that the statute vested in the Executive judicial powers; secondly, that the proceedings were had without due process of law. Both objections were resolved by the court in favor of the validity of the act of Congress and the Treasury warrant and the proceedings thereunder, and the title held thereby was sustained.

It is evident that the proceedings in the Treasury are in a certain sense judicial. The Comptroller must inquire whether the person sought to be charged is a public officer within the meaning of the act; whether he has received public funds, and, if so, how much; whether he has rendered his account therefor or for any part thereof; what the amount of his delinquency is, and generally whether the case is one upon which a warrant should issue against him and against his sureties. These inquiries are precisely the same as those which would be presented to the court in a suit upon the bond for its determination; but the court held that notwithstanding this it was competent for Congress to vest this judicial or quasi-judicial power in an officer of the executive department of the Government. The court further holds that the warrant and proceedings under it are "due process of law," and that in order that a proceeding may be "due process of law" it is not necessary that there should be any action by a court of justice. If the attempt be made to distinguish the case of a public officer charged with public funds from the case of the Union Pacific Railroad on the ground that the former occupies to the Government some special official relation, what has already been said in respect of the objects of Congress in the acts under consideration and the character of the Union Pacific Railroad and its relations to the Government and the public show that it stands upon precisely the same ground. Its duty to furnish to the Government the speedy transportation of its great mails, of its troops, and of the public stores is of just as high and just as pressing a character as the payment into the Treasury of public funds by a public officer.

But this is not the only instance in which acts of Congress provide for summary process without judicial intervention. If a collector of the customs finds that property is sought to be imported into this country from abroad in violation of the customs laws he may seize it and sell it summarily upon short notice. So, too, if a distillery be operated in violation of the internal-revenue laws, it may be seized and closed by the collector without judicial process. So, too, national banks, their property and business, may be taken from the hands of their officers and owners and placed in the hands of a receiver, who may proceed to close their business upon an ex parte showing, to an order by the Comptroller of the Currency. In all these cases the seizure is made and the property converted without any intervention by any judicial authority or upon any judicial writ.

There is also another class of cases in which the process is equally summary. Under what is called the police power, laws for the seizure, impounding, and sale of cattle, swine, dogs, or any other property which is a nuisance to the public, have been justified. Cases in large numbers are collected and explained by Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations. They are too familiar to lawyers in the Senate to need explanation here. To one of these cases, however, I will ask attention for a moment. It is The Commonwealth vs. Alger, reported in 7 Cushing, 53. Under a colonial ordinance of Massachusetts the owner of upland bordering on the sea had an estate in fee in the adjoining flats, with full power to erect wharves and buildings thereon at his convenience and to any extent. A statute was subsequently passed forbidding the enlargement or extension of a wharf beyond a certain water-line, abridging of course the enjoyment of his property by the owner of the uplands. The statute also provided that a structure erected in violation of its inhibition might be summarily removed without any judicial proceeding whatever. The question was whether such statute was valid against the owner of the estate. The court in an elaborate opinion sustained the validity of the statute and justified the exercise of the summary power of removal by the administrative officer. In the exercise of the same power railroads have been regulated in most important particulars. For instance, in respect of their grades and the crossings of the tracks of two companies and the apportionment of the expense of the work, in respect of ringing their bells or blowing their whistles, in respect of the establishment of flag-stations and station-houses, in respect of fencing their tracks, and notably in one of the great granger cases (reported in 4 Otto) where the power of the State Legislature to reduce charges for fare and freights was sustained, first by the supreme court of Wisconsin and afterward by the Supreme Court of the United States. Many other cases of the same sort might be mentioned.

The rule to be extracted from all these cases is that, if a company or a party be charged with a public duty and should use their property so as to interfere with the public convenience, a summary remedy may be applied by the administrative department of the Government.

We have seen that the Union Pacific Railroad Company has been endowed by Congress with very large powers, and upon it have been imposed most important public duties. Its powers have been conferred upon it in order that it might discharge those duties. One of the objects of Congress has been to provide for different sections of the country, by means of the branches, equal advantages and facilities in all respects, one with another, in the enjoyment and use of a great transcontinental railroad, and the duty resting upon the company has been expressed in clear, comprehensive, and precise terms. For the more certain accomplishment of the great purposes of Congress in creating and endowing this company, the power to prescribe by way of amendment new rules, and especially new remedies, was reserved. The legislation here proposed is in every aspect of it within the principles above briefly expounded. It may be completely justified simply on the power of amendment reserved in the acts, and also upon that power of supervisory control which Congress has over its own public agent.

Thus it will be seen that the power to seize the property of any one of these companies, upon its refusal to obey the laws, which it is proposed in this bill to vest in the Executive, is not a new power, but it has been conferred before and in many cases. In the acts of 1862 and 1864, in certain contingencies, the President of the United States is authorized to take possession of the entire property of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Section 5 of the act of 1862 provides as follows:

And on the refusal or failure of the said company to redeem said bonds, or any part of them, when required so to do by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the provisions of this act, the said road, with all the rights, franchises, immunities, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and also all lands granted to the said company by the United States, which, at the time of said default, shall remain in the ownership of the said company, may be taken possession of by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the use and benefit of the United States, provided this section shall not apply to that part of any road now constructed.

Again, section 17—

Provided, That if said roads are not completed, so as to form a continuous line of railroad, ready for use, from the Missouri River to the navigable waters of the Sacramento River, in California, by the 1st day of July, 1876, the whole of said roads before mentioned, and to be constructed under the provisions of this act, together with all their furniture, fixtures, rolling-stock, machine-shops, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and property of every kind and character, shall be forfeited to and be taken possession of by the United States.

Section 22 of the act of 1864 provides that "Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act." These stipulations are a part of the contract, and are as valid as any other stipulation in the contract. This bill provides that if any company refuses to operate its road according to the contract the President shall take possession of it and perform the contract for such defaulting company. If the provisions of the acts of 1862 and 1864 are valid, it is within the power of Congress now to confer the same authority by this bill.

But the Senator from Ohio may still say, what has this subject to do with the funding bill? I will tell the Senator something that I fear he has forgotten, which does in my judgment bear upon this funding question. Does the Senator not know that one of these branches of the Union Pacific Railroad system owes the Government an original amount of $6,363,000 for bonds issued and loaned in the same manner and at the same time that the bonds were loaned the Union and Central Pacific Companies? This has been bearing interest ten years, which the Government has paid, making an amount now due the Government of over $9,000,000.

Does the Senator not know that on account of the unlawful discrimination of the Union Pacific Company against the Kansas Pacific this branch is at the present time in the hands of receivers upon motion of the first-mortgage bondholders, for default in interest due, and will be sold out unless something is done immediately to prevent these discriminations and open this road as a part of the through line to the Pacific coast? If this is done this sum of $9,000,000 can be saved to the Government. If it is not done the whole amount will be a total loss, and will aggregate over $16,000,000 at maturity. Yet my honorable friend from Ohio thinks this has nothing to do with the question now before the Senate.

Then again, if the Union Pacific is compelled to prorate with the eastern branches, thus dividing the business on the eastern half of its road, that company may not be able to pay quite so much money annually as proposed by the Judiciary Committee bill, so that Senators may see that this prorate question has much to do practically with the question before the Senate.

Mr. President, I have thus far spoken in regard to that part of the bill introduced by me yesterday which relates to the question of discrimination against the branches. I propose now briefly to examine the other portion of the bill relating to the funding question; and I may here remark that the first section of this bill is similar to and almost in the exact terms of the bill reported by the Railroad Committee.

The second section provides that each company shall pay into the sinking fund the sum of $1,250,000 in semi-annual payments, which sum shall be in lieu of all other payments required of said companies under existing law:

Provided, however, That the said companies, or either of them, shall have the right to fund said first-mortgage bonds into a new bond, upon such time and terms as may be agreed upon with the holders thereof, and the present lien to secure said bonds under existing law shall remain valid until said bonds are finally liquidated.

It is well known by the Senate that the lien of the United States is subordinated to the lien for an equal amount which the companies were allowed to raise upon their own resources by the issuing of bonds. Now, this bill provides that at the maturity of these bonds, which occurs some two or three years prior to the year 1900, the time to which this funding system is to run, the companies, in case they desire and are able to fund these bonds into a longer bond, shall have the right to do so, and the same lien shall exist until the maturity and final liquidation of the new bonds as exists now under the present laws. In case the companies are able at the maturity of the first-mortgage bonds to fund them into new bonds, the amount in the sinking fund to be applied to the debt due the United States will be much larger; it will be equal to the amount of the par value of the bonds at maturity, which will be in round numbers about $27,000,000 for each company.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] claims that this theory of a funding bill is equal to a new subsidy to the companies. I do not see how he can establish such a proposition.

Mr. THURMAN. It is sponging out so much debt by mere computation.

Mr. CHAFFEE. It is true the companies are to receive compound interest until the year 1900. Then, if the companies succeed in funding their first-mortgage bonds, this accumulation will, of course, wipe out a larger proportion of the debt; but, if they do not succeed and the United States is compelled to pay those bonds out of the sinking fund, the companies propose and this bill proposes that the balance of the debt due the United States shall be paid off in equal semi-annual installments running fifty years, with interest upon all sums remaining unpaid, to be paid at the date of each installment. I cannot see any new subsidy in such a proposition.

This bill, as I said before, proposes that each of these companies shall pay a certain amount in round numbers, regardless of any half transportation or any 5 per cent. of net proceeds from the earnings of the road. I believe that that is a fair, plain, business-like view to take of the question. Let the companies pay a certain amount. If this is not enough, if the Senate shall think that $1,250,000 each is too small an amount, let us make it more, but let us make it a finality, an ending of this question, and not undertake to pass a law by which controversy will be extended through all time to come.

Mr. THURMAN. If it does not interrupt the Senator from Colorado, I should like to say a word right here on the question where the new subsidy is.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Very well.

Mr. THURMAN. If I understand the Senator from Colorado, he thinks there is no new subsidy in this business because the sinking fund at the maturity of the bonds may be applied to pay off the first-mortgage bonds. That is his idea.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. But let us see who is to pay them off.

Mr. CONKLING. Of which bill is the Senator speaking now?

Mr. THURMAN. The Railroad Committee's bill and the substitute of the Senator from Colorado. Let us see who is to pay them off. According to the Railroad Committee bill and according to the substitute of the Senator from Colorado, the Government is to take its own money—that is, the money which it is entitled to receive from these companies and which it is entitled to credit them with instantly each year, as it happens to be received, and which is only a credit for just that same amount—and the Government is to put that nominal sum into a sinking fund and compute interest on it at 6 per cent., compounded semi-annually, until the year 1900, the effect of which would be that the interest would be two and a half times more than the principal and the Government would stand debtor for that much money as belonging to the sinking fund; and, suppose it is paid off in discharge of the first-mortgage bonds, the amount of it is that the Government pays three and a half times as much as it receives.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The Senator says the Government pays its own money. It takes the money out of the sinking fund paid in by the companies.

Mr. THURMAN. But how is the sinking fund constituted according to the Senator's substitute?

Mr. CHAFFEE. It is constituted by requiring each of these two railroad companies to pay into the Treasury of the United States $1,250,000 annually.

Mr. THURMAN. And allowing them interest upon that at 6 per cent., compounded semi-annually.

Mr. CHAFFEE. It enables the companies to pay the bonds.

Mr. THURMAN. But of the $1,250,000 which you require each of them to pay annually, two-thirds, under the existing law, is money of the United States, belongs to the United States.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The Senator does not know that. That he anticipates; that he estimates. That is a question for the business of the future. He does not know how much the net profits of these roads will be for any year hereafter; neither can he tell how much the half transportation will be. He estimates that. He can judge from the past, of course; but does not the Senator know that the Indian question, from which the larger amount of transportation for the Government over these roads has been derived, is now settled, or nearly so, and the prospect is that other roads may be built across the continent which will take away a portion of the business of these roads? The Government, as the Senator from California suggests, will have the same right to transport over those new roads, and of course it will undoubtedly divide a portion of its business according to the section where the transportation is desired with the other roads.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator what is to be done with the bonds, on his theory, deposited as the representatives of the sinking fund?

Mr. CHAFFEE. There are no bonds deposited. The companies are to pay money.

Mr. CONKLING. So I thought until I heard the Senator from Ohio say that his remarks applied equally to either bill. I had the substitute of the Senator from Colorado yesterday, but somebody has carried it off so that I have not been able to read it to day. I was misled by the remark of the Senator from Ohio. I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that the proposal was to have bonds and the Government was to pay compound interest on those bonds, thus paying three and a half times the amount to be ultimately received back.

Mr. THURMAN. No; I only spoke about bonds in connection with paying off the first-mortgage bonds. I did not intend to say—if I did it was certainly a slip of the tongue, and I do not think I said it—that either the plan of the Railroad Committee or the plan of the Senator from Colorado contemplated any investment in bonds. It is mere book-keeping with both those plans.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, if I may be still indulged a moment in my dialogue with the Senator from Ohio, his objection, if I understand it, is that the payment of $1,250,000 a year into a sinking fund would be composed in part of moneys which he says belong to the Government at the time.

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. That is the extent of his criticism.

Mr. THURMAN. Under the existing law.

Mr. CONKLING. Well, the moneys belonging to the Government at the time, belong to it, I take it, in order to liquidate and satisfy the obligations of the companies toward the Government; do they not?

Mr. THURMAN. To be sure, and they are presently applicable.

Mr. CONKLING. Then does the Senator from Ohio see any objection in the statement he makes if the object of the possession or custody of or right to these moneys by the Government is ultimately to indemnify and save harmless the Government against possible loss on account of the companies, does the Senator see in that fact an objection to any arrangement which insures that consummation? Let me state it again. Suppose the Senator could see in the bill proposed by the Senator from Colorado a mode in which, at a specified future day, absolutely as far as human foresight can be absolute in its vision, the Government would be indemnified, would be paid, reimbursed entirely, would it be an objection in his mind that the modus operandi was such that certain custody, by way of a sinking fund, was ascribed to moneys which currently, as they accrue under existing law, belong not to the corporation but to the Government?

Mr. THURMAN. Why, the Senator does not understand me, and he does not understand the proposition.

Mr. CONKLING. I seem to myself not to understand the Senator. I presume I do not. I wish he would make me understand him.

Mr. THURMAN. I will, if the Senator will sit down.

Mr. CONKLING. I always sit down when the Senator from Ohio speaks.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope we are not interfering with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The Senator is not interfering at all. He can make so much better a speech than I can, that I would rather he should go on.

Mr. CONKLING. I feel the same way.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator from New York held my note for $10,000, and I should go to him and pay him a thousand dollars, which by the terms of the note he would be entitled to receive to-day, the rest of the note not being due for some time to come, and I should say to him "credit me, not with the thousand dollars that I have paid on this note, but put this thousand dollars into a sinking fund, make an entry on your books, and compound interest on it semi-annually at 6 per cent. for ten years" or twenty, as it is in this case, "and then credit me with the amount to become due," I might pay off my whole note with that thousand dollars. That is exactly what the proposition is.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that the Senator's mode of making me understand it?

Mr. THURMAN. I am trying to do it. If it is a defective mode, it is not for want of understanding in the Senator.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President—

Mr. MORRILL. I think, if the Senator from New York will permit me—

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator from Vermont would let me try a moment now. This has come to a point where I think there is a hope of my being able to do something with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, analogies are always dangerous. Illustrations have no value at all unless they are true. A caricature may sometimes bring out a likeness, but a caricature always distorts and destroys a legal argument proceeding by parallels. Why does the honorable Senator from Ohio, if he believes as I stated that my purpose is to inform myself on this point, mislead me, turn away and confuse the Senate, unless other Senators understand much more about this matter than I do, by displacing entirely the considerations involved, by changing the whole thing, and if he will take no offense at it I will say by distorting the whole proposition. He says that it is as if I hold his note and he comes to me when the note is due and says "I propose to pay you a thousand dollars when the thousand dollars is due, but in place of allowing you, as the law allows you, to do as you choose with the thousand dollars that I pay, I ask you now to allow me to make a sort of special deposit of it, which shall withhold from you the right to use this money, the right to place it and appropriate its earnings, but which shall make you the mere manual custodian of this money to earn interest for me, and when it has earned that interest then I ask you to apply that upon the note." Mr. President, the Senator need not have stated half that proposition to state one which would shock the sense of a child, and a young child at that. Why did he not take the case of an obligation not due, an obligation not to become due except in a far future?

Mr. THURMAN. Because there is no such case here. That is the reason.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator say that?

Mr. THURMAN. I do.

Mr. CONKLING. In spite of the decision of the court?

Mr. THURMAN. I say the decision of the court has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. CONKLING. Why has it nothing to do with the question?

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator hear me?

Mr. CONKLING. Always.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator says it is not due. Why, by the very terms of the charter 5 per cent. of the net earnings and the half-transportation account are due every year and are a present payment with which these companies are entitled to be credited. It is not, therefore, getting money in advance of our being entitled to it under the law. We do not get a dollar in advance of what we are entitled to under the law. But here is a contract which says just as much as if it were in so many words, let us estimate the half transportation and 5 per cent. of net earnings as in the case of the Union Pacific at $750,000 a year, and that will be about a fair estimate of the last six years—

Mr. CHAFFEE. Why does not the Senator from Ohio estimate it at a million?

Mr. THURMAN. I have not estimated it at a million, because I take what is most favorable to the company—the last six years. But let me go on.

Mr. CHAFFEE. It would be better for your argument if you estimated it at a million.

Mr. CONKLING. Do not be too stingy in helping yourself.

Mr. THURMAN. Now suppose that, instead of the sum being a mere matter to be found by experience, the charter had said "the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall pay every year $800,000, which shall be credited to it at the time it is paid upon its indebtedness to the Government of the United States;" that would have been in principle exactly what it now is. The only difference would be that there the sum would have been fixed and here it is ascertainable. Id certum est quod certum potest applies. The case in principle would be precisely the same. Each of these substitutes proposes that $800,000 (which by the charter is payable annually and which by the charter is to be annually credited to the company, simply the amount paid) shall, instead of being put to the credit of the company, be received by the Government, used by the Government, and disposed of as it pleases, but that the Government shall allow credit not simply for that sum, but shall make a book account for twenty years, and allow credit not only for the amount to which the company was entitled to credit, but also for twenty years' compound interest. If that is not a new subsidy, I do not know what is.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator wanders from the point which I was endeavoring to state. I asked him why he did not take the case of an obligation not due. In place of meeting that question he says that a certain portion of the obligation is due.

Mr. THURMAN. Well.

Mr. CONKLING. I deny that as he states it, although it is quite beside my purpose. I asked him why he did not take an immature obligation for his illustration. He said there was no such case here. What is due? The bonds? The debt? The whole debt which the Senator says he wants to secure to the United States? Is that due? No; that is not due, and that is what I am talking about; that is the correlative of the note in his supposed case.

But I have another objection to the Senator's answer. He says 5 per cent. of the net earnings is due. How does he know that? He has explained in several productions which the world will not willingly let die what he believes "net earnings" to be. Every court to whom it has been submitted differs with him. He has stated what he understands the obligation to be of amassing funds by withholding transportation compensation; and as far as I know every court that has passed upon the question differs with him. Therefore I deny that even that part which the Senator refers to of this obligation is due in any sense which entitles him to affirm it as something which we must accept and act upon.

Mr. President, nothing could have been further from my purpose than to be drawn at this moment, if at any moment, into a general discussion of this question. I shall not be drawn into any general discussion, particularly as I am intruding upon the Senator from Colorado. I will go back, however, to state what moved me when I rose. After hearing the distinguished Senator from Ohio, (and nobody will ever state more clearly than he has stated one side of these propositions,) I cannot understand, dismissing all question of constitutional power, disregarding all considerations of good faith, looking at the single question what is best in money interest, any reason why we should discard an arrangement because it contains something less injurious to the other contracting party than another might, provided it is certain in the end to work out the result. I cannot comprehend why that arrangement is not the best for the Government which is best for these corporations, provided it gives bond and assurance that the advance made by the Government for the building of these roads and the interest meanwhile shall be rendered back in the end to the utmost. Creditor or sovereign—discussion has been waged to ascertain which—what interest has the United States in inflicting needless injury upon these parties? If none, then if the Senator from Colorado has a scheme which I mean to understand better than I do—I repeat, I had his bill yesterday; I believe he gave it to me himself; and somebody wanted it more than I and carried it away and I have not been able to possess myself of another copy; I will try to understand it before the Senate meets again—if he has a scheme which indemnifies the Government in the end, and the only objection to it is that it does it by an arrangement less austere than some other, I am for that bill.

Now, Mr. President, while I am on my feet, if the Senator from Colorado will indulge me a moment in that connection, I beg to state two or three things. I will never vote knowingly as I would not vote if these parties were not corporations. That is one thing I will guard myself against. I will never inflict upon these artificial persons that which I would not insist upon against a natural person. Gold may be bought too dear; and we cannot afford to do that against a party unpopular, odious, and hateful to-day, which we would not be willing to abide by to-morrow in the case of the most cherished favorite of the Senate. I see that amuses the honorable Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. It does.

Mr. CONKLING. He says it amuses him. Mr. President, I am speaking of the fact that the law is no respecter of persons, that the law shall be the same, whether for the man who is clothed in purple and fine linen and fares sumptuously every day, or for the man who lives in a hut and has nobody to befriend him; and the honorable Senator from Ohio says he is amused at that!

Again, I will never give a vote knowingly, prompted or incited by the fact that these corporations have made money and have not lost money. I have heard over and over again statements here of the profits which they have earned, the dividend they have divided. Mr. President, on this question in this forum are we to measure or withhold from them any modicum of justice or results because in the venture and vicissitude of this great work the time has come when profits, and not losses, have fallen to them? I hope not. If not, then again I say that the fact that a particular proposition consists with the interest of these parties, in place of condemning, commends it, if it be one which indemnifies the Government and answers the purpose; and it will not do to treat this as in a supposed case like an obligation the whole of which is due, all of which we may demand, and speak of all terms as lenity and concession.

A moment ago I was looking at the report made by the Senator from Ohio, and one thing struck me to which I will call his attention before I sit down, because he had spoken of our right to this 5 per cent. of net earnings. This report recites in brief phrases what few of us have forgotten, that we sent these corporations by direction of statute to the judicial courts to ascertain whether the 95 per cent. of net earnings to which they were entitled meant 95 per cent. of gross earnings or 95 per cent. of net after all expenses were paid. That circumstance is alluded to. I do not discover here any allusion—perhaps it is here—to the fact that the court said (I do not mean the Supreme Court, but the other court, the court below) that the rail way companies were right and we were wrong upon that question.

Mr. THURMAN. What case does the Senator refer to?

Mr. CONKLING. In which the court said that?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. My impression is the Court of Claims said that.

Mr. THURMAN. Not a bit of it.

Mr. CONKLING. Did it not?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; it never did.

Mr. CONKLING. I will deduct, then, from what I was saying. I thought the court had recently given a broad intimation—

Mr. THURMAN. I know exactly what case the Senator refers to.

It is a mere pro forma decision of the circuit court in Iowa, and it shows on the record that it is pro forma.

Mr. CONKLING. But I drop that part of my statement. The Senator rises to make it still appear on the principle I suppose on which the English always fire a gun when the flag is down, to remind everybody of their victory. I drop that part of my statement and I come to this: the honorable Senator having alluded to that drops this little observation in this report:

As to the past we leave the question upon the law as it now stands to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case pending before it.

As to the past, upon this vital and essential matter of agreement he proposes to leave the court to determine this case which we ourselves sent there agreeing to abide the event, agreeing to it not only by the act but by the implication. As to the past he proposes to allow the court to render a decision; but as to the future, he proposes to make a new law to dispose of this very important question which he and the other constituents of the two Houses once agreed to submit not merely to arbitration but to the decision of the national courts, themselves the creatures of the Constitution and statutes of the United States.

Mr. President, for one I am willing to admit, in the presence of that proposition as there stated, that I will vote to enunciate such a doctrine and to petrify it into a law, if I ever do vote for it, when I have ascertained that milder means, not departing so far from the ancient ways, are insufficient to secure the Government what will ultimately be the Government's due; and certainly I will never vote for it in preference to any plan which is certain and to which no objection can be made other than objections of the kind alluded to by the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

Now, Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senator from Colorado for taking so much time. I see the danger of asking a question, and I am very sorry that I interrupted him so far.

Mr. THURMAN. I only want to say that when I can have the floor without interfering with the Senator from Colorado I will try and show the point so clearly that even the Senator from New York, who seems to know nothing at all on the subject, will be able to comprehend it.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Mr. President, if the proposition made by the Senator from Ohio is true, I am ready to admit that my bill and my theory of the sinking fund are absurd. He states substantially that this amount is now due the Government, and upon that theory my bill would be an absurdity, it would be a subsidy as he claims; but is that the fact? The Supreme Court has decided that the interest is not due until the principal is due; that both the bonds and the interest become due and payable at the maturity of the bonds.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to say that the Supreme Court has not decided any such thing? The Supreme Court has not decided as broadly as he states it.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Then I should like to ask the Senator why he proposes the same theory in his bill?

Mr. THURMAN. No, I do not.

Mr. CHAFFEE. He proposes a sinking fund to run at 5 per cent. until the maturity of the first-mortgage bonds.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator will hear me he will see that he is wrong. The Supreme Court have only decided this, that except so far as the 5 per cent. of net earnings and the half-transportation account (which are applicable annually) extinguish the interest, there is no obligation to pay the interest until the end of the maturity of the bonds.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The 5 per cent. of the net earnings and the half-transportation account are not only to apply to the interest but to apply to the bonds.

Mr. THURMAN. If sufficient.

Mr. CHAFFEE. They apply to the bonds equally with the interest. The law says so.

Mr. THURMAN. But how much is applicable, I ask the Senator?

Mr. CHAFFEE. Is it applicable whenever it is paid, annually?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly; annually.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I am willing to admit that the half-transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings are to be paid annually into the Treasury of the United States. By the substitute which I propose the payment required of each company of $1,250,000 annually is in lieu of those payments which they are now required to make. But upon the 1st day of October in the year 1900 a balance is made, and whatever remains due the United States, after taking therefrom the amount accumulated in this sinking fund, is to be paid, dollar for dollar, and interest upon every dollar, which is equivalent to the payment of the whole debt in the year 1900; because the United States may as well receive the bonds from this company or receive the payment of interest equal to the interest that the United States has to pay upon its debt, as you have the money paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, if there is to be any ending of this Pacific Railroad question, if the suits that are pending in the courts and which have been pending from the time the road was completed, and which will be pending, in my judgment, if the theory is adopted of the Senator from Ohio, until the maturity and final payment of the bonds—if these suits are to be ended, why not say pay so much into the Treasury of the United States in lieu of all other debts? Let us end this vexed question of what are the net earnings of the roads.

I see no objection to the substitute which I propose. I see nothing wrong in principle in it. The Senator may say that the amount required by the Government from these companies annually is not large enough, but I can see no reason why he should condemn the theory of the measure, because it is based upon the same theory as his own bill, except that in his bill the 5 per cent. of the net earnings and the half transportation are paid annually into the Treasury of the United States.

Section 4 of my bill is substantially a section from the bill of the Senator from Ohio providing for the security of all creditors who have priority to the Government of the United States.

Section 5 provides that the companies shall not in any manner be released from their present liabilities to keep the railroads and telegraph lines, constructed under the acts of Congress, in repair and use. It is substantially the same as the provision of the bill of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHAFFEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Does the Senator's bill contemplate that the payment of one-half the transportation and 5 per cent. of the net earnings shall be made into the Treasury of the United States annually as a payment without reference to drawing interest in a sinking fund?

Mr. CHAFFEE. The bill that I introduce provides that the half-transportation account shall be paid to the companies and that the payments required of the companies shall be in lieu of all other payments, as the Senator will see by reading the second section.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If the Senator will look at it a moment he will see that there is very little difference between his bill and the bill proposed by the Railroad Committee. Suppose the Government of the United States has no claim upon either of these railroad companies for its issue of bonds; in other words, suppose that the issue of bonds were a gift to the company by the Government of the United States, and the company agreed for a period of years to pay to the Government 5 per cent. of its net earnings and one-half of its transportation. Then to determine what that is worth to the Government, the Government would simply have to take that money as it is paid in annually and invest it in its own securities, to simply open an account with an equal number of securities and find what the Government would have to pay, principal and interest, at the end of twenty years for just exactly that amount of money paid in, in principal and interest. This one-half of the transportation account and 5 per cent. of the net earnings is certainly due the Government each year. That certainly should be paid to the Government and there should be no interest allowed upon that to the parties paying it in. If anybody is to gain interest upon that the Government of the United States should gain the interest by investing it in its own interest-bearing securities.

Mr. CHAFFEE. It is a question for the Senate to decide which is the better way to arrange this matter. I say the better way is to receive so much money from the companies in lieu of all other payments.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I am trying to get as a starting point at the obligation which the companies owe to the United States. They are to pay to the United States every year 5 per cent. of their net earnings and one-half of the transportation account, without reference to any other indebtedness, without reference to the bonded indebtedness at all.

Mr. CHAFFEE. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If the Senator will allow me, that amount certainly belongs to the Government of the United States and no interest should be allowed to the companies for that sum. That money is to be used by the Government for just what it pleases, for its current expenses or for the liquidation of its own indebtedness. When the Government liquidates its own indebtedness it applies its interest-paying securities; and that certainly should form no part of the fund on which the companies are drawing interest. There is no mode of reasoning by which that can be claimed, that I can see.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I do not dispute the position taken by the Senator from Rhode Island. One-half the transportation due these companies from the United States is to be retained by the United States, also 5 per cent. of the next earnings of the companies, under existing law. The proposition by my bill is to receive a certain amount annually until the year 1900 in lieu of these payments, which shall be put into the sinking fund and compounded, as proposed by the Senator from Ohio. [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator a question. This money is due the Government of the United States in payment. The Government does not want anything in lieu of it; it wants the payment. The Senator proposes to settle the question by putting in more money and establishing something like a sinking fund and having an equitable arrangement made.

Mr. CHAFFEE. That is exactly my bill. If the Senator will look at the bill he will see that is exactly what the bill proposes. In lieu of these payments, each company is required to pay a much larger sum than the half-transportation account and 5 per cent. of the net earnings.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The companies are to pay in a much larger sum and the companies are to be allowed interest on that sum all the time.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Certainly.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Why should they receive interest? They should not receive interest on that part of the amount paid in which would be equal to 5 per cent. of the net earnings and one-half the transportation, because that is to be paid in any event. That much is due to the Government of the United States from the companies. The Senator seems to lose sight of the fact that, notwithstanding the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the bonded indebtedness is not due until a certain period, twenty years or more hence, there is still due to the Government of the United States from the companies a certain amount every year. That amount should be counted as due the Government and it should be paid to the Government. It should form no part of any sinking fund and should not be taken into contemplation in making a sinking fund.

Mr. CHAFFEE. It is simply a question for the judgment of every Senator whether it is better for the Government to retain its present position and receive the half transportation and this 5 per cent. or whether it is better to receive a certain amount, as proposed by my amendment. For my part I believe that it would be better to settle all these questions and receive a stipulated sum per annum.

Section 11 of the bill which I propose as a substitute provides:

That upon the faithful compliance with, and performance of, all the requirements of this act relative to said sinking fund by said companies, or either of them, this act shall be deemed and taken as a final settlement between said companies, or either of them so complying, and the United States as regards the payment of said bonds and interest; in case of failure or neglect by either of said companies to perform all and singular the requirements of this act in regard to said payments as hereinbefore mentioned for the period of six months next after such performance may be due, such failure shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights, privileges, grants, and franchises derived or obtained by it from the United States; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to cause such forfeiture to be judicially enforced.

It will be observed that the provision in the bill of the Senator from Ohio leaves the question open, so that if the companies or either of them conform strictly to all the provisions of his bill any Congress hereafter may step in and increase that amount. It is no settlement; it is no ending of this matter.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Colorado if he has entered into any computation as to what the result would be? That is to say, has he entered into any computation to show whether the Government would not lose more by receiving, say, $1,200,000 annually, in a lump sum, and giving interest, compounded semi-annually upon it, than it would to retain the average amount that we have received for the transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings? I think if he has done it he will have ascertained that the Government would give away more in allowing semi-annual compound interest upon the 5 per cent. of net earnings and the half of the transportation than the whole sum that he proposes to add to the transportation account.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I have made no computation of the kind. I claim that the Government loses nothing, because this sum is paid into the sinking fund before the amount required is due, with the exception, however, of the compounding of the interest upon the amount of half transportation and 5 per cent. of the net earnings, which I admit that the Government would lose. But the Government can invest this money. It can invest it in Union Pacific Railroad bonds and accumulate interest on them at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. It loses nothing, except upon the half transportation and the 5 per cent. now due the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; but my point is that we lose more on that than what we gain by the additional sum proposed to be added.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I have made no computation of the kind, nor do I conceive that that result would be possible.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator will find that it is possible if he makes the computation.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Nor do I conceive it possible for any Senator to say exactly what the half-transportation account or the 5 per cent. of net earnings would be. It is merely a conjecture.

Section 12 provides:

That nothing in this act shall be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress at any time hereafter to further alter, amend, or repeal the said acts hereinbefore mentioned or this act, except as provided in the preceding section.

That is to say, if the companies comply with the provision in regard to the sinking fund, and pay in regularly every six months $625,000 each, that is to be a final settlement as far as the funding bill is concerned, and it ought to be. I cannot conceive upon any principle of justice how any Senator could support or advocate any other proposition. If the companies comply with all the requirements why should it not be a final settlement of the question. If they do not comply, the substitute which I propose provides that it shall operate as a forfeiture of their franchises. The penalty is severe.

Such, Mr. President, are the provisions and purposes of this bill, which I offer as a substitute for the two funding bills recently reported—the one from the Judiciary Committee and the other from the Railroad Committee—and which I now urge upon the favorable consideration of the Senate. I believe it is a fair, honest, business-like measure, one that is perfectly plain and easy to understand, and one that can be complied with by all the companies without misunderstandings involving the Government and the companies in endless suits and controversies. The scheme of this great transcontinental railroad system, binding together all parts of our common country in the bonds of social and commercial union, was, as I have said, a grand one and worthy the statesmen who conceived it. But the history of the frauds connected with its construction and the wrongs practiced upon the public in its operation have shocked the moral sense of our own people and caused the finger of scorn to be pointed at us as a nation. It is high time that the power of this Government was employed to compel all these companies to respect and faithfully carry out all the obligations incurred by them to the public and the Government. Let there now be a final ending of this question on the principles of justice to all concerned, and let the executive power of the Government be invoked to maintain the majesty of the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.]

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I would ask the Senate to sit this measure out to-day, but I have been appealed to by Senators who say that they wish to speak and cannot speak to-day with any convenience to themselves or any justice to the Senate. I have no disposition certainly to insist upon any course that would cut Senators off in the expression of their opinions upon this measure; but I must renew the expression of the hope that to-morrow we shall sit the bill out.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. I want some information before voting on his bill. I desire to ask him if there is any legal impediment to our requiring these railroad companies to pay in full the interest semi-annually paid by the United States hereafter upon the bonds issued to the companies?

Mr. THURMAN. There is a certain amount which is payable under the existing law and applicable to reimbursing the United States that interest. Undoubtedly, in my judgment, it would be competent for us to say that they shall pay annually such an additional sum as, with the half-transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings now applicable under the existing law, would make the amount of interest which the Government annually pays on the Government loan. The object of the Judiciary Committee bill is to require that and something more.

Mr. WHYTE. So I understand.

Mr. THURMAN. The object is to require that and also to require on an average of the last four year's business of the companies a payment of what would amount, if my recollection is right at this moment, (I have not my figures before me,) to something like $300,000 or $350,000 a year.

Mr. WHYTE. Three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. THURMAN. This is to be required from each of the companies toward the principal. A very small sum it may seem, and yet it amounts to a good deal in the end with the compounded interest upon it.

Mr. WHYTE. That is just my difficulty. I am rather opposed to this sinking-fund theory, and I supposed there was no impediment to requiring the companies to pay, in addition to the 5 per cent. and the half-transportation account, a sum which would be equal to the whole interest paid semi-annually by the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. And apply it now to payment?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly, apply it now.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg to call the Senator's attention to what in my judgment, and in his I think, as a lawyer, is an insuperable obstacle to that proposition. So far as the 5 per cent. of net earnings and the half-transportation account, which under existing law are applicable annually, to use the very language of the act, to reimburse the Government the interest which it pays are concerned, there is no difficulty whatsoever; but to take a further sum and apply that presently to the payment of the interest of the debt due to the Government, would be to make the bill obnoxious to the charge that we are requiring money from these companies before it is due.

Mr. BLAINE. Why cannot Congress alter the law in that respect?

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator mean that we shall alter the law and make the whole debt payable now?

Mr. BLAINE. Under the Senator's theory, where is the particular point at which the Senator from Ohio stops in his volition to alter the law? That is what I want to be instructed upon.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator needs instruction it is because he has not listened to me or anybody else who has spoken in favor of the bill of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BLAINE. I have listened with a great deal of interest.

Mr. THURMAN. If we had the power, I for one would not be willing to exercise it; but we have never asserted the power to make that which is payable thirty years hence, or now twenty years hence, payable to day. We have never asserted any such power yet, and I do not think we ever shall.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask a question of the Senator?

Mr. THURMAN. I want to answer the Senator from Maryland, and I hope the Senator from New York will wait until I get through with that.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator, I know, is so competent to answer that he will not object.

Mr. THURMAN. I know the Senator from New York has a way of making speeches in the middle of other peoples' speeches. I think I am the best tempered man in the world, and I am always willing to allow him to inject one of his speeches into mine, because it ornaments it very much; it gives it a beautiful halo.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator cannot wonder that I wish to associate my name with his speech whenever he makes one, and then he should not refuse me. I was going to ask him this question, if he will allow me—

Mr. THURMAN. I believe I will not allow the Senator just now. Just sit down. I will allow him when I get through answering the Senator from Maryland.

There is still another reason why the Judiciary Committee bill is framed as it is. The Judiciary Committee bill does not take one dollar from the companies and apply it to the debt due to the Government or to other creditors which, under existing law, is not so applicable. The sinking fund is composed entirely of money which is not, under existing law, applicable to the payment of the Government claim. That being the case, that sinking fund, as my friend from Maryland, who is so good a lawyer, well knows, ought to be held sacred for the security of the claims against the companies in the order of their priority, so that the fund may be ultimately distributed, precisely as a chancellor marshals the assets of a corporation or of an individual and divides them among the creditors. That is the theory of our bill. Two sums, the half-transportation account, which under existing law is to be paid to the companies and not to be retained by the United States, and an additional sum in money, constitute the sinking fund under the Judiciary Committee bill, and that with its accumulations is to be ultimately distributed among the creditors of the companies, the United States included, exactly as a chancellor would distribute them according to the legal and equitable priority of the creditors.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Before the Senator sits down I should like to ask him one question. Does he mean to apply this sinking fund to the junior creditors?

Mr. THURMAN. I will tell the Senator if these companies should be so honest as to pay off their first creditors so that they would have no claim on the sinking fund, and if they should be so honest as to pay off the Government of the United States so that it would have no claim, then this sinking fund would cover the very next lien-holder and be paid to him, and so on to the end of the chapter.

Mr. CHAFFEE. But is it not pro rata in the Senator's bill?

Mr. THURMAN. If there is enough to pay off the whole of one class of lien-holders who have priority, the sinking fund must be applied to pay them all. If it is not enough to pay off all of them, then it must be applied pro rata; in other words, you are to use it just as a chancellor would.

Mr. WHYTE. I would ask the Senator from Ohio, as he speaks about our not applying this money immediately to the payment of the debt, whether or not he has any doubt that when these bonds were originally ordered by Congress to be delivered to these companies, Congress expected the interest to be paid as it matured; and whether it was not because of an omission in the law that that was not decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to be the true construction of the agreement between the parties?

Mr. THURMAN. I am glad my friend from Maryland asked me that question.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President—

Mr. THURMAN. I can only answer one question at a time.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg pardon.

Mr. THURMAN. And I cannot answer that as long as everybody else is talking. The Senator asks me whether I do not believe that when the act of 1862 and the act of 1864 were passed Congress expected that the companies would reimburse annually the Government outlay by a payment in discharging the interest on the subsidy bonds. Now I cannot answer that question except by the law. I know of no other way of getting at it.

Mr. SARGENT. We can change the law, you say.

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, that is the very point. I did not ask for a judicial opinion. The Supreme Court gave us that. I ask for a legislative opinion, whether we as legislators can now change this law to conform to the original intention of the Government.

Mr. THURMAN. If I were to undertake that, how would I get at it? I cannot issue subpoenas and call up all those who voted for the bill and make them testify what was their opinion, what was their intent, what they expected. A great many of them have gone to

The undiscovered country, from whose bourn
No traveler returns,

and among them some of the most prominent who were engaged in this business. I cannot do that. If I turn to the debates I am in inextricable confusion, for I find that there was one at least, and I do not know but more than one, in the House of Representatives among those who voted for this bill and for this subsidy who said they never expected the Government to get a dollar of it back; that they never expected to get a dollar of either principal or interest back; that it was all a sham and a humbug; that the Government could well afford to give all that money and more to have the building of the road, and that as for themselves they never expected a dollar of it to be paid back. I do not attach any importance to that. I do not believe, because one or two members may have said such was the intention, that it shows what was the intention of the House of Representatives. The intention of the House of Representatives is conclusively proved, the intention of Congress is conclusively established, by what Congress enacted into law. If Congress did not intend that this money was to be repaid to the Government there would have been no enactment for its repayment. If Congress did intend that the interest should be repaid annually to the Government or that the companies should themselves pay the interest on the subsidy bonds without any intervention on the part of the Government, the legal presumption is that Congress would have said so. Not having said so, I am obliged to take the law upon its face, and, taking it upon its face, I am obliged to say that Congress did not intend that the money should be paid any faster than Congress in the act has declared.

Mr. JOHNSTON and Mr. BLAINE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BLAINE. I simply wish to ask a question of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I only desire to take the floor on this bill for tomorrow.

Mr. BLAINE. I will yield in a moment. If the Senator from Virginia will allow me, I want to ask the Senator from Ohio a question to solve an honest doubt which came into my mind and which was suggested by a question of the Senator from Maryland. The Senator from Ohio some years ago, in 1871, took the ground that half of the Government transportation was undoubtedly payable to the railway companies. Two years later he took the ground that it would be well and wise to submit that question to the Supreme Court.

Mr. THURMAN. I took that ground from the very first.

Mr. BLAINE. Well, the Senator voted in 1871 to make it payable, and in 1873 the question came up and then he voted to let them have it decided in the courts.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know whether I voted for that at all. I do not remember whether I was in the Senate when the act of 1873 was passed.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator spoke in favor of it anyway.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think I said a word about it. I was always in favor of the court deciding it.

Mr. BLAINE. That does not make the point. I think, however, the Senator did so vote. The court then decided that the half transportation was undoubtedly payable to the companies.

Mr. THURMAN. As the law then stood.

Mr. BLAINE. As the law then stood. The court has also decided that as the law now stands the interest is not payable until the bonds mature.

Mr. THURMAN. Oh! no; the half transportation and the 5 per cent.

Mr. BLAINE. They have so decided, I say. Now the Senator comes in with a bill declaring that the half transportation which the court decided was payable to the companies shall not be paid to the companies under the prior law. Then by the same power why not say that the interest which the court decided is not payable until 1900 shall be payable presently? Do I understand the Senator to say we can do that?

Mr. THURMAN. When the Senator gets through I will answer him.

Mr. BLAINE. I will take the answer now.

Mr. THURMAN. I say that, under the reserved power to alter, amend, or repeal, we can say that that half transportation which by the act of 1864 is to be paid to the companies shall be paid into a sinking fund instead of being paid directly over to the companies. We do not in that way advance the debt of the companies to the Government one day or one minute. We simply provide that in regard to a certain sum, this half transportation, instead of the Government paying it to the companies and then requiring them to pay it back in a gross sum, which would be absurd, the Government shall retain that half transportation account and turn it into a sinking fund and the company shall pay so much additional; that is all.

Well, now, let us see in regard to this half transportation. How comes the provision that the half transportation should be paid to the companies? It was not in the original act. By the original act the whole transportation account was to go to the credit of the companies annually, and the Government to get the benefit of it annually, to reimburse its annual payments of interest; and if there was anything over it was to go to the principal of the bonds. That is the act of 1862; but the act of 1864 relinquished our right to apply the whole of the transportation account to the payment of the interest as we paid it, and said that we would only apply one-half, and the other half we would pay over to the companies. That is in the act of 1864, and that act contains words which are as broad as the English language will admit that Congress shall have the power to add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act; and those who have undertaken to restrict it have only undertaken to restrict it to the act of 1864, and have said that that broad power of amendment or repeal only applied to that act. If that were so the provision that the half-transportation account shall be paid over to the companies annually instead of being paid to the Government, as it formerly was, is in this very act of 1864, which the Government has thus reserved the right, without limitation, to alter, add to, amend, or repeal.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator still travels over a great deal of ground not covered by my question. Where does the Senator limit that power?

Mr. THURMAN. The power of alteration, amendment, or repeal? Well, Mr. President, I must be a very uninteresting speaker to speak on this question so often and not make myself understood on that point.

Mr. BLAINE. Why can you not by parity of reasoning—
 Mr. THURMAN. If any one will give me the report of the Committee on the Judiciary on this bill, I will answer the question.
 Mr. BLAINE. I have read that report.
 Mr. THURMAN. I want to answer it in the language of the Supreme Court of the United States.
 Mr. BLAINE. I thought the Supreme Court of the United States was only deciding the law as it then was.
 Mr. THURMAN. The question which the Senator asks me is really what is the effect of a reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. BLAINE. That is not my question.
 Mr. THURMAN. What is it?
 Mr. BLAINE. The Senator entertains no doubt whatever in setting aside the decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the half transportation and with regard to annual income.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not set aside the decision.
 Mr. BLAINE. Instead of paying, you retain the half transportation.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not set aside the decision at all.
 Mr. BLAINE. You refuse to pay that which the court say is payable.

Mr. THURMAN. There is not one word in the decision of the Supreme Court that touches the question of the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. BLAINE. No; but did not the Supreme Court say the half transportation should be paid to the companies?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes.
 Mr. BLAINE. This act says it shall not be paid to the companies, but it shall be retained.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us see how that matter is. If this bill said that the half-transportation account that has heretofore accrued before the decision made by the Supreme Court should, contrary to that decision, be seized upon, there might be some foundation for the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not speaking on that.
 Mr. THURMAN. But there is not a word in the decision of the Supreme Court that conflicts with this bill of the Judiciary Committee, not one word in it which militates against the idea that Congress may by an alteration of the law require that that half transportation shall be paid.

Mr. BLAINE. Still the Senator does not come to the point. Why is it not in the power of Congress to make, as the Senator from Maryland asks, the interest, which is decided not to be due until 1900, payable presently, if Congress so chooses?

Mr. THURMAN. If I cannot get the Senator from Maine—
 Mr. BLAINE. The Senator has not got to the point. He has said a great deal about things which I did not ask for, but he has not answered what I did ask.

Mr. THURMAN. State it again, and I will try to answer.
 Mr. BLAINE. The Senator asserts the power to be absolutely unlimited to alter, amend, or repeal these acts. The Supreme Court having decided that the interest due under the act of 1864 is not payable until the maturity of the bonds, what, under the Senator's theory, hinders Congress from declaring that from this day forward it shall be paid presently when it falls due, and not wait until the maturity of the mortgage?

Mr. THURMAN. Now, if the Senator will take his seat—
 Mr. BLAINE. I can listen standing.
 Mr. THURMAN. Very well. I answered that question a while ago perfectly well. I said then that nobody had asserted the power to make a debt which was not due until twenty years hence, due to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator—
 Mr. THURMAN. Let me proceed, because I wish to answer the question. But I said further that if we had the power, nobody was disposed to assert it. That is exactly what I said before, and that the requisition to put so much money into a sinking fund is no assertion of any such power at all. It does not advance the payment of the debt which is due to the United States one day.

And now I wish to say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Maine, and in answer to a world of words that have been uttered in this debate, that I am not going to set up men of straw to knock down, nor am I going to answer arguments against men of straw that have been set up in order to be knocked down by those who set them up. I am not going to trouble the Senate with much question about how far the power of amendment, alteration, or repeal goes. Whether it goes to impairing the obligation of a contract or not, it is sufficient for me that there is not one word in this bill that impairs the obligation of any contract, and that all talk about impairing the obligation of contracts from the beginning of this debate to the end of it has been as foreign to the bill as would be a discussion of where is the North Pole or of the transit of Venus.

Mr. EATON. You are entirely wrong on that, and I can show it.
 Mr. THURMAN. If my friend will interrupt me in a senatorial way by rising and stating his position, very well. I have certainly a very different opinion from him. He asserts his and I assert mine. Whenever he or anybody else shall show me that this bill is the thousandth part of a hair the violation or impairment of a contract, then I will try to show authorities to do it, but I will not argue a question which is not before the Senate.

As to the power of amendment, alteration, or repeal which it is sought to fritter away and make nothing, this power, so important that it has been put by constitutional enactment into the constitutions of three-fourths of the States for the very purpose of giving the Legislature control over these creations, so that the Government should be their master, and not they the masters of the Government, this power that has been of so much importance that it has been struggled for for thirty years, and put into every new constitution that has been formed within that time, is now frittered away to nothing, made absolutely useless, made a mere abuse of words and terms, made to be nothing but the right to alter, amend, or repeal for the benefit of the corporations, instead of to retain control over them. When the time comes I may have something to say upon the extent and proper effect of that power. I, however, for the present need only stand on the truest, most concise, and most comprehensive definition of that power that has ever yet been spoken by man, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Tomlinson. Gentlemen seem to be horrified about the idea of a violation of contract, as if it was any violation of a contract, forsooth, for the Legislature to alter or amend a charter when it had reserved the right to alter or amend it. My friend from Georgia the other day said, "Why, you cannot reserve a right to alter or amend a contract," as I understood him, because—

Mr. HILL. I never said you could not reserve the right to alter or amend the charter of a corporation or the right to regulate and control the exercise of its franchises and privileges; but I did say that the contract of loan was not a franchise and was not included in those grants to corporations.

Mr. THURMAN. I have heard my friend explain it at least a dozen times.

Mr. HILL. You do not seem to understand it, notwithstanding.
 Mr. THURMAN. Just let us see how that is. Why can you not do it in regard to the loan? I agree that you cannot do it in regard to the loan—

Mr. HILL. Very well.
 Mr. THURMAN. Or at least it is doubtful whether you can do it in regard to the loan; but upon what ground does the Senator put it? That the loan is a contract? Is not that it? And he says that Congress has no original power to impair the obligation of a contract; ergo, Congress cannot get by a reservation in a charter a power it does not originally possess—I think I state the Senator's argument fairly—that Congress has no original power to impair the obligation of a contract and it cannot obtain by a reservation in a charter or any law that it may pass a right to do that which it has not original constitutional power to do.

Mr. HILL. Now, if my friend will bear with me, I have endeavored to explain the distinction between a grant, a voluntary grant by a grantor, and a contract for a consideration. The charter is granted by the Government as a prerogative power, freely granted, of favor. It has no consideration but the public good. In the charter there is a grantor and a grantee. In the contract of loan the consideration is different, in this: in a charter there is no valuable consideration passing from the grantee to the grantor, but in a loan there is a valuable consideration, and it rests wholly on a different footing. I showed that under the English law and the American law a voluntary grantor, even a private voluntary conveyancer, can convey with any condition he pleases, can reserve any right he pleases; and it is proper that the legislative power, which is exercising simply the prerogative of granting corporate franchises, should reserve the power to control them and secure the end for which they were intended; that is, the public good; but a contract of loan is not a grant; it is an agreement. It is not a grant for favor; it is not a grant for the public good; it is an agreement for a valuable consideration.

That is what I say, and I say further that when the Government made a contract with this corporation to lend it money, and the obligation of the company was to repay that money, and the consideration was a money consideration, that stands upon a wholly different footing. One is a grant by the sovereign power, and the other is an agreement for value. Every grant, it is true, is in one sense a contract; but every contract is not a grant; and there is the difference. I challenge the gentleman to show any case on earth where it was ever held that this reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal, was ever applied to anything but a franchise, and that upon the distinct ground that that is a grant and not an agreement. It is a contract in one sense, it is true, but not a contract in the sense that it is for a valuable consideration. An agreement must have the assent of both parties, and the terms are agreed to by both parties, and the obligation is to repay.

The Senator refers to the Constitution and the statutes. I say here, and I challenge him to show to the contrary, that every constitution and every statute, general or special, in which this power to alter, amend, or repeal is reserved, relates solely to a corporation and to the franchises proper of a corporation, and he cannot show a case on record where there was ever a power reserved to alter or amend a contract founded in a valuable consideration for the loan of money; and that is the distinction.

Now, sir, having disposed of that question, I want to put one more to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BLAINE. One moment. My question is all lost sight of. [Laughter.] The Senator from Ohio did not answer it. He went off into a long argument and did not touch it, and that provokes another argument from the Senator from Georgia who does not touch it. The Senator from Ohio simply says I am erecting a man of straw and he does not propose to fight him. That is a very convenient way of avoiding to answer a question which it is not entirely agreeable to answer. But still the Senator from Ohio has not answered, I think, to the satisfaction of the Senate, I trust it may be to his own satisfaction, at what point under his construction the power to alter, amend, or repeal stops. It ceases when you strike the point of making the interest payable now that the Supreme Court has decided is payable twenty years to come.

Mr. THURMAN. I will not argue hypothetical cases. As I have told the Senator, life is too short for that. The Senator has many more long years of usefulness than I have. Life is too short for me to stand up here as if we were in one of those schools of dialectics in the middle centuries to answer all questions, challenge all comers to put any question and answer it. I am no Admirable Crichton to stand up and be catechised in that way, but a plain, practical man who does his duty sufficiently when he defends a measure he reports to the Senate and leaves other measures and questions to wait their coming up.

Now, Mr. President, I could put a question, too, but I do not want to interrupt what I have got started on very unexpectedly, for I did not expect to say a word on this subject to-night and should not but for this scattering fire. When the time comes—I do not ask him to do it now—I want the Senator from Maine to answer this question: whether he denies the right of Congress to compel these companies to provide a sinking fund. I will give him until to-morrow to think over that.

Now, Mr. President, one word to my friend from Georgia. The point started by the Senator from Georgia must be an exceedingly favorite thing with him, because he has presented it to the Senate I think at least six or eight times.

Mr. HILL. Still you will not get it right.

Mr. THURMAN. Whenever you try to state it right the Senator overwhelms you with words, with distinctions, and the like. I stated this proposition and I appeal to the whole Senate if I did not state it fairly. The Senator said you cannot reserve a right to alter, amend, or repeal a contract; that reservation is good for nothing because you cannot obtain, by reserving, that which you do not possess under the Constitution. To use his own language, you must have that as an original power; that is, a power under the Constitution, or you cannot possess it at all; and to use an illustration, a reservation of that power would be of no more value than would be a reservation of a power to take private property for public use without just compensation or a reservation of power that Congress might commit murder. That is the Senator's argument. The answer to it is complete in this: that where that reservation exists in a charter it is a part of the contract itself, and you never do impair the obligation of the contract by exercising that power. It is not, therefore, a reservation of a power to impair a contract; it is a reservation of a power which prevents your law from being the impairment of a contract. That is a complete answer. If the Senator's argument were true you could not amend the franchise, you could not alter the franchise. Is not a grant of corporate franchise, when accepted by the corporations, a contract? Was not that the very foundation of the Dartmouth College case? Has not every decision since been to the same effect? Must not a charter be accepted before it becomes effectual, and when it is accepted is it not a contract, ay, a contract in regard to every franchise in it? For instance, take these very charters; what authorizes these chartered companies to take tolls? The right to take tolls is a royal prerogative. It is granted to these companies.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senator—

Mr. THURMAN. No; let me proceed; I do not wish to be interrupted now. The right to take tolls is a franchise; it is granted, and the charter is accepted. That is a contract that they shall take the tolls; and if there is no reservation of the power to alter that either in the Constitution of the country or in the charter itself and it is a State charter, you cannot take that away from them, because that would impair the obligation of the contract. You cannot lessen the tolls, you cannot reduce the tolls, if it is in the charter and comes within the provision of the Constitution of the United States where there is no reserved right to alter, amend, or repeal, and nothing in the constitution or laws of the State which gives the right to alter and amend the law. That right to take tolls is a part of the contract; you cannot touch it. But does anybody deny, can anybody deny that where the right to alter, amend, or repeal exists, then the Legislature may reduce the amount of tolls which the company otherwise would be entitled to take?

The Supreme Court has decided it at this very session, since we have been talking on this bill, in a case from my own State where the Legislature of the State, under its right to alter, amend, or repeal, reduced the tolls that a railroad company might take more than one-third. Now if the Senator goes upon the theory that Congress has no power to alter or amend the contract whatsoever, and therefore that to reserve that right is perfectly ineffectual, then he must go the whole length and say you cannot touch one single one of the franchises of this corporation. A complete answer to him, as I said before, is that there is no impairment of the contract, that the power reserved prevents there being any impairment of the contract at all.

I hardly think it necessary to go further, though while I am on this subject I may as well say a word more, as I shall not refer to it again, as the Senate seems to be in a good humor although it is nearly dinner-time. I will say a word upon the idea of the Senator from Georgia that there was some third party intervening here which made this loan somewhat different from the other charter privileges. I submit that the contract of loan is in the charter and in the acceptance by the companies. If I were to agree to a written contract with my friend from Georgia—

Mr. HILL. Do you hold that the contract of loan is one of the franchises granted by the act?

Mr. THURMAN. Never mind whether it is a franchise or not; I say that is a part of the contract. If my friend from Georgia and I were to sit down and write out a contract and both sign it, and by that contract I should agree that if he would build a house within thirty days and my agent, Senator EATON, should say that it was built according to the terms of the contract, then and in that case EATON, as my attorney in fact should deliver to him my negotiable note for a thousand dollars in payment for that house, payable at ninety days, or ninety years, I do not care which, I should say that the contract rested in the paper that he and I had signed and not at all in anything that EATON did in the business; and I should say here that when the United States said to these companies, "If you will build so much road we will lend you so much money, and our servant, the Secretary of the Treasury, shall issue our bonds for the money," and when the company accepted that charter, it had a contract-right to those bonds if it performed the conditions—that is, if it built the road; and I should say that when it built so much of the road as entitled it to a certain amount of the bonds it was the duty of the President of the United States to ascertain the fact, and it is to be presumed he would do it honestly, and having ascertained the fact then it was a positive duty—not a discretionary duty but a positive duty—to issue the bonds of the Government, and I should say that all that grew out of the contract the Government had made, that it would issue the bonds if the conditions were performed.

Mr. President, now to come to what I said I would quote, the language of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this subject.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me? I do not want to overwhelm him with words—

Mr. THURMAN. No; I just wish to say this and I will sit down, and then the Senator may take all night if he chooses, and I should be very glad to sit this bill out to-night if I could. Your committee say:

What, then, is the power thus reserved, that is to say, the general power to alter amend, or repeal the charter?

It was defined by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Tomlinson vs. Jessup, (15 Wallace, 458.)

And now I pray the attention of the Senate to this language of the Supreme Court:

The power reserved to the State by the law of 1841 authorized any change in the contract as it originally existed—

That is, any change in the charter, for in that case the charter was the contract—or as subsequently modified.

Which is an answer to what the Senator from Georgia said the other day that when we passed the act of 1871 that exhausted the power of amendment. The Supreme Court did not think so:

The power reserved to the State by the law of 1841 authorized any change in the contract as it originally existed, or as subsequently modified, or its entire revocation. The original corporations or subsequent stockholders took their interests with knowledge of the existence of this power and of the possibility of its exercise at any time in the discretion of the Legislature.

And this puts it all upon the true ground and the only true ground which makes that reservation worth the paper on which it is printed or written. Now, further:

The object of the reservation, and of similar reservations in other charters, is to prevent a grant of corporate rights and privileges in a form which will preclude legislative interference with their exercise if the public interest should at any time require such interference.

I stop there to say out of my own mouth that the Legislature is the judge of the occasion, and that no court can review its decision as to whether the public interest requires it or not. The court go on:

It is a provision intended to preserve to the State control over its contract with the corporations, which without that provision would be irrevocable and protected from any measures affecting its obligation.

But with that provision it is repealable and subject to legislation which does affect its obligation.

Mr. President, it will be a sad day in the jurisprudence of this country when these words so industriously put into charters, when these words so industriously put into constitutions, shall come to have no meaning at all. It is in vain that the people for thirty years have been struggling to retain that control over their creatures, that control over their contracts which the Supreme Court has said this reservation does secure to them, if it is all to be frittered away and to amount to nothing at all.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HILL. Just five minutes.

Mr. HOWE. Will you renew the motion?

Mr. HILL. I will renew the motion.

Mr. HOWE. It is a bargain.

Mr. HILL. I desire the attention of the Senate a moment on the point between the Senator from Ohio and myself, and I will endeavor to be a man of as few words as he himself, and he is most distinguished for being a man of few words.

The distinction I draw and insist on is the distinction between a contract which is the corporation contract, that is, the contract that creates the corporation and clothes it with franchises and which is a grant by the State, and a contract subsequently for a consideration and which is not a franchise. That is the difference. No case better illustrates the distinction—I want to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to it—than the very case to which he has alluded, and that is the case of Miller vs. The State, and, as that case is exactly in point and I rest upon it the distinction I make, I call the attention of the Senate to it for a moment. What was that case? The Legislature of New York chartered a railroad company and there was a provision in the railroad charter which authorized the city of Rochester, which subscribed $300,000, I think, of stock, to have four of the directors and the other stockholders to have seven or nine. The city of Rochester subscribed $300,000 of stock. It was expected that the miscellaneous stockholders would subscribe much more, and that the road as chartered would be built a good long distance. The city of Rochester paid her $300,000 that she subscribed and was allowed four directors in the board. The other stockholders were allowed either seven or nine; but instead of paying the whole amount that the private stockholders subscribed they paid a less amount than the $300,000.

The original idea of the charter was to give the city of Rochester and the other stockholders power in the board of directors in proportion to their subscription to the stock. As the other stockholders did not subscribe the amount that they had agreed to subscribe, and as the stock paid in by the city of Rochester exceeded all the stock paid in by the others, there was an injustice in this, that a minority of the stockholders controlled the board of directors. Therefore the Legislature of New York, under the general power given in their constitution, and by general legislation also, to alter, repeal, or change at will corporate charters, passed an amendatory act by which they gave to the city of Rochester an additional number of directors in the board and lessened the number of directors to which the other stockholders were entitled. The other stockholders objected to that amendment, and they said that the original article included in the charter allowing the city of Rochester four directors and giving the other stockholders seven or nine was a contract and that the city of Rochester was therefore bound by it. The city of Rochester insisted that it was part of the franchise and that therefore the Legislature had a right to make the amendment and give her the increase in the power of directors by legislative act and reduce the number of directors to which the other stockholders were entitled according to the original intent.

What was the question before the court—and I challenge the attention of the Senator from Ohio to it—and what was the decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States, for it finally came to this court? The supreme court of New York and I believe the court of appeals both held that it was a contract, not a franchise, that was made with the city of Rochester; that it was a contract not with the city, but a contract between the city of Rochester and the other stockholders, and that therefore the amendatory act was void because it violated a contract. That was the way the State courts held. That case was brought, if my recollection is right, to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it is reported in 15 Wallace, the case of Miller vs. The State. I think the State courts of New York decided as I say, but I shall not be sure about that, but it makes no difference now. The case was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, and what was the question there? The question was whether this provision in the charter giving the city of Rochester four directors, and the other stockholders seven or nine, was such a contract, independent and separate from the franchise, as that the Legislature under that reservation could not change it. That was the only question. The whole court agreed that if it was a contract separate and independent from the charter, although included in the charter, if it was in its nature a separate contract and not a franchise and not a part of the franchise, the Legislature had no power to alter it; and the Supreme Court divided on that question. A majority of the Supreme Court held that it was a part of the franchise, that the arrangement between the city of Rochester and the other stockholders was a part of the corporate franchise from the Legislature, and, therefore, the amendatory act changing it was constitutional. Judge Field and Judge Bradley dissented from that opinion because, they said, in their judgment it was a contract separate and independent from the franchise, and was not a part of the franchise. But I repeat, sir, although that was included as a provision in the charter, there was not a judge on the bench who intimated once that if that arrangement with the city of Rochester was a contract separate and independent from the franchise the Legislature could interfere with it, and they decided that the Legislature could interfere solely because it was a part of the franchise and corporate privilege granted.

Mr. BAILEY. Did they decide that the Legislature could not have interfered if it had been a separate grant?

Mr. HILL. They decided that the Legislature could interfere because it was a part of the franchise. Of course it was not necessary to say the Legislature could interfere if it had not been a part of the franchise. The dissenting judges put their dissent solely on the ground that they differed with the court in saying that it was a part of the franchise. They said it was a contract separate from the franchise, though included in the charter; and therefore being a contract separate from the franchise, though included in the charter, the Legislature had no power to alter it, and that is what I insist here, that though this contract of loan is included in the charter, it is a contract that is separate from the franchise; it is not a part of the franchise; it is an independent contract which could have been as well made by a separate and independent bill as in the original bill; and therefore not being a part of the corporate franchise it was not within the power reserved to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator I think is wrong in saying that the court of appeals of New York held that law unconstitutional.

Mr. HILL. I said I might be mistaken about the decision of the court of appeals of New York.

Mr. KERNAN. They affirmed the right of the city to elect directors under the new law.

Mr. HILL. I do not remember what was the decision of the various courts of New York. I do not know whether they all maintained the constitutionality of the act or denied it. The question was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, and I think the Senator from New York will bear me out that the whole question in that case was whether the arrangement with the city of Rochester was a part of the franchise or a contract separate from it.

Mr. KERNAN. I have not examined that point and cannot say. The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the decision of the court of appeals of New York.

Mr. THURMAN. I want the Senator from Georgia to answer me a question. Suppose the Government never had loaned these companies a dollar, does the Senator deny that Congress could under its reserved power, if not in any other way, require these companies to provide a sinking fund for the benefit of their creditors?

Mr. HILL. I do.

Mr. THURMAN. You do?

Mr. HILL. Yes, I do beyond the provisions of the act; but I say it is not necessary for me to take that position here, for I say that Congress cannot under a general reservation require anything to be done which is inconsistent with the specific stipulations of the contract.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator does not answer my question. It is, whether Congress would have the right, suppose there had been no Government loan at all, to require this corporation to provide a sinking fund for the protection of its creditors? I submit to the Senator from Georgia that that right cannot be destroyed because one of these creditors is the Government of the United States, no matter how the contract of loan was made.

Mr. HILL. In relation to the establishment of a sinking fund I will say this: as I understand the authorities, and surely the Senator from Ohio cannot disagree with me, that is a judicial question. Whenever there is a stipulation in a mortgage that a sinking fund shall be provided the courts will order it; whenever there is no such stipulation in a mortgage, and the mortgagee is insolvent, and the property insufficient to pay the debts, the mortgagee becomes in default and then a sinking fund will be provided or even the rents, issues, and profits will be applied. That is a different question altogether. I want to confine the Senator to the question. I say here—you may say I repeat it; I do repeat it—there is not a decision on earth that ever has held that the legislative power could change a contract which was not a franchise, a contract based on a valuable consideration. A franchise is not based on valuable consideration. The very decision the Senator read speaks of the importance of the Legislature that grants franchises retaining power over them to promote the public good. Why? Because the very object of granting a franchise is to promote the public good; the franchise is voluntary; and, of course, the Legislature having power to grant the franchise, and granting that franchise voluntarily, has a right to grant it on terms and prescribe just such terms as it pleases. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. KERNAN. Will the Senator allow me to get information by putting a question? Suppose a State passes a charter authorizing a corporation to be formed, and providing that on its being formed and putting up certain securities for the protection of policy-holders it may do a business of life insurance. They make this reservation in that charter. Suppose the Legislature becomes satisfied that the holders of the policies are not safe because the stockholders in the company do not put up enough security, could it not require them to put up more under that reservation?

Mr. HILL. Unquestionably.

Mr. KERNAN. There was not the only contract, "if you advance and put up with us"—as they do in New York—"certain securities, you may do the business for fifty years." In ten years we may say to them "you must put up as much more." Can the Legislature do it?

Mr. HILL. I say they can; but the distinction is very patent. The very franchise of an insurance company is to take risks and make the policy-holders secure, and it is the duty of the Government that grants that franchise to see that the corporators carry out the original purpose. Now, the object of creating a corporation to build a railroad is to build and keep up a railroad.

Mr. THURMAN. And keep up its credit?

Mr. HILL. You gentlemen go on the idea—

Mr. KERNAN. If we say to a railroad company, "if you do certain things you shall have certain lands," or "we will loan you certain money," if that is put in the charter and they comply, may we not, on the same ground, if we find that they are becoming insolvent and not paying their debts, regulate their affairs so that they shall be able to pay?

Mr. HILL. Certainly not. The difference is just this: a railroad company is not incorporated for the purpose of paying its debts. That is not one of the objects of its creation.

Mr. THURMAN. Oh!

Mr. HILL. The particular object of a railroad company is to build a railroad and keep it up, and it may pay its debts or it may not pay its debts; but the courts will compel it to pay its debts, not the legislative power. If a railroad company fails to pay its debts and goes into liquidation, that does not destroy the corporation. The railroad lives, the corporation is immortal. Gentlemen talk as though the peril of this debt was the peril of the road. By no means. The debt may fail to be collected and yet the road be kept up.

I admit that Congress has reserved power over the corporation. I admit that it has reserved power over the regulation of the franchises of the corporation. It can require the road to be kept up. It requires the purposes of the creation of the corporation to be carried out and secured; but the contract of loan is simply a contract debt, nothing more nor less, in which there is no franchise and to which the Government on the one part and the railroad company on the other are parties as simple contract debtors and creditors for a consideration of a loan and nothing more.

Now, sir, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 4, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, St. Paul's English Lutheran church, corner of Eleventh and H streets, Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand until I can make a personal explanation.

Mr. BUTLER. And until I shall have introduced a bill for reference only.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I withdraw the demand for the present.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago when the committee was appointed on the part of the House to proceed with the body of the late Judge Leonard, of Louisiana, it was understood the members of the committee should pair, as they were composed of the same number from each political party. I notice that several votes were taken in the House during their absence, but for some reason the announcement of the pair was not made.

The SPEAKER. There were individual announcements, but not in reference to the entire committee.

Mr. CALKINS. Myself and Judge TURNER, of Kentucky, were paired on all political questions, as well as Mr. ELLIS and Dr. STEWART and Mr. WARD and Mr. MULLER. I desire to have this statement go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The announcement in reference to the pair of Mr. ELLIS and Mr. STEWART was made, but not of the others. The statement will, as a matter of course, go into the RECORD.

TEMPORARY CLERKS, ETC.

Mr. DURHAM. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the message from the Senate insisting on its amendment to an act (H. R. No. 3102) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriation for detecting trespass on public lands, and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the House agree to the conference asked on the part of the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DURHAM, Mr. BLOUNT, and Mr. BAKER of Indiana.

THILO SCHULTZE AND OTHERS.

Mr. BANNING. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to present the following communication from the Secretary of War, and to move that the request be granted.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives the copy of a request from the Acting Second Comptroller of the Treasury, that certain papers in the matter of the claim of Thilo Schultze and others, heretofore transmitted for the information of the Committee on Military Affairs, be returned for the use of the accounting officers before whom the claim is now pending.

GEORGE W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, February 14, 1878.

Mr. BANNING. This matter was before the House last year and favorably considered by the Military Committee and reported to the House. It is now pending in one of the Departments, and the Secretary asks that the papers be returned. I move the request be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

CURRENCY FOR MINOR BUSINESS TRANSACTIONS.

Mr. BUTLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4238) to supply a convenient currency with which the minor business transactions of the people may be done; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

LAND LOCATED ON MILITARY WARRANTS.

Mr. SAPP, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4239) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MICHAEL SULLIVAN.

Mr. BLACKBURN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $100 per month from the 23d day of October to the 3d day of April, 1878, to Mr. Michael Sullivan for his services as messenger to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

THOMAS A. WALKER.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 954) for the relief of Thomas A. Walker was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of Claims, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I ask the gentleman not to insist upon that for a few moments that I may make some reports from the Committee of Claims, as I am about to be absent from the House for some time.

Mr. WOOD. I will yield to the gentleman if the reports are not for action at this time.

WILLIAM C. EDMONSTON.

Mr. ELLSWORTH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1346) for the relief of William C. Edmonston; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MILTON B. DUFFIELD.

Mr. ELLSWORTH also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the petition of Milton B. Duffield, late United States marshal in the Territory of Arizona; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELLSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the petition was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY O'LOUGHLIN.

Mr. ELLSWORTH also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2499) for the relief of Mrs. Mary O'Loughlin; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELLSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF HENRY K. SANGER.

Mr. ELLSWORTH also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4240) for the relief of the estate of Henry K. Sanger, late United States depositary at Detroit, Michigan, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

N. BOYDEN.

Mr. ELLSWORTH also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 685) for the relief of N. Boyden; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GLOVER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department have leave to report at any time for the purpose of printing and commitment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD. I now insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business of yesterday, being the resolutions reported from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

CHARGES AGAINST THE DOORKEEPER.

The resolutions were as follows:

Resolved, That the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and hereby is, declared vacant; and

Further resolved, That, until the appointment of a new Doorkeeper, the duties of the office be, and hereby are, devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cook] is entitled to the floor and has thirty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned yesterday I was discussing Mr. Coryell's affidavit as compared with the testimony which he gave before the committee, showing its utter worthlessness and its utter unreliability; how positively and emphatically he swore when he was furnishing the honorable gentleman from Indiana with his affidavit, and how differently he swore as to the same facts when he went before the committee. I ask the attention of those gentlemen who are disposed to sustain the majority report predicated upon the evidence of this man to the charges in the affidavit which he made and to his evidence before the committee. In his affidavit he swears positively and emphatically to every charge he makes himself, and then in confirmation of them he refers to Mr. Silver as a witness to sustain him in these accusations. His affidavit is found on the first page of the evidence.

Now, when he comes before us, and the charges are read to him, after giving his age and place of business, and previous history to some extent, he is asked:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Is that all the testimony you have to give?

Answer. In regard to that letter.

Q. In regard to the first charge you have made here?

A. That is all. That embraces the first charge. I have made a charge that Mr. Silver was made substantially the same offer.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Polk make an offer to Mr. Silver?

A. No, sir; I have it from Mr. Silver's mouth; that is all.

He had Mr. Silver subpoenaed and put upon the stand as a witness to prove the charge; and Mr. Silver swore emphatically and positively that no such offer was ever made to him by Mr. Polk.

Now, sir, there is a universal rule of evidence that when you put a man on the stand as your witness, you cannot, except under extraordinary circumstances, impeach or discredit him. That is a principle of law well known to every lawyer upon this floor. I read further from the testimony of this witness:

Question. Then do you know anything personally about those claims?

Answer. All that I know I learned a day or two or three afterward, through Mr. Silver. We had a conversation, and Mr. Silver told me that Mr. Polk had made him substantially the same offer.

Further on in his testimony is this:

Question. Have you had any other conversation with Mr. Polk about claims before Congress, or an interest in them, than that which you have already stated?

Answer. No, sir; I have never had any other.

Q. You charge here that Mr. Polk has a large amount of money due him for lobby services; how do you know that?

A. I am not quite ready for the evidence in proof of that yet. It is only the first and the third charges that I am prepared for.

And he never did get ready to offer proof to show that Polk was interested or that there was any other ground for his other charge. He was permitted by the committee to read a memorandum which he had made of a conversation with Mr. Polk. He had reduced to writing five or six days after the conversation took place certain matters, from which writing he was permitted to refresh his memory. When he was asked if that written memorandum contained all the conversation between him and Mr. Polk, he frankly said that it did not. This conversation occurred on the 31st day of December, and it was on the 5th of January that Coryell reduced it to writing. He was permitted to use the memorandum to refresh his memory, and he was asked:

Question. Does that memorandum contain all the conversation that occurred between you?

Answer. Oh, no, sir; the conversation lasted, probably, half or three-quarters of an hour; I merely condensed it because I did not suppose you would want to know all the little remarks and conversation that took place.

It would appear, then, that he merely condensed the conversation; put down what he thought proper. Now, I submit to every lawyer on this floor if there ever yet was a written memorandum of a conversation purporting to have taken place between two men, where the party offering the memorandum testifies himself that it does not contain the entire conversation, but simply what he considered the gist of it—was such a memorandum ever admitted as evidence before any court or jury? The universal law is that if you go into a conversation you must give the whole of it. That is a principle unvarying and universal in the courts. Yet this man here testifies that five days after the conversation took place he reduced the substance of it to writing. And he swore to that memorandum. I suppose the reason that he swore to his written statement was that he was afraid he would not believe it himself when called upon to present it. To establish the fact that it was true, he makes out what purports to be the memorandum of a conversation, and swears to it for no other reason than that he would probably not believe it when he looked at it again, if it was not sworn to. He says:

I merely condensed it, because I did not suppose you would want to know all the little remarks and conversation that took place.

Who did not want to know? Mark you, this conversation purports to have taken place more than a month before the committee was organized. He says that the conversation took place on the 31st day of December, and that it was the 5th day of January that he made the little memorandum of the substance of it, because he did not suppose the committee would want to know all the little remarks and conversation that took place. I say that this whole evidence is illegal and improper and ought to be ruled out of these proceedings.

He is again asked:

Question. Does the memorandum contain all the conversation?

Answer. No, sir; it is merely a synopsis of it, giving the gist, as I supposed, of the conversation.

The witness was asked in regard to this conversation, which he says took place on the 31st of December, who was present besides Mr. Polk and himself, and he replies, "Not any one; we were alone in his office in his house." And it was very fortunate for him that he was alone. I read further from his testimony:

Question. Did Mr. Polk tell you that he was interested in bills now pending or to be introduced into the present Congress?

Answer. He told me that he knew all about them and could put me "inside the ring." That is the term he used.

In his affidavit he swears that Polk was interested in bills pending before Congress. I read from the affidavit:

I further charge John W. Polk with having a large amount of money due him for lobby service from parties who had the contracts for paving Pennsylvania avenue during the past year, and that the payment of this money is now dependent on future appropriations by Congress, which makes him interested in aiding such further legislation and appropriations by the present Congress, of which he is Doorkeeper.

He also says in his affidavit:

In proof, I was offered by J. W. Polk, in consideration of my sending him my resignation as clerk, an interest in the several bills as aforesaid, by which, as he said, I could make more money than I could by the position and salary of clerk. This offer was made me in person by the said Polk, at his residence, on the evening of December 31, 1877.

He first charges that the Doorkeeper of the House is interested in bills now before or to be introduced into the present Congress. But he says in his testimony that Polk never told him so, and he refers to a man whose testimony I will read that discredits every word of his statement. I read the testimony of Coryell. See Silver's testimony. And Polk in his entire conversation disclaims any interest whatever in these bills before Congress.

I now refer to the evidence of Mr. Silver, a witness subpoenaed at the instance of Coryell; and every question asked him by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] was I believe suggested not from any knowledge or information of his own, but by Mr. Coryell, believing all the time that it would develop some plot or scheme on the part of Mr. Polk, some improper interest in these transactions. I read from the evidence of Mr. Silver:

Question. In the affidavit made by Mr. Coryell he states that you told him that Mr. Polk, the Doorkeeper of the House, in consideration of his appointing you as to a position under him, made you substantially the same offer which he had made to Mr. Coryell, which was that he would put him in a position whereby he could make more money than he could in the position of a clerk; what did you tell Mr. Coryell in regard to that matter?

Answer. I did not tell Mr. Coryell what he states in that paper there. Mr. Coryell was in the habit of visiting my room. I was sick when I first came on here, and he used to come there a good deal.

He disavows ever having made any such statement:

Question. What did you say from which he could draw an inference such as he has sworn to in this affidavit?

Answer. Well, Mr. Coryell couldn't understand why I had no position under Colonel Polk. He knew I was Mr. Polk's friend, and he couldn't understand that; and I told him that Colonel Polk had told me that he was not going to appoint any man to any position under him that had anything to do with lobbying in any way, shape, or form.

This is what Mr. Coryell's witness swears that Polk told him; that he would appoint no man to any position under him who was interested in any shape or form in lobbying:

I told him distinctly that Colonel Polk told me so. Mr. Polk's presumption about me was, at one time, I presume, that I had something to do with those matters; and he stated to me distinctly that he was not going to appoint anybody to any position who had anything to do with lobbying in any way or shape; that he had himself touched nothing and that he didn't intend to touch anything.

Question. Did Mr. Polk make such a statement to you or make you such an offer?

Answer. I say no.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you ever apply to Mr. Polk for a position?

A. Well, yes; I think I did. I think he wrote me a letter before we came here saying that he would take care of me as his friend, and I presumed he would.

Further on he testifies as follows:

Question. Did Mr. Polk ever offer you as a reason, or as a compensation for not giving you a position, that he would give you an interest or put you in a "ring" connected with any matters now before Congress?

Answer. He never did.

This is the sworn evidence given before the committee by Mr. Silver, who was the witness referred to to confirm Mr. Coryell's statements.

Question. Or that he would aid you as a lobbyist?

Answer. He never did.

Q. Or that he would assist you in getting any bill through in which you were interested?

A. He never did.

Q. Or that he would exert his influence on any member of Congress?

A. He never did.

Q. Did he offer at any time to aid you in any of these matters?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is stated in these charges that you and Mr. Polk were interested in some measure now before Congress; are you and Mr. Polk now interested in any measure now before Congress or in anything growing out of any appropriation to be made by Congress?

A. Not one dollar. I distinctly say, not one dollar.

Yet this man swore that Silver told him so. He had Silver subpoenaed and put upon the stand as a witness; yet Silver contradicted him from the beginning to the end of his testimony.

There is one part of Coryell's evidence that I desire to read, for I think it has about as much truth in it as anything else that he testifies to. And I ask the attention of my democratic friends to this statement. Those who are now disposed to condemn this man, those who are disposed to break down their party so far as they can by dismissing from the service of this House in shame and disgrace an officer who was the nominee of their own party caucus and elected by their votes, should listen to this testimony:

Question. You copied these extracts for him, did you?

Answer. I suggested it to him, showing him the excuses he might give for making these appointments, if any were necessary.

Here is this man Coryell advising Polk to make appointments.

It is necessary that I should explain that. When Mr. Polk was being besieged and in a great deal of difficulty I came up here one Sunday night and went over all the applications, giving a statement of the number of applicants, which, if I recollect right, amounted to six or seven hundred over and above the positions he had to fill, and I think at the same time I made those extracts from letters begging appointments. I did it in order that he might have some support or excuse for this extra force that he was putting on. He was in need of it; it was about the time that the thing began to blow out. I did it in a spirit of kindness.

This man advised him to put on this extra force, and he did it because he said there were six or seven hundred applications beyond the number of positions authorized by law and because the applicants were persistent and unceasing in their importunities. A fact more discreditable to the democratic party than anything that Polk has done is, in my judgment, that we should have put him into this position and then hounded him to death for office for our importuning friends, and, after he had sought to accommodate our friends as best he could, that we should turn against him. There is more truth perhaps in that statement of Coryell than anything else he has testified to.

There is one feature in this investigation that is a little remarkable. The only two gentlemen who have spoken on this floor against Mr. Polk have alluded to evidence in their possession which has never been before the entire committee and was never heard of until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] in making his speech alluded to it. I say that in all fairness to Mr. Polk the whole evidence should be before the committee. This whole matter ought to be re-committed so that the committee might have the benefit of this testimony and that Colonel Polk might have an opportunity to meet it. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] who really wants to be fair-minded has been led by his extreme aversion to wrong and corruption in the Doorkeeper's office and by his deep and anxious solicitude for the welfare of the democratic party to depart from the fairness which ordinarily distinguishes him. I thank him for his interest in the welfare of our party; but when he shall quit his own political associates and come over among us, we will appreciate better his interest in our behalf.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. COOK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRIDGES. I understand that the gentleman's effort has been to weaken, if not entirely destroy, the testimony of Mr. Coryell. Now I would say to the gentleman and to the House that I have been for many years acquainted with this man, and I pronounce him as honest a man as there is upon this floor.

Mr. COOK. Then I am sorry for the rest of them, God knows! [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. I have known his parentage, and he is descended from as honest a family as ever lived within the limits of the United States.

Mr. COOK. If you will read the evidence you will change your opinion of him.

Mr. BRIDGES. No, sir; I would believe his evidence in preference to that of any other man, for I know him to be perfectly honest and a man who would never swear to what was untrue.

Mr. COOK. The gentleman rose to ask me a question and has delivered an eulogium on Mr. Coryell.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cook] yielded.

Mr. COOK. No, sir; I have not yielded. Now the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] had a great deal to say yesterday about the appointment of Rogers on the soldiers' roll, who was not a soldier, and the circumstances under which he was removed from office. All the evidence in reference to that was taken on Monday in the presence of three members of the committee only, without notice to Mr. Polk or to any member of the minority of the committee, nor did we hear that the case was being continued and evidence taken until it was mentioned yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. COX.] Does that show fair-mindedness? Does it illustrate open, candid, fair play in this transaction? But so far as Rogers and the soldiers' roll is concerned, I say that on such testimony as was taken it showed that this man Rogers represented himself as a soldier and was put on the soldiers' roll, and a few days ago when Mr. Polk ascertained the fact that he was not a soldier he dismissed him and put his brother upon the roll who is a disabled and discharged soldier and a pensioner of the Government.

Mr. Polk would have testified to that if he had been notified that the case was reopened. This crippled soldier who has been substituted for his brother came to the Capitol hurriedly and qualified, and then left his brother here to discharge his duties while he returned home to arrange his affairs. Now, I appeal to every fair-minded man on this floor if there was any fraud or corruption and wrong upon the Government in this transaction? Now, I appeal to gentlemen on the other side of the House if upon charges of this character it is fair to crush a man who is thus placed within your power, and upon these charges that are presented here to reflect forever upon the character of himself and family, and on account of the transactions so elaborated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] and others to stigmatize him as an outlaw?

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] who introduced this matter into the House, and I think every gentleman will bear me witness, that when he did it he showed that degree of earnest solicitude for economy in the House and the proper management of its affairs that he was utterly overwhelmed, that his voice was crushed and he could hardly speak, and the tears streamed down his cheeks when he read these affidavits and asked to have the resolution passed that he offered. He was so shocked at the ruin and destruction that the Doorkeeper was about to inflict upon the country that he was utterly overwhelmed; his whole nature gave way under the shock.

Now, sir, the last Congress appropriated for the year ending June 30 next $105,210 to defray the expenses of the Doorkeeper's department. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to the fact that in the year 1870 $164,894 was appropriated by that Congress to defray the expenses of the Doorkeeper's department, and this included only the employes on the regular roll and not those provided for by special resolution. In 1871 the amount of $183,709 was appropriated to cover the same expenses, and that did not include the extra men or those who were paid by special resolution. In 1872 the amount appropriated was $183,042.53 for the same purpose, and not including the extra men paid by special resolution. In 1873 the amount appropriated was $177,518.89, and that did not cover the employes who were paid by special resolution, and so it goes on.

Now, when you consider that we have reduced the expenses of this department from $188,000 and $183,000 down to about $105,000 the Treasury has not suffered much at our hands. The gentleman was shocked at another fact, that such frauds and corruption should exist here. Now, since I have been a member of this House I have seen a man brought in here and placed in a chair in the area, from which he fell, and who was sent to jail because he refused to testify, and finally he came forward and said that the Doorkeeper, who stood at the door to my left, a one-armed loyal soldier who fought for your Union and followed your flag as a soldier, for his loyalty he received $11,000 from those interested in the Pacific mail subsidy, and the Doorkeeper who was in charge of the Hall received $4,500 for his valuable services at one time, and the Postmaster here, an officer of this House, had received $125,000 for his valuable services in aid of the same subsidy. That is a part of the written history of our country and our legislation. I have got the evidence here in that case. If gentlemen have any curiosity on the subject they can see it.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me a portion of his time to reply to what he has said in reference to me?

Mr. COOK. No, sir; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] can yield a portion of his time to you when he comes to close the debate.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I think it hardly fair for the gentleman to make such charges and then refuse me an opportunity to reply.

Mr. COOK. Mr. HARRISON can do that.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I can assure the gentleman that I shall make an effort to get the floor to reply to him.

Mr. COOK. Very well. So far as the record in this case is concerned as to the matter of corruption, it amounts to nothing whatever compared with the history of previous Congresses under republican rule.

There is not a scintilla of evidence to show that Mr. Polk received one dollar from any employe of this House or that he is interested in any manner or in anything connected with it. Importuned as he has been by many more hundreds of applicants for appointments than he had places to put them in, he did make some indifferent appointments, and one of the very worst things he did was to appoint this man Coryell. My old friend over there from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRIDGES] has testified to his character. He knew Coryell in his better days. Judas was a good man until he fell. He followed our Saviour through thick and thin as one of His disciples and stood by Him and adhered to Him up to the very last, but then he fell. So it is in reference to this man Coryell. When my friend from Pennsylvania knew him I have no doubt he bore the character to which he testified. Any one who will read his affidavit and then read his evidence will see that the one contradicts the other, and must come to the conclusion that either in one or the other he has sworn to a lie from the beginning to the end.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] yesterday rose to some degree of sympathy and pathos in dwelling on the hardships of Mr. Lyle, a poor colored man who was cruelly outraged. Here is the certificate of the clerk of the Committee of Accounts showing that Mr. Lyle received $260 from the 1st of April to the 15th of October, 1877. He charged that Mr. Polk withheld money these men were entitled to. It cannot be shown that he ever withheld one dollar to which these men were entitled.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. COOK. Certainly.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Do you say the amount you have stated was the laborers' wages, established by law for that purpose?

Mr. COOK. No, sir. I say it is the amount allowed by this committee, which investigated the matter, out of the appropriation made for the purpose. Mr. Polk, from the 15th of April to the 15th of October, when Congress assembled, had no more to do with Mr. Lyle than he had with the north pole. He was not an officer of the House. He was not connected with the House in any way. He was not responsible in the slightest degree for what was due Lyle or anybody else. When Mr. Polk came into office on the 15th of October, from then to the 15th of December this man was paid enough to cover more than the wages of a laborer for that time.

Now, sir, the gentleman from Ohio stated yesterday as his personal belief, although he said there was no evidence for it, that all the evils, errors, and irregularities of this office of Doorkeeper were still going on to-day. It is my personal belief there is not one solitary one existing to-day in the Doorkeeper's department. My personal belief is that the department is being run in accordance with the law, and that the Doorkeeper is now and has been from the beginning discharging his duties under the law, fulfilling all his obligations to the House and to the country. Such, Mr. Speaker, is my belief. Gentlemen on the opposite side of the House believe differently. Such is his belief, but he has no proof for it. Is he upon that belief justified, without any evidence to prove the fact, in asking this House to discharge the Doorkeeper from his office? I think not.

Now, sir, my time is about out and so am I. [Laughter.] But before taking my seat I have this to say to the democratic party: two years ago we had another difficulty with a Doorkeeper. We had a simple-minded man here who wrote a letter that he was "a bigger man than old Grant," and he spelled it wrong. [Laughter.] My friend from New York [Mr. COX] was chairman of the committee which reported a resolution to expel him from his office.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was merely the organ of the Committee on Rules, and acting under the instruction of that committee, when I reported the resolution to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. COOK. I was never able to find out whether we expelled Fitzhugh because he was a "bigger man than old Grant" or because he spelled the word wrong. [Laughter.] I was among the nineteen men who stood here and voted to sustain him, even if he was a "bigger man than old Grant" and could not spell exactly right. [Laughter.] But when that charge was made against the democratic party they went off instantly into a stampede. No Texas herd of cattle were ever equal to it in the rapidity with which they rushed Fitzhugh out of the insignificant office of Doorkeeper. To-day, too, they are frightened, many of them. They say they cannot stand such a shock. [Laughter.] They say they cannot afford to keep a Doorkeeper in office who has put a few more men into office than he was entitled to, although he was importuned very frequently by these very members of Congress themselves to do it. [Laughter.] They say they cannot stand the shock of his keeping men on the soldiers' roll who were not soldiers. Mr. Polk testified in every case the men themselves represented they were soldiers. Take Holt's case, for instance. He told him he was a soldier; that he had served three years in the Army. He is a decent, genteel-looking man. I do not know whether he asked him to exhibit his papers or not. It turned out, however, that the service he rendered was in Boston as one of the State militia. Well, the people of Boston have been alarmed for many years for fear Bob Toombs, of Georgia, would call the roll of his slaves at the foot of the Bunker Hill monument, and I suppose this militia was kept up there for the purpose of saving that monument from any such desecration. [Laughter.] I have no doubt that he was rendering his country valuable service and the city of Boston especially, and that he was protecting that great monument, sacred in the history of our country, commemorative of its great events, from that great desecration which my friend from Georgia has so long been charged with attempting to perpetrate upon it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PUGH. How about that apothecary?

Mr. COOK. That apothecary in the Navy served five years in the Ordinance Department of the Army. I have got the letter in my pocket, but I do not offer it, because I am a little more bashful than those gentlemen. He was fourteen years old when he went into the Union Army, was present at the fall of Richmond, and rendered valuable service.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise now to move the previous question.

Mr. COOK. Does the gentleman propose by moving the previous question to cut off the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN?]

Mr. HARRISON. I have reported the resolution and have no authority from the committee to admit any amendment.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I rise to ask the gentleman from Illinois to withhold his demand for the previous question now in order that I may have an opportunity to be heard on this case. I have been arraigned here by the last speaker, and I think I should have some opportunity to reply. If the gentleman from Illinois does not accede to my request I trust the demand for the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. SAYLER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAYLER. I wish to know whether the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] has been brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. SAYLER. Then in order to bring it before the House it will be necessary to vote down the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection for my own part to admit that amendment to be voted upon by the House, but as from my committee I have no authority to do so.

Mr. SAYLER. The gentleman's committee has nothing to do with it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] demands the previous question. If the demand for the previous question is voted down the Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Illinois in front of the Chair [Mr. EDEN] to submit his amendment and will further recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAMES] as entitled to the floor as a member of the committee reporting.

Mr. HOOKER. If any time is to be extended to the other side I hope the House will extend the same courtesy to some on this side who have not the good fortune to belong to the committee, and have been excluded from participation in this debate because they do not belong to it.

The SPEAKER. Up to this time three hours have been occupied on each side: three hours on the side of the majority report and three hours on the side of the views of the minority. If the demand for the previous question is sustained the Chair understands one-half of the last hour would be given to each side.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Let us vote the previous question down.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. Will it be in order for me to ask my colleague to yield as he indicated to me he would, in order that this amendment may be offered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask that question of his colleague.

Mr. EDEN. Will my colleague yield for that purpose, that this amendment may be offered?

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection personally.

Mr. EDEN. You have perfect control of the matter.

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; I am directed by the Committee on Civil-Service Reform to report certain resolutions. I have done so, and I consider my power then as gone.

Mr. EDEN. Have you not the right to yield for the purpose of allowing an amendment to be offered?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Chair decides I have that power—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the question of offering amendments. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] has control of the majority report, and the Chair recognizes him until an adverse vote occurs on his motion.

Mr. EDEN. I understand my colleague to say that if the Chair states he has the right to yield for that purpose he will do so in order that I may offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to yield for that purpose, as is constantly the practice.

Mr. HALE. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the demand made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] for the previous question.

Mr. HARRISON. If the House so desires I have no objection to the debate running another hour before the previous question is called—

Mr. EDEN. I am not asking time for debate.

Mr. HARRISON. Provided it is agreed that at the end of that hour no further extension of time will be required.

Mr. SAYLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry—a question of right. The gentleman from Illinois on my left [Mr. HARRISON] does not control the floor for the exclusion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois on my right, [Mr. EDEN.] The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] yielded the floor yesterday after the exhaustion of his hour. With the exception of his reserved right in the closing hour he has no more control of the floor than I have or any other gentleman; and he not having demanded the previous question his colleague has a perfect right to offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] has demanded the previous question.

Mr. SAYLER. When?

The SPEAKER. This morning.

Mr. SAYLER. Yes; not until after the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] had offered his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] yesterday submitted his amendment as part of his remarks.

The gentleman from Ohio is perfectly well aware that the practice is to give the control of a report from a committee to the member of the committee who makes it.

Mr. SAYLER. That is very true.

The SPEAKER. The Chair uniformly recognizes the gentleman who has charge of a report, to demand the previous question on such report, so as to bring the House to a direct vote on the question and test the sense of the House thereon; but there is no difficulty whatever in the case; if a majority of the House desires to vote upon this amendment or desire longer debate, then the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. EDEN. I understood my colleague to yield to me to offer the amendment.

Mr. SAYLER. He has not the right to yield.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs with the gentleman from Ohio as to that; but the remedy is to vote down the previous question.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to call attention to the fact that I did not yield to my colleague.

Mr. SAYLER. I wish to call attention to the fact that he could not yield because he did not hold the floor.

The SPEAKER. The control over a report undoubtedly rests with the member who reported it, as the gentleman from Ohio is very well aware.

Mr. EDEN. I ask my colleague if he will yield to me to offer the amendment, as he agreed both last night and this morning that he would do?

Mr. THOMPSON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no recollection of agreeing to allow my colleague to offer that amendment; I said I had no objection to it personally. Do not gentlemen suppose that I know my own mind?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that on yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] submitted as a part of his remarks the amendment which he seeks to offer. The Chair will have read what he stated at the time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois stated that he had his substitute read for information, and that at the proper time, if permitted, he would offer it as an amendment to the report.

The SPEAKER. The words are "if permitted," and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] now insists on his motion for the previous question.

Mr. EDEN. I said that my colleague was willing to yield to me.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. By taking the vote on the previous question we can decide the matter very soon.

Mr. HARRISON. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to the gentleman offering the substitute; but I would say further, that I think the best plan that can be adopted is to have one hour longer for debate, and divide it between the two sides.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the previous question or not?

Mr. EDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me to offer the amendment which he agreed to allow me to offer?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the previous question or yield for the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I demand the previous question.

The question was put upon seconding the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 63, noes 110.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. JAMES obtained the floor.

Mr. EDEN. I now offer as a substitute for the resolutions reported by the committee those which I had read yesterday, as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been voted down, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAMES] for further debate; but the Chair will first entertain the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. EDEN. I will state that I made some slight changes in the amendment after it was read in the House; but it is correctly copied in the RECORD, and had better be read again.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Whereas neither the majority nor the minority of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to whom were referred the charges against John W. F. Polk, Doorkeeper of this House, have found or reported that said Polk has been guilty of any corruption in the administration of said office, but have found and reported that he has in some instances placed upon the rolls a greater number of employes than was authorized by law, trusting to the House to ratify said action and provide compensation for said employes, which was in fact done, in part, by the House before any charges were made against said officer; and

Whereas it appears from the testimony taken before said committee and reported to the House that the names of some persons who were not in fact crippled or disabled soldiers have in some instances been, by mistake or otherwise, placed upon the soldiers' roll; Now, therefore

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House it is essential to the proper and economical administration of said office that the number of its employes and the amount of its expenditures should at all times be regulated and controlled by the laws in force when the persons are employed and the expenses incurred, and hence the conduct of said Polk, in making appointments in excess of the number authorized by law and in placing, even temporarily, under any pretext, on the soldiers' roll persons not entitled to be there, is hereby disapproved and censured; and that the said officer is hereby ordered and directed to examine and revise the soldiers' roll at the earliest practicable moment, and remove therefrom the names of all persons, if any yet remain, who are not crippled or disabled soldiers; and that he shall hereafter conform strictly to the statute and rules of the House in regard to the employes on said roll.

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform relating to the charges against the Doorkeeper of the House be recommitted to that committee, with instructions to inquire into the organization of the employes serving under the Doorkeeper, and to ascertain the number necessary in each branch of that service, and what changes, if any, are demanded to secure greater efficiency and economy in transacting the business of the House under charge of the Doorkeeper; and what further legislation, if any, is required to prevent the employment or payment of any messenger, laborer, or other employe of the Doorkeeper in excess of the number authorized by law; and whether the appointment of laborers under the Doorkeeper should not be discontinued and the duties now performed by the laborers be turned over to a superintendent or janitor, with authority to hire, at the usual and fair price for labor, such persons as may be necessary to do work required to be done by the laborers now appointed by the Doorkeeper; with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The hour of the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAMES] commences now, and the amendment is pending.

Mr. JAMES. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.]

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I do not know that I should have cared to say anything upon this question, had it not been for a remark which fell from the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK.]

Mr. EDEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is there any understanding or agreement about this matter or is a demand for the previous question now in order?

The SPEAKER. The demand for the previous question was voted down by the House and the action of the House was adverse to the report of the committee, and the effect of such vote is, as far as the Chair can gather the disposition of the House, that the House desired another hour's debate and also desired to have an amendment offered.

Mr. CARLISLE. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] has control of the matter.

The SPEAKER. At the expiration of the hour the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] to call the previous question.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] saw fit to complain of the manner that I exhibited when I introduced the proposition to investigate the Doorkeeper of the House. I am aware that the subject of Doorkeepers is a tender one with the democratic party. I believe that for the last thirty or forty years that party never has had a democratic Doorkeeper who has not needed investigation and chastisement at the hands of that party or some other party.

I had the right, however, to assume that the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber, in these latter days, since the upheaval in 1874, had amended somewhat in that regard, and that they were now honest in their pretenses of being in favor of honesty in the civil service of the Government. I do not know whether the decision of to-day will be confirmatory of that supposition or whether it will prove to be like so many other pretenses of that party, merely a sham, intended to delude the people; "a good enough Morgan until after election."

I had expected that gentlemen on that side of the Chamber who speak as my friend from Georgia [Mr. COOK] did when alluding to the Army as "your Army," and who when they speak of the Union of the States characterize it as "your Union," and especially that class of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who could not wind up an eulogium on Fitzhugh or on Polk without drawing a beautiful and chaste picture of the virtues of the late Judas Iscariot—I say I had expected that they would be found railing at the complaints made by me with reference to the Doorkeeper of the House. In this I am not disappointed.

One would almost infer that my friend from Georgia [Mr. COOK] regrets the fact that an untimely rope shortened the career of Judas Iscariot. One would think that he regretted that a kind Providence had not lengthened his years in order that he too might be a candidate for Doorkeeper as a successor in a democratic House, of the illustrious Fitzhugh, and his still more illustrious successor, Mr. Polk.

I have now said all that I desire to say in reference to matters that are purely personal to myself. Whether or not I shed tears over the sins and iniquities of that side of this democratic House, as intimated by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK,] is a matter of very little moment. A contemporary of Judas had occasion to shed tears over the sins of Jerusalem. I think there is equal occasion to-day for the country to shed tears over the sins and shortcomings of gentlemen on the democratic side of the Chamber.

If I can comprehend the arguments in favor of Mr. Polk's acquittal on the democratic side of the Chamber, there seems to be two principal reasons why he should be retained in the office he has disgraced. It is argued with a great parade of learning that this grand inquest of the nation, the House, sits as a justice's court, and that because the indictment I drew, and which, after the bitterest opposition and attempts to evade the issue on the part of democratic gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, I succeeded in getting passed, is not sufficiently broad and comprehensive to meet the criminal facts testified to before the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. In other words, they seem to be of the opinion that while Mr. Polk is proven guilty the indictment has a flaw in it, and therefore we are to exhibit the spectacle to the country and to the world of allowing Mr. Polk to escape on a little trivial technicality.

Now it may be that my democratic friends are ambitious of the sort of reputation that is to be gained by voting on such a pretense as that to sustain Mr. Polk. But if they are, I want to say to them that their pretense of an honest desire to reform the civil service of the Government will be valued by the country at what it is really worth. The country believes and will believe that their pretenses of desiring such reform are absolutely worthless and deceptive.

There seems to be another ground why democrats stand by Mr. Polk, and the argument which they urge I think has much more weight than their technical plea of an insufficient indictment. The reason urged why Mr. Polk ought not to be condemned by the democratic side of the House, and why it is necessary for the champions of Mr. Polk to turn around and with clenched fist and with trembling voice, with all the energy and power they have, try by the application of the party lash on the backs of their party friends to drive them to vote to screen this man who is arraigned as a criminal at the bar of the House for judgment, and who has already been tried before the bar of public opinion of this nation and found guilty by every honest man from ocean to ocean; that reason, that excuse, is that while they cannot deny that Mr. Polk has got the "pork" in violation of law, still he ought to be acquitted because sundry pieces of the bacon are found hanging out of the pockets of some honorable gentlemen on the democratic side of the Chamber. [Laughter.] That may be a good excuse, and I do not know but it will be a sufficient excuse to justify gentlemen on that side of the Chamber in voting to acquit Polk. And it is suggested near me that perhaps there may be some on this side of the House in the same situation. I trust, however, that will not be found to be the fact.

It is true—and the country will take notice of it—that there are gentlemen on the other side of the House who have some of the fruits of the crimes for which Mr. Polk to-day is on trial at the bar of the House. Democratic greed and pressure for office had much to do with Mr. Polk's offense.

I do not propose to spend my time this morning in discussing the question as to whether or not the indictment is drawn as it ought to be drawn. I do not feel that I am acting here as one might act who was defending a thief who had been arraigned before a trial court. I feel that it is our duty here and now, in the broad light of heaven and before the country, to decide this question according to the law and the facts as they have been developed.

I do not care whether the evidence brought out against Mr. Polk has been brought out in strict conformity to the technical rules of evidence or not. It is before us and we must deal with it as becomes us. I say here that if I have the time to go through the testimony I will establish three or four propositions so absolutely and conclusively, out of the mouth of Mr. Polk himself, that his blindest partisan, although Colonel Polk may have filled his pocket with the "pork," cannot deny them, nor can he escape the proof that sustains the charges that I will make.

I propose to show in the first place that Mr. Polk, your Doorkeeper, was a lobbyist when elected, and was just as fit a man for that position as any other of the rotten lobbyists who prowl like foul birds of prey, to the disgrace of the country and to its disgust, too, around the corridors and avenues of this Capitol. I propose to show further that Mr. Polk, when he had first emerged from his obscurity and appeared upon the arena of politics here as a lobbyist, came in contact with a man by the name of Silver, who seems to pride himself in testifying to his own infamy as a lobbyist. This man, self-confessed lobbyist as he is, was made by Polk, when he set on foot his campaign for obtaining the position of Doorkeeper, his especial confidant, his go-between, his "man Friday." I propose to prove further that Mr. Polk, deceiving you gentlemen on the other side of the House, had farmed out by corrupt and corrupting bargains nearly all the positions under the Doorkeeper about this House as a reward for service that I shall not stop to characterize. I propose to show also that this man Polk had a competitor for Doorkeeper by the name of Wedderburn, who conveniently dropped out of the list as a rival candidate against him, and on the 16th of October last, the day after Polk's election, as a reward for something he had done, was promoted to the position of "superintendent of passes" at a salary of $2,500 a year. The sworn evidence shows that without a shadow of law for it this man Wedderburn received for one month $165.50 as payment for his services in an office which, with its salary and emoluments, had been created by Polk alone. I propose further to show that all the crimes that have been brought up in array against this man Polk have been committed first in violation of the law, and secondly in defiance of a solemn resolution passed by the Committee of Accounts about the 2d day of November, 1877. I shall not have time (nor would I weary your patience in that way) to specify item by item the crimes that he has committed in violation of law and in defiance of the resolution unanimously passed by the Committee of Accounts of this House at the extra session of this Congress.

I have said I would prove, in the first place, that this man Polk was a self-confessed lobbyist. To establish this I ask the Clerk to read from page 116 and the top of page 117 of the evidence.

The Clerk read as follows:

Question. Were you interested in any measure pending before the Forty-fourth Congress?

Answer. I was.

Q. Were you interested as the agent for any company in any measure pending before the Forty-fourth Congress?

A. Not exactly as an agent, sir.

Q. Were you employed by any company to work for their interests before Congress? In other words, were you employed as lobbyist for any paving company?

A. Never as a lobbyist. I was employed as a counsel, an adviser.

Q. You were employed as counsel and adviser for a paving company.

A. Yes, sir; for the Neufchâtel Paving Company.

Q. They had measures then pending in Congress?

A. No, not yet. It was proposed—I don't know from what source the proposition came—to bring a bill before the Committee for the District of Columbia and get an appropriation to pave Pennsylvania avenue.

Q. Did you represent that company before the Committee for the District of Columbia?

A. Never, sir.

Q. Were you employed to do so?

A. No, sir; I was employed as a counselor to advise them, and I used to direct them as to what I thought would be the proper course for them to pursue.

Q. Are you a lawyer by profession?

A. No, sir; not a lawyer.

Q. State the nature of the service you rendered or agreed to render that company.

A. Well, I really can hardly explain everything to your satisfaction probably. It was supposed, you know, that I might be able to serve them by my judgment and influence. Of course that would be the inference. It was their own impression rather than mine. They sought me. I didn't seek them.

Q. What did they require you to do?

A. Well, to help them to shape the bill. Of course the proposition was that I should use the influence that was necessary to help to secure a contract for them.

Q. Influence over whom?

A. Generally; any one, no one in particular.

Q. Did you receive during the last Congress money from any paving company, or the agents of any paving company, or the promise of any money or compensation from any such company or its agents?

A. Define what you mean.

Q. I say from any paving company during the last Congress?

A. I received a small amount from Mr. Taylor.

Q. What was that for?

A. Well, it was for assisting him generally. . . . They awarded me, my recollection is, $1,400. This much he got for his lobby services from one source.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On page 118, which I incorporate as a part of my remarks, will be found evidence showing that during the Forty-fourth Congress this man Polk employed or procured the services of one Silver as his agent, because Silver while acting as a messenger for the Committee on the District of Columbia, pretended that he could influence the vote of a democratic member of Congress who was upon that committee. Here is Mr. Polk's own testimony on that subject:

Question. Was Mr. Silver interested in this matter jointly with you?

Answer. Indirectly. He had no kind of connection with the company.

Q. What was his connection with the matter?

A. His connection was through me.

Q. You employed him?

A. I employed him.

Q. What did you employ him to do?

A. I do not know. He claimed that he had some influence.

Q. With whom? Be frank about it.

A. With a member of Congress.

Q. What member?

A. Do you want me to name him?

Q. Yes.

A. Mr. HENKLE.

Q. Was Mr. HENKLE on the Committee for the District of Columbia?

A. He was.

Q. Did Mr. Silver claim to have any influence with any other member on that committee?

A. I don't know that he did. I think not. I never heard him.

Q. Then you employed Mr. Silver on account of his supposed influence with the members of that committee?

A. No, sir; not in the first place. This matter grew gradually. I do not think I knew at first that he knew of this thing. Mr. Silver was a Missourian, and a very intelligent man, and he was friendly with me, and he did not seem to be doing anything; he used to come to my room very often, and I don't know how it actually did come about; it just grew into that kind of an arrangement. He was entirely dependent on me for his interest. There was never any specific amount promised him, but he was depending on me entirely, and when the whole thing broke down that ended it. I never paid him anything.

Q. What was your original contract? Was there anything specific?

A. Yes; originally with Mr. Creevey there was.

Q. What was it?

A. It was a verbal contract. We talked about a great many things. I was to take an interest, and they calculated that there would be so much profit and my interest would be $10,000, and I would go on and understand the thing and get more work after we got it established as the pavement adopted in Washington City, and we were going to make a big enterprise of it.

Q. Did you receive, during the last Congress, money from any paving company, or the agents of any paving company, or the promise of any money or compensation from any such company or its agent?

A. Define what company you mean.

Q. I say from any paving company during the last Congress?

A. I received a small amount from Mr. Taylor.

Q. What was that for?

A. Well, it was for assisting him generally. I must tell you the whole thing, so you may understand it. We had previously agreed that if the Neufchâtel was a successful company I should become interested in its business. After they failed to get as big a contract as they expected awarded to them by the commissioners, I claimed that I was entitled to some pay for my time and services and my traveling expenses. The whole thing had broken down entirely, but they awarded me, my recollection is, about $1,400.

Q. And paid you that?

A. No, sir; not all of it.

Q. How much did they pay you of that $1,400?

A. My recollection is that I received about $1,100.

Mr. Polk either knew that the pretense of this man Silver was false or he believed that in hiring him he would be able to bribe a member of this House to do something that was in violation of his duty. In any event, Mr. Polk's conduct was equally infamous. Of course I know that the gentleman in question is a man of such high character that the pretense that he could be influenced by such a man as Silver was utterly false. Still this evidence illustrates the character of the lobbyist Polk and his friend Silver. It shows that Polk was ready and willing to use instruments of that vile character for the purpose of furthering his wicked ends.

By reference to page 119 of the evidence, which I also incorporate in my remarks, it will be found that Mr. Polk, until the year 1877, had an interest in these lobby measures which he testified about. The testimony of Mr. Polk is as follows:

Question. Then you held this claim during the winter of 1876-'77?

Answer. In the last session of the Forty-fourth Congress I had it.

Q. Were you in the employ of the Government during any portion of the same time?

A. No, sir. Oh, yes, I was, a little while, as assistant sergeant-at-arms at New Orleans.

Q. Then you were an assistant sergeant-at-arms during the time you held this claim?

A. Yes; I suppose so; but I had ceased to think of it as a claim; I felt pretty sure there was nothing in it.

So far as the testimony shows, Mr. Polk appears to have held this lobby claim when he became Doorkeeper. This testimony of Mr. Polk explains the evidence of Mr. Coryell that Polk proposed to put him in the lobby ring, where he could make more money than as a messenger.

It appears by the testimony of Mr. Coryell, on page 5, that Polk had an interest in lobby rings here about this House during the present Congress. Mr. Coryell testifies as follows:

Question. Do you say now, under your oath, that I told you that I was familiar with or interested in a number of bills or measures before Congress, and that I made use of the term "ring," and said that I could put you in the ring?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. You state that positively here?

A. Yes.

I was very glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRIDGES] speak of the high character of Mr. Coryell. In order to show what kind of a man he is I desire to incorporate in my speech the evidence on that point upon page 5. It will show that Mr. Coryell is a man of the highest and most distinguished character. That evidence is as follows:

Question. What has been your occupation in the past?

Answer. I have been in active business all my life; I have been a manufacturer; I have built mills and conducted business; I have been the president of a large rolling-mill company; I served the Government for four years during the war as a quartermaster, disbursing millions of dollars, and nobody ever made a charge against me. At the end of the war I went to the Treasury and Quartermaster-General's Office and settled my accounts to a cent, after having had probably a hundred million dollars in money and property pass through my hands.

This evidence shows how fit a man the late lobbyist Polk was to make the proposition to put Mr. Coryell or anybody else in a "ring" about this House during the present session while he held the position of Doorkeeper. This evidence fixes the brand of lobbyist upon Mr. Polk so firmly that it will never be removed.

Not only did Mr. Polk violate the law with reference to the employment of men on the soldiers' roll, as was shown yesterday, but it will be found by reference to page 78 of the evidence that he prepared a bill, which I hold in my hand and which he procured to be introduced into this House by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. YOUNG.] This bill shows his sentiments in reference to the soldiers of the country. It proposes to get rid of the soldiers' roll by wiping it absolutely from the statute-book. No wonder he thought the law creating a disabled-soldiers' roll a "matter of mere sentiment."

On page 361, by the testimony of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON,] it appears that the Committee of Accounts was organized on the 1st or 2d of November, within two weeks of the organization of the extra session of Congress. It is shown that this man Polk came before that committee (having first been before the Committee on Appropriations) asking for authority to enlarge the force on his roll, and that the committee unanimously passed a resolution declaring that they would authorize or recommend no additional appropriation, but would stand by the law as it was. Mr. Polk was notified of this. Yet in the face of that resolution he goes to work and commits these crimes which have been fixed upon him, one by one, by those who have preceded me in this discussion. That evidence of Mr. McMAHON is as follows:

The Committee of Accounts was organized about the 1st or 2d day of November. As soon as it was organized, or shortly afterward, Colonel Polk appeared before us and stated that he had not a sufficient force; that he had been around to the different rooms, that valuable property was missing, and that he could not get along without more force than he had; that it was needed not only for the protection of the property, but for the proper running of the House; and he said he wanted to know in advance what he could depend upon from the Committee of Accounts. This, I suppose, must have been in the first week in November. We talked about the matter in a joking way, the chairman intimating that the more employes there were to look after the property the more property there would probably be missing. We generally require parties to leave the room before we take action on any matter, unless it is merely formal, and Mr. Polk left the room, and after he left I offered a resolution in about these words:

"Resolved, That the chairman be instructed to inform Colonel Polk that so far as the Committee of Accounts is concerned he can expect nothing from it in the way of allowances except what the law authorizes."

We had been looking at the statutes, and I, as a "new broom," felt that the best way was to follow the law strictly, especially in money matters. That resolution was agreed to by the committee unanimously, and, as I learned subsequently, was communicated by the chairman to Colonel Polk. We told him that if he wanted any increase of force he must seek it from that committee which had increased the force of the House, the Committee on Appropriations; that we could not take the responsibility of making an increase, and, for my own part, I had always thought that the force was sufficient, and I still think so.

There is no pretense, there can be none, that Mr. Polk acted in this matter innocently or honestly.

He was notified by the Committee of Accounts that he must call a halt, as early as the 2d or 3d of November. In the face of that he tramples on the statute-book of the country and he tramples on the resolution of the Committee of Accounts. He goes on in disregard of law and puts those men in the service of the House—not on the roll, but in the service of the House. You will find by reference to his testimony on page 127, when he was asked why he violated the law in reference to the three riding pages, that he said he did not think the gentleman who framed the law knew anything about the pages or the necessities of the case. Here is his testimony:

By Mr. COX:

Question. The statute explicitly provides for three riding pages on the regular list; how, then, can you say that you are authorized to put other people in their places and then insist upon their being retained as extra force because of the necessity?

Answer. The law simply says three of whom shall be riding pages. Q. Yes; but if you, as the officer in charge, say that certain pages shall be the riding pages, that brings them within the statute, does it not?

A. Well, I think it is impossible to do the work with that force. The gentleman who framed that law probably knew nothing about the management of the pages of the House or the necessities of the case. Twenty-eight pages are not enough.

It may be true, sir; it is the judgment of a democrat on the last democratic House, and I am not going to quarrel with him about it. But I am not arraigning Mr. Polk for that. True, he says you democrats who served in the Forty-fourth Congress had not sense enough to get up a page roll for the House; yet you sit here and pretend you are able to legislate for the interest of forty-five millions of people!

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, these riding-pages I have alluded to are required by law to be three of the twenty-eight provided by statute. These young men were not on any roll at all. They were left off the regular roll and had to take their chance of getting an appropriation through the House to pay them for services they have rendered because Mr. Polk refused to obey the law and put them on the roll, as he was required by the statute to do.

But there is another thing which Mr. Polk did, and I do not know but the gentlemen on the democratic side of the House may be pleased with it: Mr. Polk agreed, before he was elected to the office of Doorkeeper, that he would divide among the "bummers" and "dead-beats" he had working up his cause the offices in his department. He promised them that he would reward them with offices, and then if there was anything left, the balance of the patronage you gentlemen on the democratic side might have. He said the services of his friends, if they came from Patagonia, were too valuable to be forgotten, and he would remember them when he came into his little kingdom. Then if there was anything left from the table of this lord, who when he was once elected had got a "corner on Congress" in the matter of appointments, he graciously proposed that the democratic majority of the House might "farm out" the balance of the fragments among themselves. [Laughter.] I call attention to the evidence on page 26. I will incorporate that part I have alluded to in my remarks. Here it is:

In my last I may have used expressions that would lead our Washington friends to believe their chances for places would rest on the will of their Representatives. In their case, sir, I don't care if they hail from Patagonia, their services are too valuable to be forgotten. They can rely upon me. I shall just appoint whom I please, and divide up the remainder fairly among my democratic friends. I have but few promises to fulfill; that is to say, provided I am elected. I don't feel scared a bit, but believe the elements are at work to elect me.

Ah! this sort of reform caused all the trouble. There was only a certain amount of patronage to be distributed and he had agreed with his "bummers" and "dead-beats," of whom Silver was the chief among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely, that he would put them into office. He agreed that he would give each of them an office, and then you democratic members, who on the spoils theory were the rightful lords of the offices, might have the paltry drippings which were left. When he had done that, when he had got the offices all full and the democratic members of Congress came around hunting for places for their men the natural and logical result was he had so many employes that each was tumbling over the other and every member who went about the House looking after an office for his friend was tumbling over the horde already employed. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JAMES. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, this book which I hold in my hand entitled Testimony taken by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in the investigation of charges against John W. Polk, Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, contains what Horace Greeley would have called "mighty interesting reading." It is a book, I trust, which will not be forgotten even when this discussion has passed away. It is the reading of this book somewhat fully which has led me to attempt to present a phase of this case to which not much reference has been made; for the book shows the tremendous struggle that the great democratic party has passed through in grappling with the administration of a single branch of the Government not larger than many bureaus in the Departments. It is a striking comment on the capacity of that great party which is early and late urging upon the American people that to it shall be intrusted all the destinies of the Republic. [Laughter.]

The Doorkeeper of the House, Colonel Polk, is the creature of his party; what he is his party made him, and what we now see is the spectacle of his party seeking a scapegoat upon whom to visit the sins of the party. [Laughter.]

The Doorkeeper came into the House, as he says in his statement before the committee, at an unfortunate time for his peace and comfort. [Laughter.] And in giving the reason why there was this lack of peace and why this discomfort centered about him, the Doorkeeper, in a very appropriate brief which he has submitted to the committee, says that he was embarrassed by the "small amount of Federal patronage in the gift of the democratic party, there being but about two hundred subordinates, one-half of whom are in the Doorkeeper's department of the House." It is a key to the troubles which gathered about and beleaguered this man.

The democratic party, Mr. Speaker, failed in the national election of 1876 to secure the Presidency. [Laughter.] It failed to secure the rewards which would have followed from the election of its candidate in the patronage of the Government, and the only place in Washington which any hungry expectant could cast hopeful eyes upon was the Doorkeeper's force of one hundred men.

Mr. WRIGHT rose.

Mr. HALE. I cannot yield.

And when the Forty-fifth Congress, Mr. Speaker, assembled in October the democratic party was represented fully in the crowd that gathered in Washington and besieged the Doorkeeper. Every class of the able-bodied democracy was here in force. The voter who in the fall elections gravitated between the shore of Kentucky and Indiana with no bigotry as to where his vote was cast was found in this throng that set toward Washington. The repeaters of New York and the bawled repeaters of Cincinnati swelled the multitude. The bulldozer from the South was here. The Texan borderer, who had passed his life in maintaining the credit of the flag on the Rio Grande by prompt reprisals on Mexico, was here. The expert from Ohio, who was taken from the flouring-mill and developed here into an expert in printing, came with others. The man who loafed about the House seeking a "soft place" where he would have plenty of pay and nothing to do was counted in. The man who—I think at page 137 of the report—says he has staid here until this time, although turned out because he had no money to get home, was along; all of these went to swell the army of office-seekers that gathered in Washington, and the set of the crowd was to the Doorkeeper's office.

Now, is it much wonder, Mr. Speaker, that Colonel Polk lost his head? Nay, the trouble went further than this. He might have retired to his room and closed his door and refused to listen to the petitions of the hungry throng of mendicants that gathered on the outside. But this refuge was not left to him. Deeper than the cries of the eager crowd about him lay the root of all his woes. There was no man in that hungry company who had not some Representative whom he could call upon to open the door when the Doorkeeper sought to shut himself up. I have been interested in watching this crowd which has assembled about this House from day to day, waiting for something to turn up in the Doorkeeper's office. The habits and life of those who go to make it up are not difficult to guess at. My friend from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] characterized the portion of them belonging to his own State as "Ohio dead beats." It was a throng evidently like that described by a late English novelist, who says of one of his characters that "to meet him was to know him, to know him was to drink with him, and to drink with him was unfortunately to pay for him." [Laughter.]

The Doorkeeper could not have taken care of one-fifth part of them, even if they had not been backed by their Representatives. How they were backed is found in this book, which shows that all the supplications, all the entreaties for office were given importance and force by the participation of the entire party. Why, sir, this book is full of this. On page 146 one of the witnesses says:

Before the 1st of November Mr. Donovan sent for me, and wanted to know where did I come from. I told him I came from Maryland. He wanted to know what congressional district, and I told him I came from the fifth. Said he, "Who is the member?" I told him Hon. Mr. HENKLE. "Then," said he, "you men that is employed about this building, the matter of your continuance depends upon the Congressmen of your districts."

The whole matter seems to have been sent to the delegations, as was stated yesterday by my colleague [Mr. FRYE] in his pungent comments on the case of the New England appointments. The delegations were invited to send their men and the whole thing was thrown upon them. The Doorkeeper, the creature of his party, took the voice of his party as to his course.

I turn now to page 129. Here I find a Mr. Rogers seeking an appointment from the Doorkeeper, and his manner of seeking it was to marshal his party at his back, and the demand that was made upon the Doorkeeper for a good place, as is said in some part of the testimony, "one which had not much work to do but good remuneration," had no potency whatever from the mouth of Mr. Rogers. But the Doorkeeper was unable to resist the pressure of the document that was presented to him setting forth the qualifications of Mr. Rogers as follows:

In view of the very valuable services he has rendered the party during the past two years in Indiana, Ohio, and Illinois, that you assign him to as remunerative a position as possible.

"Remunerative" being in italics. This demand is indorsed by Senator McDONALD of Indiana, by Senator VOORHEES of Indiana, by three, four, five, or six members from Indiana, and others from Ohio, winding up with Governor WALKER, from Virginia.

I was curious to see what kind of man this was that the magnates of the democratic party were crowding on to this House and turning over to the Doorkeeper; and so I turned back a little to get the record of this man and see what he had done in the great campaigns of Indiana and Ohio. I find upon page 115 the following easy reading. The questions are addressed to Colonel Polk:

Question. Is not Mr. Rogers an appointment of the Post here?

Answer. No, sir.

Q. Was he not appointed through Mr. Hutchins?

A. Partly.

Q. Is he Mr. Hutchins's appointment?

A. No, sir.

That is all right. I do not know why Mr. Hutchins had not as much right to be heard as anybody; but he goes on to say:

The very night of the caucus, after the caucus nominations were made at Willard's Hotel, a great many gentlemen, I don't know how many, came to me and asked me to appoint Mr. Rogers. I had never seen Mr. Rogers until I saw him there at the piano, singing, and he sang a good song. The Ohio democrats were here in strength at that time, and they claimed that Rogers had given them material aid in their canvass by his singing. I remember it was stated to me that he could sing to ten thousand people in the open air. A great many members of Congress and others asked me to appoint him, and among them Mr. Hutchins, of the Post. Then there was presented to me an application to appoint Mr. Rogers, with a great many names, I don't remember how many, but I know that there were a great many leading prominent democratic names on it.

Mr. Speaker, that is a case which goes to the bottom of this whole Doorkeeper question. It shows the raid that the party made on that officer; the demands made to put men upon his roll; the demands made to increase the force; the demands made for remunerative places, in which the leading members of the party all joined. Now, let us go to the Alabama "quota," as my colleague called it yesterday, on page 251. Mr. Polk sent to the Alabama delegation this notice:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., October 31, 1877.

DEAR SIR: All appointments in the Doorkeeper's department, except those made by myself, will expire with the close of this day.

I herewith submit to your delegation a list of the places apportioned to your State. Please give me the names of the persons you desire me to fill them with, and I will appoint and assign to duty.

Very respectfully,

JNO. W. POLK.

Doorkeeper House of Representatives.

HON. W. H. FORNEY,
Chairman Alabama Delegation.

Then follows a list of the men, four in number, whom the delegation could dictate, two messengers, two laborers, and one page.

The Alabama delegation do not seem to have been delayed in attending to this matter by business affecting the country generally; they were not so preoccupied by the affairs of their constituents or so engrossed in the great questions coming up that they delayed or postponed action in the matter, for on the following day, November 1, I find this reply:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., November 1, 1877.

SIR: In reply to your late favor, I am directed by the delegation from Alabama to recommend the following persons, namely: annual messenger, Phil. D. Sayre; session messenger, Joseph Baumer; laborer, Thomas W. Steele; laborer, Albert P. Wood; page, Colin Lindsay.

I am, dear sir, your obedient servant,

WM. H. FORNEY.

Colonel JNO. W. POLK,
Doorkeeper House of Representatives.

And yet, after following up what has been done here, the majority report, instead of putting the responsibility where it belongs, instead of attributing it to the ineradicable difficulty on the part of the democratic party to wisely administer this department of the Government, makes the Doorkeeper the scape-goat in order to save his party and put the punishment upon him. Whatever the result may be of our action in the Doorkeeper's case, he sinks out of the controversy compared with the other considerations shown in this book of testimony, taken by a democratic committee, and that is the demonstrated inability of the party to administer any branch of the Government. I say that the Doorkeeper sinks into insignificance, and for that reason I find fault, as I think I have reason to do, with the report of the majority of the committee. Why, it is a report which comes to us upon civil-service reform, a subject which we have heard much about of late years, when so many efforts have been made to explore the hidden causes of corruption, malfeasance, and misfeasance in office. Now, all the discussion I have heard upon the subject has been based upon the foundation idea that in some way civil-service reform must check the abuses occasioned by the influences which control patronage. That is the sum and substance of it. It is for that purpose that commissions are appointed, boards constituted, and rules promulgated to cut off the undue influences of Senators and members and politicians. The civil-service reformer does not content himself with finding fault with the men who may have been appointed; he lays the ax to the root of the tree, and he seeks to destroy the influences which control the appointment.

But I do not find anything in the report proposing that anything shall be done that shall in the future prevent such scenes as the one now before us and such transactions as we have heard of and seen during this Congress. Why, sir, there is nothing said here about the influences which induced the Doorkeeper to do what he has done; there is no attempt found in it to remove the evil; but the fault is throughout laid upon the Doorkeeper. That has not been our example or our instructions heretofore. In cases where wrong appointments are made by the executive branch of the Government, nobody talks of beheading the Secretary or impeaching the President; but it is sought to prevent improper influences of Congressmen by keeping them away from the Departments and letting them only be received when sent for.

But here, when a democratic Doorkeeper has been guilty of infraction of law and scandal has thereby been brought upon the country, the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service labor in travail for week after week and finally bring forth a simple resolution "that the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and the same is hereby, declared vacant."

The whole punishment is brought down upon the head of the Doorkeeper. I have reason to find fault with the report of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform, and the gentlemen who made it, that they have narrowed this issue as it has never been narrowed in any other case.

It cannot be possible that civil-service reform has exhausted itself in other quarters and that no attempt is to be made here except to turn out a man who was driven and driven and driven by his party to do what he did. Is it possible that there is no balm in Gilead? Has civil-service reform exhausted itself so that all that can now be done is to turn out an officer, letting the influences remain? I say I have reason to find fault with this report that it has not gone wider and deeper.

No, Mr. Speaker, I decline to accept the conclusion of the report of the majority of the committee. It has left out the essential part that should have been submitted to the House. Moreover, the responsibility in this matter lies with the other side of the House. As I said in the beginning, the Doorkeeper, whatever he is, is what he has been made by his party. You cannot by expelling him make him the scapegoat for all the sins of his party. For one I decline to be the instrument of a portion of that side of the House, who, as is shown by this report, do not mean to reform in the future, have made no provision for it, but who simply desire that a new deal shall be had; that the old Doorkeeper shall be kicked out and that in a democratic caucus and under democratic auspices another Doorkeeper shall be nominated, and then this House shall be treated again to the scenes which we have witnessed here and which we witnessed twice in the Forty-fourth Congress.

I for one decline to be in complicity with any movement of that kind. I do not know whether Colonel Polk, in the administration of his office, has succeeded in extricating himself from the domination of the delegations of his party or not. I have been on no committee that has investigated the subject. I know nothing of the man personally; I never spoke to him half a dozen times in my life. I only know that, running as he does now, made as he is, the responsibility for his being kept here or his being expelled ought to lie at the doors of the men who made him.

Why, sir, if this report had provided and said that, after the system pursued in his party, it had become evident that it was impossible for a democratic caucus to nominate and force through a Doorkeeper who would obey the law, and therefore the committee recommended that there should be no democratic caucus, but that the whole matter should be thrown into the House, and this side of the House as well as that side, without caucus dictation, should have a voice in deciding who would be our officer in the future, then I might feel differently. But I cannot forget the fable of the suffering fox and the gorged swarm that gathered about him. If we aid the otherside to expel Mr. Polk and elect a new man, what guarantee have we that we will not be treated again to the performances with which every new democratic Doorkeeper has regaled the House since it got possession here in 1875?

I want no new experiments in this direction, and shall take no part in voting Colonel Polk either in or out, but leave the responsibility where it belongs.

Mr. Speaker, one would think, from some of the exhibitions which we have had here, that there would be a modesty on the part of our friends on the other side in setting up as reformers. This book discloses a party that is ever and always talking about economy; but it is an economy, when they control the offices, that multiplies places, that increases salaries, that pays no more attention to the appropriations that are made than to the wind that blows. It is a party that claims to be a reform party; yet everything that kills reform is found in these pages.

It is a party that claims to be patriotic, to be the friend of the soldiers. But, as my colleague [Mr. FRYE] instanced yesterday, it searches the country all over and cannot find democratic crippled soldiers enough to fill a roll of only fourteen men, and so puts on outsiders. There has been nothing like it told either in poetry or in history or in the mimicry of the stage. Falstaff as a soldier, Christopher Sly as a monarch, Nick Bottom as a lover, Dundreary as a philosopher, Mulberry Sellers as a capitalist, Cronin as a presidential elector, none of these, all of these, cuts any such figure as the democratic party cuts masquerading before the country as a civil-service reform party and demonstrating itself as incapable of administering any branch of our Government, no matter how small.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BAKER.]

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I send to the Clerk's desk a couple of amendments which I desire to offer to the substitute moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York sends to the desk two amendments, which will be read as a part of his remarks and for the information of the House; and he gives notice that if he has the opportunity he will move those amendments to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.]

The first amendment was to insert after the words "in some instances," in the first paragraph of the preamble of the substitute, the words, "at the earnest solicitation of certain democratic members of this House."

The second amendment was to add to the first resolution the following:

And in so doing he is instructed to disregard in the future the solicitations of democratic members who have heretofore urged him to place upon the soldiers' roll other than disabled soldiers.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask that the preamble and resolution be read with my amendments incorporated.

The preamble, as proposed to be amended, was read, as follows:

Whereas neither the majority nor the minority of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to whom was referred the charges against John W. Polk, Doorkeeper of this House, have found or reported that said Polk has been guilty of any corruption in the administration of said office, but have found and reported that he has in some instances, at the earnest solicitation of certain democratic members of this House, placed upon the rolls a greater number of employes than was authorized by law, trusting to the House to ratify said action and provide compensation for said employes, which was in fact done, in part, by the House before any charges were made against said officer.

The resolution, as proposed to be amended, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House it is essential to the proper and economical administration of said office that the number of its employes and the amount of its expenditures should at all times be regulated and controlled by the laws in force when the persons are employed and the expenses incurred, and hence the conduct of said Polk, in making appointments in excess of the number authorized by law and in placing even temporarily, under any pretext, on the soldiers' roll persons not entitled to be there, is hereby disapproved and censured; and that the said officer is hereby ordered and directed to examine and revise the soldiers' roll at the earliest practicable moment, and remove therefrom the names of all persons, if any yet remain, who are not crippled or disabled soldiers; and that he shall hereafter conform strictly to the statute and rules of the House in regard to the employes on said roll; and in so doing he is instructed to disregard, in the future, the solicitations of democratic members of this House who have heretofore urged him to place upon the soldiers' roll other than disabled soldiers.

Mr. EDEN. I understand that these amendments are not formally offered, but only read for information.

The SPEAKER. They are read for information in the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] as part of his remarks, and he gives notice that he will offer them if he has the opportunity. The hour of the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAMES] has expired.

Mr. EDEN. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. If the previous question is seconded will that cut off a vote upon the amendments that have been offered?

The SPEAKER. By the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BAKER?]

Mr. CONGER. Any of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. There is only one amendment before the House, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.]

Mr. FOSTER. Is not that amendable?

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman from New York to offer these amendments.

The SPEAKER. In the five minutes allowed him for debate he had then read for information, and gave notice, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] did yesterday, that if he had the opportunity he would offer them.

Mr. CONGER. Then, if the previous question is seconded, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois and the amendments of the gentleman from New York cannot be offered?

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is pending. The two amendments of the gentleman from New York are not pending.

Mr. CONGER. Then the previous question would cut off the amendments of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. CONGER. Then I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. HALE. The previous question having once been voted down, what reason is there why the amendments of the gentleman from New York are not before the House? Why could not any one offer amendments?

The SPEAKER. Because the Chair stated he would recognize the gentleman from Illinois to demand the previous question at the end of the hour allowed the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JAMES.]

Mr. HALE. But he did not do so until these amendments were offered.

The SPEAKER. They are not yet offered; they are not before the House.

Mr. HALE. Did not the gentleman from New York offer them?

The SPEAKER. He did not. He stated that he would offer them, if he had the opportunity.

Mr. HALE. I yielded to the gentleman for the purpose of allowing him to offer the amendments, and I understood that he did so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had no right to yield for that purpose. The understanding when the gentleman from New York, [Mr.

JAMES,] who controlled the hour, took the floor was that he took it for debate; and the Chair stated distinctly that he admitted the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, and that the Chair would recognize the gentleman from Illinois to demand the previous question at the end of the hour for debate.

Mr. EDEN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. JAMES] will confirm what the Chair states.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois amendable?

The SPEAKER. It will be if the previous question is voted down; not otherwise.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. EDEN. I think we had better have a vote on the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. EDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I believe I now have the floor for an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EDEN. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON.]

Mr. CONGER. I ask a division of the question, so as to have a separate vote upon the two resolutions reported by the majority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote can be had on those resolutions unless the substitute proposed for them should be adopted.

Mr. EDEN. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON.]

Mr. CONGER. I understood the Speaker to state a few moments ago that the previous question had been demanded and that the debate since was subsequent to the previous question, otherwise there could be no reason why the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BAKER,] being on the floor, should not have the right to offer an amendment when the previous question was not pending.

The SPEAKER. The committee made their report. The Chair maintained the right of the committee to have control of the measure until there was a vote of the House adverse to the committee; then the control of the measure, according to the practice, was transferred.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that while the debate was going on amendments could only be cut off by a motion to recommit. Unless the previous question was ordered, how could any member be prevented from offering an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The previous question was demanded, but not sustained. Then, of course, the control of the subject passed from the hands of the gentleman who had demanded the previous question and who was not sustained in his demand.

Mr. CONGER. Then it gave the control of the subject to the opponents of the report.

The SPEAKER. It gave the control to the one who had offered the substitute for report of committee.

Mr. CONGER. For one hour?

Mr. BURCHARD. The Chair does not hold that after the previous question is sustained any gentleman other than the member of the committee reporting the resolution can have the right to occupy an hour. My colleague [Mr. HARRISON] would have that right; but I think the rule expressly provides that no one shall occupy time in debate after the previous question is sustained but the gentleman who reported the pending measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] is the proposer of the substitute.

Mr. EDEN. And I have not been heard on it.

Mr. BURCHARD. That does not come within the rule. The ruling has been that it is not the adoption of the motion for the previous question, but the adoption of a substitute by the House, that transfers the control of the measure to the gentleman moving the substitute. Until the substitute is adopted, the control of the subject, in accordance with usage, is with the gentleman who moves the original resolution.

Mr. EDEN. Gentlemen on the other side had one hour by consent. I do not think they ought to resist our occupying this hour.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am now speaking upon the question of parliamentary right. As a matter of courtesy or fairness I would, of course, have no objection to my colleague having an hour.

Mr. EDEN. The hour was conceded to me without any objection.

Mr. HARRISON. But you are demanding it as a right.

Mr. BURCHARD. So far as the parliamentary rule is concerned, the decision of the former Speaker was in accordance with the point I now make. It will be remembered that on one occasion the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] had control of a measure reported from a committee, and until the substitute was adopted he still had the control. The sustaining of the previous question does not take away the control of a measure from the committee that reports it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause Rule 60 to be read.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that when the vote was taken on the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARRISON,] and his proposition was voted down, I understood the Chair to announce before it was taken if it was voted down the floor would belong to myself. It was voted down, and then this substitute was offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.] The call for the previous question was made at that time. I had the floor and he could not take the floor to call the previous question until my hour had expired. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] was speaking in a part of my hour when he offered that substitute as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is nothing more than the voice of the House. The wish of the House was very manifest to-day, first in the direction of allowing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] to submit his amendment, and next in the direction of allowing an hour's debate so as to allow the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] who originally introduced the proposition of investigation, to be heard. The Chair conformed strictly in his action to the will of the House. The arrangement made this morning by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Cox,] with the Chair, was that if the previous question was sustained then the last hour should be under control of the majority and minority. The gentleman from Ohio assented to that proposition, which the Chair thought to be entirely fair to both sides.

Mr. BURCHARD. That would be an arrangement which would have to be made with my colleague who reported the resolution. If that be so I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is willing to make some arrangement, as the Chair understands.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to state—

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman is not entitled to the floor to make any such arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee; but a member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close the debate: Provided, That where debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed in committee five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer; after which any member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate on the amendment; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to the amendment; and neither the amendment nor an amendment to the amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee: Provided further, That the House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minutes debate has taken place upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at their election, upon the pending amendments only.—Rule 60.

The SPEAKER. The Chair this morning supposed, in asking the gentleman from Ohio to divide the last hour, that he conformed strictly to the rule. The reading of the rule shows he has not the power to award one hour to the gentleman from Illinois, under the circumstances, and he makes haste to correct the error into which he fell.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. It is this—

Mr. BURCHARD. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HOOKER. I have the floor and wish to be heard. When the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the committee, was about to call the previous question this morning the mover of the resolution of investigation, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] rose on the opposite side of the Chamber and insisted he had the right and should have an opportunity to be heard, and the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the committee, did not object to the extension of the time.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. HOOKER. No, he did not; and it was distinctly understood by the opposite side and by this side that the time should be extended for two hours, the one to be controlled by the opposite side and the other by this side. When the gentleman from Illinois was asked whether he yielded to allow his colleague to offer a substitute he did decline that, but he did not object to the extension of time and it was so understood on the opposite side.

Mr. HARRISON. It was not.

Mr. HOOKER. It was understood on this side that an hour should be allowed on each side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was the understanding the time should be divided. The condition of the debate is the majority have had four hours while the minority have had but three.

Mr. HARRISON. A word. [Laughter.] The majority have not had four hours. The last gentleman who spoke [Mr. HALE] spoke in favor of the minority.

Mr. EDEN. But it was in the time of a gentlemen of the majority. He spoke in the time of a member of the committee who acted with the majority.

Mr. HARRISON. I think under the ruling of the Chair I have the right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HARRISON. Has not the Chair ruled it so?

Mr. EDEN. Only that I am not entitled to the floor for debate.

The SPEAKER. The only point in controversy to which the gentleman from Illinois has directed the attention of the Chair is that his colleague [Mr. EDEN] not having reported the proposition, but merely submitted a substitute for it and then having demanded the previous question, is not under the rule entitled to an hour in which to close the debate.

Mr. EDEN. Was it not distinctly understood that I should have an hour?

The SPEAKER. It was; and the Chair is as much to blame as any one in having it so understood.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Chair listen to me one moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON. I made a proposition that if it were agreed to take an additional hour and then have the previous question called, I would make no objection. That was objected to, but I am still willing to make the proposition.

Mr. EDEN. I did not have any understanding at all with my colleague; but it was distinctly understood and stated by the Chair when I rose to demand the previous question that that side was to have an hour to be controlled by the gentleman from New York, and after the previous question was seconded there should be an hour on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that; but being forced to the rule, the Chair states he was in error; and he subsequently recognized and corrected his error. But the Chair thinks the hour ought to be allowed by the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I am willing on my side to yield it.

Mr. THOMPSON. If in order, I will move as the sense of the House that an hour be granted to the gentleman who offers the substitute. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask if it be not understood that the gentleman from Maine spoke on the side of the gentlemen of the minority?

Mr. CALKINS. I think the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is well taken. It was the understanding that there should be an extension of two hours of the time allowed for debate.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Then how came the motion for the previous question? If there was such an understanding nobody knew of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMPSON. I think that fairness requires the motion to be made; not that the rule allows but that the House ought to consent to it.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. Speaker, can we not reach the result by a majority vote? If the House is in favor of yielding to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] one hour, can it not do so by a majority vote?

Mr. HARRISON. Not without giving me my right under the rule to reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks a majority cannot change now the action which has been taken, the main question having been ordered.

Mr. HAZELTON and Mr. SAYLER called for the regular order.

Mr. CALKINS. I raise this point of order, that when the House consented that there should be two hours of debate equally divided that cannot be changed by a majority vote.

The SPEAKER. If the House had agreed that there should be two hours for debate equally divided, then the gentleman from Illinois would have a right to an hour.

Mr. CALKINS. I submit to the House whether that was not the agreement.

Mr. THOMPSON. There has been a mutual understanding to that effect, and having been acted on thus far fairness and good faith require that it should be carried out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entirely concurs with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] that good faith and fair play ought to induce the House to give to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] control of an hour for debate.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that the House extend the time for one hour.

Mr. FRANKLIN. The majority have had two hours more time than the minority. I protest against the vote being taken until we are further heard in behalf of the minority report. Several other gentlemen desire to speak.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that we can reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider has been made and has been laid on the table.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Who was recognized as properly in control of the measure?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] was recognized as controlling the substitute. If the substitute were voted down, then the question would come up on the majority report.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to submit my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] asks consent that there may be one hour allowed to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.]

Mr. CONGER. I object. The gentleman from Illinois moved the previous question—

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. And when the main question was ordered he moved to reconsider the vote ordering the main question and had the motion to reconsider laid on the table. If he tripped himself up let him lie there. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDEN. If the agreement cannot be carried out in good faith let us have a vote.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLYMER. Suppose the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] is voted down, then will not the question be open for amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the motion of the gentleman for the previous question was to cover the entire subject.

Mr. EDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLYMER. That was not my understanding. I supposed if the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] was voted down the question was open for amendment again.

Mr. EDEN. The other side has had two hours more than we have had; but we are ready to vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. When the gentleman from Illinois had the floor he chose to make the motion for the previous question. The House sustained it and ordered the main question. He then moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. That was done. He has exhausted his rights according to his own acknowledgement, and now he cannot complain of his own acts.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to suggest that the gentleman from Illinois only demanded the previous question on the substitute offered by him.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, he demanded the previous question, which, in the manner he demanded it, would cover everything before the House.

Mr. CLYMER. If that be so, then there is no remedy.

Many Members called for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. As I objected to the proposition for further debate—

Mr. ROBBINS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SCALES. I hope we shall have a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan desires to make a proposition which will satisfy both sides.

Mr. CONGER. My proposition is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] be allowed one hour for debate, and that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] be admitted and voted upon. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CARLISLE. I call for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House it is essential to the proper and economical administration of said office that the number of its employees and the amount of its expenditures should at all times be regulated and controlled by the laws in force when the persons are employed and the expenses incurred; and hence the conduct of said Polk in making appointments in excess of the number authorized by law, and in placing, even temporarily, under any pretext, on the soldiers' roll persons not entitled to be there, is hereby disapproved and censured; and that the said officer is hereby ordered and directed to examine and revise the soldiers' roll at the earliest practicable moment, and remove therefrom the names of all persons, if any yet remain, who are not crippled or disabled soldiers; and that he shall hereafter conform strictly to the statute and rules of the House in regard to the employees on said roll.

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform relating to the charges against the Doorkeeper of the House be recommended to that committee, with instructions to inquire into the organization of the employees serving under the Doorkeeper, and to ascertain the number necessary in each branch of that service, and what changes, if any, are demanded to secure greater efficiency and economy in transacting the business of the House under charge of the Doorkeeper; and what further legislation, if any, is required to prevent the employment or payment of any messenger, laborer, or other employee of the Doorkeeper in excess of the number authorized by law; and whether the appointment of laborers under the Doorkeeper should not be discontinued and the duties now performed by the laborers be turned over to a superintendent or janitor, with authority to hire, at the usual and fair price for labor, such persons as may be necessary to do the work required to be done by the laborers now appointed by the Doorkeeper; with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

Mr. BUTLER. There are two separate resolutions upon which we are to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] demands a division.

Mr. CONGER. I did not demand a division between the resolutions and the substitute, but upon the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. If they are reached.

Mr. CONGER. If they are reached; but I do demand a separate vote on the resolutions and the preamble.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's privilege.

Mr. CONGER. I have no desire for a separate vote upon the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands a division between the preamble and the resolutions. The first question will be upon the adoption of the resolutions which are a substitute for the report of the committee.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 135, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—95.

Aiken,	Clark, Alvah A.	Eden,	Giddings,
Banning,	Clark of Missouri,	Elam,	Goode,
Blackburn,	Cook,	Ellis,	Gunter,
Bliss,	Cravens,	Ewing,	Hardenbergh,
Boone,	Crittenden,	Felton,	Harris, Henry R.
Bright,	Culberson,	Finley,	Harris, John T.
Butler,	Davidson,	Forney,	Hartridge,
Calwell,	Davis, Joseph J.	Franklin,	Hatcher,
Caldwell, John W.	Dibrell,	Garth,	Henry,
Carlisle,	Dickey,	Gause,	Herbert,
Chalmers,	Durham,	Gibson,	Hewitt, Abram S.

Jewitt, G. W.
Hooker,
House,
Huntton,
Jones, Frank
Jones, James T.
Jorgensen,
Kenna,
Knapp,
Knott,
Landers,
Ligon,
Luttrell,

Manning,
Martin,
Money,
Morrison,
Muldrow,
Muller,
Patterson, T. M.
Phelps,
Quinn,
Reagan,
Riddle,
Robbins,
Ross,

Saylor,
Scales,
Schleicher,
Shelley,
Singleton,
Slemmons,
Smalls,
Smith, William E.
Sparks,
Swann,
Throckmorton,
Townshend, R. W.
Tucker,

Vance,
Waddell,
Welch,
Whitthorne,
Wigginton,
Williams, A. S.
Williams, Jere N.
Willis, Albert S.
Wilson,
Wood,
Yeates,
Young.

NAYS—135.

Acklen,
Aldrich,
Bacon,
Bagley,
Baker, John H.
Baker, William H.
Ballou,
Banks,
Bayne,
Bell,
Bicknell,
Blount,
Bouck,
Boyd,
Bragg,
Brentano,
Brewer,
Bridges,
Briggs,
Brooklyn,
Buckner,
Bundy,
Burchard,
Burdick,
Calkins,
Campbell,
Candler,
Cannon,
Caswell,
Chaffin,
Clark, Rush
Clymer,
Cobb,
Cole,

Conger,
Cox, Jacob D.
Cox, Samuel S.
Crapo,
Cummings,
Cutler,
Davis, Horace
Deering,
Denison,
Dunnell,
Eames,
Eickhoff,
Evins, John H.
Fort,
Frye,
Glover,
Hanna,
Harmer,
Harris, Benj. W.
Harrison,
Hartzell,
Haskell,
Hazelton,
Hendee,
Henderson,
Henkle,
Hiscock,
Hubbell,
Hungerford,
Hunter,
Itner,
James,
Jones, John S.
Joyce,

Keifer,
Keightley,
Kelley,
Killing,
Lathrop,
Lindsey,
Lockwood,
Loring,
Lynde,
Mackey,
Maish,
Marsh,
McCook,
McGowan,
McKinley,
Mitchell,
Monroe,
Morgan,
Neal,
Norcross,
O'Neill,
Patterson, G. W.
Peddie,
Phillips,
Potter,
Pound,
Price,
Pugh,
Randolph,
Rea,
Reed,
Robertson,
Robinson, G. D.
Robinson, M. S.

Ryan,
Sampson,
Sapp,
Sexton,
Shallenberger,
Sinickson,
Springer,
Starrin,
Stenger,
Stone, John W.
Strait,
Thompson,
Tipton,
Townsend, Amos
Townsend, M. I.
Turner,
Turney,
Van Vorhes,
Wait,
Walker,
Walsh,
Ward,
Warner,
White, Harry
White, Michael D.
Williams, Andrew
Williams, C. G.
Williams, James
Williams, Richard
Willis, Benj. A.
Willits,
Wren,
Wright.

NOT VOTING—61.

Atkins,
Beebe,
Benedict,
Blasbee,
Blair,
Bland,
Browne,
Cain,
Caldwell, W. P.
Camp,
Chittenden,
Clark of Kentucky,
Collins,
Covert,
Danford,
Dean,

Douglas,
Dwight,
Ellsworth,
Errett,
Evans, I. Newton
Evans, James L.
Foster,
Freeman,
Fuller,
Gardner,
Garfield,
Hale,
Hamilton,
Hart,
Hayes,
Humphrey,

Ketcham,
Kimmel,
Lapham,
Mayham,
McKenzie,
McMahon,
Metcalf,
Mills,
Morse,
Oliver,
Overton,
Page,
Pollard,
Powers,
Pridemore,
Rainey,

Reilly,
Rice, Americus V.
Rice, William W.
Roberts,
Smith, A. Herr
Southard,
Steele,
Stephens,
Stewart,
Stone, Joseph C.
Thornburgh,
Veeder,
Watson.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MACKEY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. EVANS, but if he were present he would vote "no," and therefore I vote "no."

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. STEELE, is paired with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr.

HART, is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. I am paired upon this question with Mr. RICE, of Ohio. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. YOUNG. My colleague, Mr. CALDWELL, is paired with Mr.

FREEMAN. If present, Mr. CALDWELL would have voted "ay" and Mr.

FREEMAN "no."

Mr. BEEBE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. LAPHAM. I am not advised how he would vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should most unhesitatingly vote "ay."

Mr. MAYHAM. I am paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin,

Mr. HUMPHREY.

Mr. CANDLER. My colleague, Mr. STEPHENS, is absent because of sickness. He is paired upon this question with Mr. CHITTENDEN. If

Mr. STEPHENS were present, he would vote "ay" and Mr. CHITTENDEN

"no."

Mr. BRIDGES. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York, on several questions, but not on this, and therefore I vote "no." If he were here, he would vote the same way.

Mr. HISCOCK. My colleagues, Mr. BENEDICT and Mr. CAMP, are paired. If present, Mr. BENEDICT would vote "ay" and Mr. CAMP would vote "no."

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My colleague, Mr. PRIDEMORE, is detained at home by the illness of his wife.

Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania. I am paired on this question with Mr. SHELLEY, of Alabama.

Mr. BROWNE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HAMILTON. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. SAMPSON. My colleague, Mr. OLIVER, is paired with Mr.

MCKENZIE, of Kentucky. If Mr. OLIVER were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. ATKINS, of Tennessee, who I understand is still sick. If he were here, I would vote "no," and I understand that he would vote "ay."

Mr. WATSON. I am paired with Mr. DOUGLAS, of Virginia, on all political questions.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague, Mr. FREEMAN, is paired with Mr.

CALDWELL, of Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. That has already been announced.

Mr. MORSE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. RICE.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The question recurred upon the preamble of the substitute, and it was not adopted.

The question then recurred upon the resolutions reported from the Committee on Civil-Service Reform.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be and hereby is, declared vacant; and Further resolved, That, until the appointment of a new Doorkeeper, the duties of the office be, and hereby are, devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to offer a substitute.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Let us finish one thing at a time.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that it be read for information.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the question is upon the resolutions which have been read.

Mr. CONGER. I call for a division of that question, and ask that the vote be first taken on the resolution declaring the office of Door-keeper vacant.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to demand that.

Mr. LUTTRELL. And upon that question I call for the yeas and

nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 80, not voting 72, as follows:

YEAS—139.

Acklen,
Aldrich,
Bacon,
Bagley,
Baker, John H.
Baker, William H.
Ballou,
Banks,
Bayne,
Bell,
Bicknell,
Blount,
Bouck,
Boyd,
Bragg,
Brentano,
Brewer,
Bridges,
Briggs,
Brooklyn,
Buckner,
Bundy,
Burchard,
Burdick,
Campbell,
Candler,
Cannon,
Caswell,
Chittenden,
Clark, Alvah A.
Clark, Rush
Clymer,
Cobb,
Cole,
Conger,

Cox, Jacob D.
Cox, Samuel S.
Cummings,
Cutler,
Deering,
Denison,
Dunnell,
Eames,
Eickhoff,
Evans, James L.
Evins, John H.
Fort,
Frye,
Glover,
Hanna,
Hardenbergh,
Harmer,
Harris, Benj. W.
Harrison,
Hartzell,
Haskell,
Hazelton,
Hendee,
Henderson,
Henkle,
Hewitt, Abram S.
Hiscock,
Hubbell,
Hunter,
Hungerford,
Itner,
James,
Jones, John S.
Joyce,
Keifer,

Keightley
Kelley,
Killing,
Landers,
Lathrop,
Lindsey,
Lockwood,
Loring,
Lynde,
Mackey,
Maish,
Marsh,
McCook,
McGowan,
McKinley,
Mitchell,
Monroe,
Morgan,
Neal,
Norcross,
O'Neill,
Patterson, G. W.
Patterson, T. M.
Peddie,
Phillips,
Pollard,
Potter,
Pound,
Price,
Pugh,
Randolph,
Rea,
Reed,
Robertson,

Robinson, G. D.
Robinson, M. S.
Ross,
Ryan,
Sampson,
Sapp,
Shallenberger,
Sinickson,
Springer,
Starrin,
Stenger,
Stone, John W.
Strait,
Thompson,
Townsend, Amos
Townsend, M. I.
Turner,
Turney,
Wait,
Walker,
Walsh,
Ward,
Warner,
White, Harry
White, Michael D.
Williams, Andrew
Williams, C. G.
Williams, James
Williams, Richard
Willis, Benj. A.
Willits,
Wood,
Wren,
Wright.

NAYS—80.

Aiken,
Banning,
Blackburn,
Bliss,
Boone,
Bright,
Cabell,
Garth,
Gause,
Gibson,
Giddings,
Goode,
Gunter,
Harris, Henry R.
Harris, John T.
Hartridge,
Hatcher,
Henry,
Herbert,
Hewitt, G. W.
Hooker,
Durham,

Eden,
Elam,
Ellis,
Ewing,
Fornely,
Franklin,
Garth,
Gause,
Gibson,
Giddings,
Goode,
Gunter,
Harris, Henry R.
Harris, John T.
Hartridge,
Hatcher,
Henry,
Herbert,
Hewitt, G. W.
Hooker,
Durham,

House,
Huntton,
Jones, James T.
Jorgensen,
Kenna,
Kimmel,
Knapp,
Knott,
Ligon,
Luttrell,
Manning,
Martin,
Money,
Morrison,
Muldrow,
Quinn,
Reagan,
Riddle,
Robbins,
Saylor,

Scales,
Shelley,
Singleton,
Slemmons,
Smith, William E.
Sparks,
Swann,
Throckmorton,
Townshend, R. W.
Tucker,
Vance,
Waddell,
Welch,
Whitthorne,
Wigginton,
Williams, Jere N.
Willis, Albert S.
Wilson,
Yeates,
Young.

NOT VOTING—72.

Atkins,
Camp,
Benedict,
Blasbee,
Blair,
Bland,
Boyd,
Browne,
Butler,
Cain,
Caldwell, W. P.

Calkins,
Camp,
Clark of Kentucky,
Collins,
Covert,
Crapo,
Danford,
Davis, Horace
Dean,
Douglas,
Dwight,

Ellsworth,
Errett,
Evans, I. Newton
Felton,
Finley,
Foster,
Freeman,
Fuller,
Gardner,
Garfield,
Hale,

Hamilton,
Hart,
Hayes,
Humphrey,
Jones, Frank
Ketcham,
Lapham,
Mayham,
McKenzie,
McMahon,
Metcalf,

Mills,	Pridemore,	Sexton,	Stone, Joseph C.
Morse,	Rainey,	Smalls,	Thornburgh,
Muller,	Reilly,	Smith, A. Herr	Tipton,
Oliver,	Rice, Americus V.	Southard,	Van Vorhes,
Overton,	Rice, William W.	Steele,	Veeder,
Page,	Roberts,	Stephens,	Watson,
Powers,	Schleicher,	Stewart,	Williams.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:
Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. I am paired on this question with General RICE, of Ohio, who is absent on account of sickness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. FINLEY. I am paired with Mr. CALKINS, of Indiana.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Mr. DOUGLAS, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. WATSON, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLISS. I am paired with my colleague, Judge LAPHAM.

Mr. HISCOCK. My colleagues, Mr. CAMP and Mr. BENEDICT, are paired.

Mr. SEXTON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. FULLER. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. VAN VORHES. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SOUTHARD, who is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. ATKINS. If he were here, I should vote "ay" and he would vote "no."

Mr. WATSON. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. DOUGLAS, of Virginia. If he were here, I would vote "ay" on this question.

Mr. SAMPSON. My colleague, Mr. OLIVER, is paired with Mr. MCKENZIE, of Kentucky. If Mr. OLIVER were here, he would vote "ay."

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleagues, Mr. OVERTON and Mr. REILLY, are paired. If Mr. OVERTON were here, he would vote "ay."

Mr. BROWNE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HAMILTON, on this and all other questions.

Mr. MAYHAM. I am paired with Mr. HUMPHREY, of Wisconsin.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. HARRISON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House of Representatives to print 25,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the subject of forestry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2287) authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation, submission, and opening of bids for contracts under the War Department.

BILLS APPROVED.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 142) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol, along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 3846) to provide for the deficiencies in the miscellaneous funds of the Senate and of the House of Representatives; and

An act (H. R. No. 2371) to amend an act entitled "An act for the support of the government for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes."

CHARGES AGAINST THE DOORKEEPER.

The question then recurred upon the second resolution reported by the Committee on Civil-Service Reform; which was read, as follows:

Further resolved, That until the appointment of a new Doorkeeper the duties of the office be, and hereby are, devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 115, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—122.

Acklen,	Clymer,	Gause,	Knott,
Banning,	Cobb,	Giddings,	Landers,
Bell,	Cox, Jacob D.	Glover,	Ligon,
Benedict,	Cox, Samuel S.	Goode,	Lockwood,
Bicknell,	Crittenden,	Hardenbergh,	Lynde,
Blackburn,	Cutler,	Harris, Henry R.	Mackey,
Bliss,	Davidson,	Harris, John T.	Maish,
Blount,	Davis, Joseph J.	Harrison,	Manning,
Boone,	Dibrell,	Hartbridge,	Martin,
Bouck,	Dickey,	Hartzell,	Mayham,
Bragg,	Durham,	Hatcher,	McMabon,
Bright,	Eden,	Hewitt, Abram S.	Mills,
Buckner,	Eickhoff,	Howitt, G. W.	Money,
Calwell,	Elam,	Hooker,	Morgan,
Caldwell, John W.	Evins, John H.	House,	Morrison,
Candler,	Finley,	Hunton,	Morse,
Carlisle,	Forney,	Jones, Frank	Muldrow,
Chalmers,	Franklin,	Jones, James T.	Muller,
Clark, Alvah A.	Garth,	Kenna,	Neal,
Clarke of Kentucky,		Kimmel,	Patterson, T. M.
Clark of Missouri,		Knapp,	Phelps,

Potter,
Quinn,
Rea,
Reagan,
Riddle,
Robbins,
Roberts,
Robertson,
Ross,
Saylor,

Scales,
Schleicher,
Singleten,
Stemons,
Smith, William E.
Sparks,
Springer,
Stenger,
Swann,
Throckmorton,

Townshend, R. W.
Tucker,
Turner,
Turney,
Vance,
Wadocell,
Walsh,
Warner,
Whitthorne,
Williams, A. S.

Williams, James
Williams, Jere N.
Willis, A. S.
Willis, Benj. A.
Wilson,
Wood,
Wright,
Yeates,

NAYS—115.

Aiken,
Aldrich,
Bacon,
Bagley,
Baker, John H.
Baker, William H.
Ballou,
Banks,
Bayne,
Bisbee,
Brentano,
Brewer,
Briggs,
Brogden,
Bundy,
Burchard,
Burdick,
Butler,
Cain,
Calkins,
Campbell,
Canon,
Casswell,
Chittenden,
Claffin,
Clark, Rush
Cole,
Conger,
Cook,

Crapo,
Cravens,
Culberson,
Cummings,
Davis, Horace
Deering,
Denison,
Dunnell,
Eames,
Ellis,
Errett,
Evans, James L.
Foster,
Frye,
Gunter,
Hale,
Hanna,
Harmer,
Harris, Benj. W.
Haskell,
Hazelton,
Hendee,
Henderson,
Henry,
Hiscock,
Hubbell,
Hungerford,
Hunter,
Ittner,

Jones, John S.
Jorgensen,
Joyce,
Keifer,
Keightley,
Killingier,
Lathrop,
Lindsey,
Loring,
Luttrell,
Marsh,
McCook,
McGowan,
McKinley,
Metcalfe,
Mitchell,
Monroe,
Norcross,
O'Neill,
Page,
Patterson, G. W.
Peddie,
Phillips,
Pollard,
Pound,
Price,
Pugh,
Randolph,
Robinson, G. D.

NOT VOTING—54.

Atkins,
Beebe,
Blair,
Bland,
Boyd,
Bridges,
Browne,
Caldwell, W. P.
Camp,
Collins,
Covert,
Danford,
Dean,
Douglas,

Dwight,
Ellsworth,
Evans, I. Newton
Ewing,
Fort,
Freeman,
Gardner,
Garfield,
Gibson,
Hamilton,
Hart,
Hayes,
Henkle,
Herbert,

Humphrey,
James,
Kelley,
Ketcham,
Lapham,
McKenzie,
Oliver,
Overton,
Powers,
Pridemore,
Rainey,
Reed,
Reilly,
Rice, Americus V.

Robinson, M. S.
Ryan,
Sampson,
Sapp,
Sexton,
Shallenberger,
Sinnickson,
Smalls,
Starin,
Stewart,
Stone, John W.
Strait,
Thompson,
Tipton,
Townsend, Amos
Townsend, M. I.
Wait,
Ward,
Welch,
White, Harry
White, Michael D.
Wigginton,
Williams, Andrew
Williams, C. G.
Williams, Richard
Willits,
Wren,
Young,

So the resolution was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MAYHAM. I am requested to state that on this subject my colleague, Mr. COVERT, is paired with my colleague, Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DWIGHT. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. VAN VORHES. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SOUTHARD, who is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. ATKINS. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. WATSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. DOUGLAS. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. SAMPSON. My colleague, Judge OLIVER, is paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague, Mr. FREEMAN, is paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. CALDWELL would vote "ay" and Mr. FREEMAN "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn. Before the result of the vote was announced—

Mr. HALE. My question of privilege is that the House proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper.

Mr. EDEN. I call for a division on the motion that the House now adjourn.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 117, noes 110.

Mr. HALE. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 121, nays 113, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—121.

Acklen,
Banning,
Bell,
Bicknell,
Blackburn,
Bliss,
Blount,
Boone,
Bouck,
Bragg,

Bright,
Buckner,
Cabell,
Caldwell, John W.
Candler,
Clark, Alvah A.
Clark of Missouri,
Clarke of Kentucky,
Clymer,
Cobb,

Cook,
Cox, Samuel S.
Cravens,
Crittenden,
Culberson,
Cutler,
Davidson,
Dibrell,
Durham,
Eden,

Eickhoff,
Elam,
Ellis,
Evins, John H.
Felton,
Finley,
Forney,
Franklin,
Fuller,
Garth,

Gause,
Giddings,
Glover,
Goode,
Gunter,
Hardenbergh,
Harris, Henry R.
Harris, John T.
Harrison,
Hartbridge,
Hartzell,
Hatchey,
Henkle,
Henry,
Hewitt, Abram S.
Hewitt, G. W.
Hooker,
House,
Huntton,
Jones, Frank
Jones, James T.

Kenna,
Kimmel,
Knapp,
Knot,
Ligon,
Lockwood,
Lynde,
Mackey,
Maish,
Manning,
Martin,
Mayham,
McMahon,
Mills,
Money,
Morgan,
Morrison,
Morse,
Muldrow,
Muller,
Patterson, T. M.

Phelps,
Potter,
Quinn,
Rea,
Reagan,
Riddle,
Robbins,
Roberts,
Robertson,
Ross,
Saylor,
Scales,
Schleicher,
Singleton,
Smith, William E.
Southard,
Sparks,
Springer,
Stenger,
Throckmorton,
Townshend, R. W.

Turner,
Turney,
Vance,
Waddell,
Walsh,
Warner,
Whitthorne,
Wigington,
Williams, A. S.
Williams, James
Williams, Jere N.
Willis, Albert S.
Willis, Benj. A.
Wilson,
Wood,
Wright,
Yeates,
Young.

NAYS—113.

Aiken,
Aldrich,
Bacon,
Bagley,
Baker, John H.
Baker, William H.
Baldou,
Banks,
Bayne,
Bisbee,
Blair,
Boyd,
Brentano,
Brewer,
Briggs,
Brogden,
Bundy,
Burchard,
Burdick,
Butler,
Calkins,
Campbell,
Cannon,
Caswell,
Cladin,
Clark, Rush
Cole,
Conger,
Cox, Jacob D.

Crapo,
Cummings,
Danford,
Davis, Horace
Deering,
Denison,
Dickey,
Dunnell,
Errett,
Evans, James L.
Fort,
Foster,
Frye,
Hale,
Hanna,
Harmer,
Harris, Benj. W.
Haskell,
Hazelton,
Hendee,
Henderson,
Hiscock,
Hubbell,
Hunter,
Hungerford,
Itner,
James,
Jones, John S.
Joyce,

Keifer,
Keightley,
Killinger,
Lathrop,
Lindsey,
Loring,
Luttrell,
Marsh,
McCook,
McGowan,
McKinley,
Metcalfe,
Mitchell,
Monroe,
Neal,
Norcross,
O'Neill,
Page,
Patterson, G. W.
Peddie,
Phillips,
Pollard,
Pound,
Price,
Pugh,
Randolph,
Reed,
Robinson, G. D.
Robinson, M. S.

Ryan,
Sampson,
Sapp,
Sexton,
Shallenberger,
Simickson,
Siemons,
Smalls,
Stewart,
Stone, John W.
Strait,
Thompson,
Tipton,
Townsend, Amos
Townsend, M. I.
Van Vorhes,
Wait,
Ward,
Welch,
White, Harry
White, Michael D.
Williams, Andrew
Williams, C. G.
Williams, Richard
Willits,
Wren.

NOT VOTING—57.

Atkins,
Beebe,
Benedict,
Bland,
Bridges,
Browne,
Cain,
Caldwell, W. P.
Camp,
Carlisle,
Chalmers,
Chittenden,
Collins,
Covert,
Davis, Joseph J.

Dean,
Douglas,
Dwight,
Eames,
Ellsworth,
Evans, I. Newton
Ewing,
Freeman,
Gardner,
Garfield,
Gibson,
Hamilton,
Hart,
Hayes,
Herbert,

Humphrey,
Jorgensen,
Kelley,
Ketcham,
Landers,
Lapham,
McKenzie,
Oliver,
Overton,
Powers,
Pridemore,
Rainey,
Reilly,
Rice, Americus V.
Rice, William W.

Shelley,
Smith, A. Herr
Starin,
Steele,
Stephens,
Stone, Joseph C.
Swann,
Thornburgh,
Tucker,
Veeder,
Walker,
Watson.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. SCALES said: My colleague, Mr. STEELE, is paired with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. EWING. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. GARDINER.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I am paired on this question with Mr. OLIVER. If he were here, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. HALE. On this vote Mr. GARFIELD is paired with Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. WATSON. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. DOUGLAS.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan. If he were here, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. STARIN. I am paired on all political questions with my colleague, Mr. VEEDER.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. ATKINS.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases.

To Mr. LAPHAM, for one week, on account of important business;
To Mr. KIDDER, for twenty days, on account of sickness in his family; and

To Mr. WARNER, for ten days, on account of important business.

C. G. TACHAN.

On motion of Mr. WILLIS, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal of the papers in the case of C. G. Tachan, no adverse report having been made thereon.

FLUSHING BAY, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report relative to the improvement of Flushing Bay, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

STEAMER DON CAMERON.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of officers for payment for losses sustained by the sinking of the steamer Don Cameron; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

DISMISSED OFFICERS, TENTH CAVALRY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting objections to reappointment or reappointment of officers dismissed from the Tenth Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LIEUTENANT THOMAS B. KELLEY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report on House bill No. 3197, for the relief of Lieutenant Thomas B. Kelley; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NEW MILITARY POST, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendation for an appropriation of $60,000 for a new military post in Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LIEUTENANT GEORGE M. WELLS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending an appropriation of $645 to pay First Lieutenant George M. Wells, United States Marine Corps, for the amount due him on account of difference between furlough pay and retired pay; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

And then (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BAYNE: The petition of W. J. Hammond and 140 other iron and tin-plate workers of Pennsylvania, that the duty on tin-terne and tagger's tin-plates and tagger's iron may be made two and a half cents per pound—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BICKNELL: The petition of Stephen S. Cole, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRENTANO: Papers relating to the claim of Beers and others for pay for loss of mules at the Big Horn Crossing—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of Franklin B. Hunt, esq., an attorney at law, and citizens of Wayne County, Indiana, stating that he was, by the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of the Interior, disbarred as an attorney of the Interior Department without having any notice that charges were made against him and without having an opportunity for making a defense; that a hearing and an appeal have been denied him; and asking for an investigation and relief—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of John Donahue, of Michigan, for relief in the matter of forty acres of land patented to him by the United States, and afterward, when he had improved the same and made it a valuable homestead, taken from him as swamp lands under a title from the State—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. COX: The petition of John Hillen, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS, of California: Resolutions of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, relative to silver certificates and the coinage of trade-dollars—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. DEERING: The petition of the publisher of the Howard County (Iowa) Times, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. GARTH: The petition of Hon. George S. Houston, Colonel B. F. Allen, Colonel J. N. Malone, and other citizens of Athens, Alabama, in reference to the male academy at Athens, Alabama—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. GOODE: Papers relating to the Indiana Methodist church claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENKLE: Papers relating to the claim of the trustees of the Washington City Orphan Asylum—to the Committee of Claims. Also, papers relating to the claim of Mary S. Welch—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama: The petition of Hon. N. N. Clements, Colonel W. J. Foster, Colonel H. M. Somerville, Hon. N. H. Brown, Hon. J. M. Martin, and 100 other citizens of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, that such judicious aid be granted the Texas Pacific Railroad as will secure its early completion, and that its eastern terminus be located upon the east bank of the Mississippi River at Vicksburg, and that it be so guarded by restrictions as shall forever compel it to be and remain a competing line from the Atlantic to the Pacific seaboard—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. KENNA: The petition of citizens and workmen of Raymond City, West Virginia, against the passage of the pending tariff bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MILLS: Resolutions of the State Grange of Texas, favoring the repeal of the resumption act, the remonetization of silver, the payment of the national bonds in greenbacks, the repeal of the national-bank law, and the making of greenbacks a legal tender for all debts and dues, private and public, exports and imports—to the same committee.

By Mr. MONROE: The petition of Captain John Whiteford, for compensation for services and expenses during the war—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petitions of S. C. Munson and others; of G. N. Daniels and others; and of T. G. Loomis and others, all citizens of Medina County, Ohio, that there be no reduction of the tariff at the present session of Congress—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. THROCKMORTON: The petition of the bar of Graham, Texas, for the passage of the bill creating a new Federal judicial district in Texas—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama: The petition of Benjamin B. Davis and E. B. Tullis, of Eufaula, Alabama, for the reduction of the duty on earthenware—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 5, 1878.

Prayer by Rev. E. W. MATTHEWS, of Antwerp, Belgium.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3102) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriations for detecting trespass on public lands, and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. M. J. DURHAM of Kentucky, Mr. J. H. BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. J. H. BAKER of Indiana managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 151) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the Society of the Sons of St. George, established at Philadelphia, the sum of $1,440.25 in gold, being the amount paid by said society upon a colossal statue of St. George and the Dragon; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress providing for the completion of the Washington Monument.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 596) to amend section 540, chapter 1, title 13, Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1254) for the relief of John A. Darling.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Annie Schultz, Ann Bartlett, Willis A. Myers, A. W. Knight, and others, citizens of Missouri Valley, Harrison County, Iowa, and the petition of Lucy M. Stonebreaker, Addie Mead, E. Johnston, R. D. Prescott, and others, citizens of Shell Rock, Butler County, Iowa, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of L. W. Bissell, D. F. Cushing, Jr., J. Farnsworth, and others, citizens of Rockingham, Windham County, Vermont, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of John Gilda and others, citizens of Osage County, Kansas, praying for an appropriation to improve the navigation of the Osage River in Missouri and Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 88) for the relief of James W. Richard and J. S. Brown & Brother, of Denver, Colorado, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 797) for the relief of Acting Master Robert Platt, United States Navy, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the minority views of the Committee on Railroads on the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad; and, by a readjustment of the grants, without increasing the appropriation, to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad, for which leave was granted some days ago. I submit this minority report now that it may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1045) to provide for the administration of the oath of office to collectors and other officers of the customs in the district of Alaska; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. JOHNSTON. This bill is accompanied by a letter from the Commissioner of Customs explaining the necessity for it and recommending the passage of the bill. It was prepared by him. I do not know whether it should be referred to the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Commerce. I ask the Chair to refer it to the proper committee, and I request the Committee to act upon it promptly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the bill should properly be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. BRUCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1046) for the endowment of the "Lowery Industrial Academy" in the State of Alabama, and to accept a donation of buildings and lands in aid of the same, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MAXEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1047) regulating the appointment of cadet midshipmen in the Naval Academy at Annapolis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. N. 1048) for the relief of Ethan A. Sawyer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MCPHERSON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1049) to facilitate letter correspondence; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

THOMAS W. COLLIER.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2291) for the relief of Thomas W. Collier.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments, in lines 3 and 4, before "cents," to strike out "one thousand and eighty-six dollars and fifty-two," and insert "nine hundred and thirty-eight dollars and seventy-two," and in line 6, after the word "postage-stamps," to strike out "postage-stamp funds;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of nine hundred and thirty-eight dollars and seventy-two cents, to reimburse Thomas W. Collier, postmaster at Coshocton, Ohio, for postage-stamps and money-order funds stolen from his office at that place on the night of May 23, 1877, be appropriated out of any fund not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KERNAN. Is there any report accompanying the bill?

Mr. FERRY. There is a report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. SARGENT. Is the report lengthy?

Mr. FERRY. It is not very lengthy.

Mr. SARGENT. Cannot the Senator make a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. FERRY. It is simply to pay for the robbery of postage-stamps and money-order funds.

Mr. SARGENT. I gave notice that I should call up the naval appropriation bill this morning.

Mr. FERRY. In the discretion exercised by the Postmaster-General an agent of the Department was sent to investigate the case. The facts show that the burglary was committed, and it comes within the rule adopted by the committee.

Mr. KERNAN. What was the amount taken of each?

Mr. FERRY. The report sets out facts in full. It is not very lengthy and will not occupy long if the Senator desires to hear it read. The bill comes within the general rule adopted by the committee, and I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. KERNAN. I desire to inquire what was the amount taken in postage-stamps and what in money?

Mr. FERRY. That is stated in the report.

Mr. SARGENT. How much is it?

Mr. FERRY. The report is at the desk.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the bill be laid aside until after I call up, and the Senate shall pass, the naval appropriation bill. I gave notice yesterday that I would ask, after the regular morning business was concluded to-day, that this should be done, and I trust the Senator will allow this bill to be laid aside until it is done. These little private bills certainly can wait for a great appropriation measure.

Mr. FERRY. This is a very short bill, and it will take but little time. I have deferred from interrupting the Senator at any time in the consideration of appropriation bills, and this little bill will be out of his way in a moment.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is not sufficiently familiar with his report to answer the plain question of the Senator from New York.

Mr. FERRY. The report states the precise sum. The Secretary has the report. I ask the Secretary to read from the report the amount of postage-stamps and the amount of money-order funds stolen, as asked by the Senator from New York.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

T. W. Collier makes affidavit that he was the regularly appointed postmaster at Cohocton at the time of the burglary; that there was deposited in the safe in the post-office at the time the burglary was committed postage-stamps of the value of $75.15, of money-order funds the sum of $143.57, and of postage-stamp funds the sum of $147.50, and that all of the same was stolen.

Mr. FERRY. I will state to the Senator from New York that the postage-stamp funds when converted into currency the committee have stricken out. They have adopted the rule that whenever any postage-stamps have been converted into money the postmaster holding 60 per cent. of that amount for his salary should run the risk himself. The bill as amended only covers the amount of stamps and money-order funds actually taken by the burglars.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendments of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President—

Mr. FERRY. There is a like bill, if the Senator will allow me to get it up.

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir. According to notice, and feeling it due to the Committee on Appropriations, whom I represent in the matter, and in the interest of the public business, I now call up House bill No. 3822, being the regular naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Was the Senator's notice not given that this bill would be called up after the morning hour?

Mr. SARGENT. I gave notice that I should ask to have the bill considered in the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair feels compelled to recognize the Senator from California, he having given notice that at the conclusion of the regular morning business he would ask the Senate to proceed with the naval bill.

Mr. FERRY. I wish to say in this connection that it has been customary to allow the remainder of the morning hour, after the routine business, to be devoted to the small bills denominated private bills. I have been always ready to yield to the Senator anything he asked of this nature and I do not very often interrupt the Senate in this respect, but I have been pressed very much to have these bills disposed of. One relates to a case in Illinois and the other is from Ohio. The one from Ohio has been disposed of. However, I give way.

Mr. SARGENT. It has been the universal custom of the Senate to allow the regular appropriation bills to proceed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think there is serious objection to calling up an appropriation bill at this time. It appropriates a large amount of money, and there are but few members of the Senate present. I think the Senate should consider such an important measure when there is a full Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. There is more danger in calling up private bills in the absence of a quorum than there is in pressing a great appropriation bill when every item has been estimated by the Department and when it has been thoroughly sifted by both Houses in Committee of the Whole. There is much less danger in passing upon these great matters than on private bills under such circumstances. Furthermore, it has been the universal custom of the Senate, amounting to common law, to make a right of way for the Committee on Appropriations; because unless their business is finished Congress cannot adjourn. Another reason is that I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Ohio and the railroad bill, which will take all the time from the close of the morning hour to the adjournment of the Senate. But if the Senate is willing to lay aside that business and take up the appropriation bill to-day after the conclusion of the morning hour, I am willing that private bills shall come in and be considered now. Otherwise I shall ask to proceed with this bill.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves to take up for consideration the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3822) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

Mr. SARGENT. Before the Secretary proceeds with the reading of the bill perhaps I can save time and obviate the asking of some questions by making a short general statement.

The estimates for the service of the Navy for the next fiscal year are $16,233,234.40. This bill as it passed the House of Representatives appropriated $14,038,584. The total appropriated by Congress for the current fiscal year was $13,541,024.40. Therefore the bill as it passed the House and came to us was somewhere about half way between the amount appropriated last year and the estimates for the next fiscal year. The Senate committee have made additions to this bill of $197,844.70, a very small percentage of increase on a fourteen-million-dollar bill. I do not know that I have ever before been instructed to report a naval bill from the Senate committee when there were such slight additions as are made to this bill. But these additions are not made except in an instance or two upon discretionary items, and in those instances only where we thought it absolutely necessary; but they are generally made on account of salaries fixed by law. Where both office and salary are fixed by law we have complied with the law in making the necessary amendment.

That accounts for nearly the whole of the $197,000 additional. The bill as we report it is larger than the amount appropriated by the act for 1878 by $395,404.30, of which about $500,000 is the increase of the House, and as reported it is less than the estimates $1,996,805.70.

The items of increase made by the Senate committee are for pay of the Navy, (net pay because we have made some deductions as well as increase,) $80,850; for preparation of the Nautical Almanac, $1,000; for equipment of vessels, $70,000; and contingent expenses of Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, $15,000. This $85,000 is on account of the large expenditures of stores, though a less expenditure of money, making a necessity in that particular bureau of their being replenished. For repairs of the naval laboratory and hospitals we appropriate $10,000 in addition. Much of this is necessary at the hospital at Norfolk which is in an extremely dilapidated condition. For the maintenance of hospitals, $15,000. For the secretary of the Naval Academy, $1,800, which is left out of the bill of the House apparently by an oversight. By a general provision of law which they have inserted in the bill, and to which with a slight modification we assent, the result is to abolish an officer who has been for some twenty-six years discharging the important functions of secretary of the academy, keeping the account of standing of the different graduates or pupils, &c., and whose services are absolutely indispensable. We have made some slight restoration of pay of watchmen, mechanics, and others in the Naval Academy. I will only remark in addition that one of the amendments restores a quartermaster of the Marine Corps, which was stricken out. If there is any question made in reference to that when we reach it, in the latter part of the bill, I will explain it more fully. I ask that the amendments be passed upon as the clerk proceeds with the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the bill and the amendments will be acted upon as reached.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 20, before the word "ensigns," to strike out "seventy-one" and insert "one hundred," and after "ensigns" to strike out seventy-one thousand six hundred before "dollars" and insert "one hundred and seventeen thousand;" so as to read:

One hundred ensigns, $117,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 48, 49, 50, and 51, to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty-six cadet midshipmen, $147,550; eighty-eight cadet engineers, $44,000," and in lieu thereof to insert:

Three hundred and six cadet midshipmen, $153,000; additional for seventy-nine of the above cadet midshipmen, when at sea, $29,625; sixty-one cadet midshipmen, to be admitted in 1878, $30,500; eighty-eight cadet engineers, $44,000; additional for fourteen of the above cadet engineers, when at sea, $5,250; twenty-five cadet engineers, to be admitted in 1878, $12,500.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Senator from California who has charge of the bill will read the letter of Admiral Rodgers that it may be put on record, so as to let the Senate and House see why that increase is made.

Mr. SARGENT. These amendments which are proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations make the bill conform with the law, and unless we abolish the Naval Academy or provide by law for decreasing the number of cadet engineers that shall attend it, it is necessary to make the appropriation proposed by this amendment, the amendment having been prepared by the Secretary of the Navy. The letter referred to by my friend from Kentucky is dated March 18, 1878, at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland, and written by Rear-Admiral Rodgers, who has charge of the Academy.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps it is better to have it put in the RECORD; I want the RECORD to show why this is done.

Mr. SARGENT. I will let it accompany my remarks.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY,
Annapolis, Maryland, March 18, 1878.

SIR: A copy of the Navy appropriation bill (H. R. No. 3822) for the next fiscal year having come into my hands, I have carefully examined its provision for the pay of the naval cadets, and I find the sum mentioned as inadequate to their payment, that, should the bill pass as it now stands, the sum appropriated will be exhausted long before the end of the fiscal year.

After an examination I am led to believe that the cadet midshipmen in service, as named in the Navy Register, published last July, have been assumed as the basis from which the estimate for the pay of their grade was to be computed. This basis is not reliable, from the fact that forty-three additional cadet midshipmen were admitted in the following September, and that fifteen cadet midshipmen, who had been found deficient, or had passed out of the service in June, were reinstated by the Department after the Register was published. Of those cadet midshipmen named in the July Register, six have left the service, as have two of those appointed in September. In fine, there are now at the Naval Academy fifty more cadet midshipmen than those enumerated in the July Register.

It has further escaped the notice of the committee that the present first class, containing thirty-six cadet midshipmen and fourteen cadet engineers, will graduate in June, and during the next fiscal year will, while employed afloat, receive the pay of nine hundred and fifty instead of five hundred dollars a year.

The law under which cadet midshipmen are continued in that grade, after they complete their course at the Naval Academy, went into operation last June, and during the next fiscal year there will, for the first time, be two classes affected by this statute. (Section 1530 Revised Statutes, 1875.)

It should not be forgotten that these young gentlemen are cadet midshipmen only in name; they have completed the full course of studies at the Naval Academy, and they do the same duty afloat that has been done by all midshipmen who graduated before them. The title of "cadet midshipmen" was continued in their case in order that they might make no vacancies until six years after their admission, thus decreasing the number of cadets at this school, but leaving to them the full and long-established duties of midshipmen.

I beg to inclose an exhibit showing the number of cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers now in service afloat and at the Naval Academy, and also the vacancies at present existing, to fill which members of Congress and the Executive are entitled to make nominations. The exhibit also shows the sum proposed by the Appropriation Committee and the sum it will actually cost to pay the cadets, should all vacancies be filled.

From this it will be seen that the sum proposed will not even pay the cadets now in service, and does not at all provide for those to be admitted in June and September next.

There are now fifty-one vacancies in the congressional districts and Territories to be filled by members of the House of Representatives. To these may be added the ten "appointments at large" in the gift of the Executive, and should the Department admit twenty-five new cadet engineers, as has been usual, there will be eighty-six new cadets to enter at the beginning of the next academic year, whose pay is not provided for in the naval appropriation bill now under consideration.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

C. R. P. RODGERS,
Rear-Admiral, Superintendent.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

Exhibit showing amount of pay required for cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers in service afloat and at the Naval Academy for the fiscal year July 1, 1878, June 30, 1879.

Cadet midshipmen, class of 1877, 43, at $950	$40,850 00
Cadet midshipmen, class of 1878, 36, for two months after leaving Academy, at $500	$2,999 52
For ten months at sea, at $950	28,501 50
		31,501 02
Cadet midshipmen, class of 1879, 43,
Cadet midshipmen, class of 1880, 72,
Cadet midshipmen, class of 1881, 112,
— 227, at $500	113,500 00	$185,850 72
Cadet engineers, class of 1878, 14, for two months after graduation, at $500	1,166 48
For ten months at sea, at $950	11,083 80
		12,250 28
Cadet engineers, class of 1879, 23,
Cadet engineers, class of 1880, 22,
Cadet engineers, class of 1881, 25,
— 74, at $500	37,000 00	49,250 28
Total amount pay required as per heading above		245,101 00
The appropriation bill (H. R. No. 3822) provides for 256 cadet midshipmen	$147,350 00
The appropriation bill (H. R. No. 3822) provides for 88 cadet engineers	44,000 00
		191,350 00
Deficiency in provision for cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers in service afloat and at Naval Academy		43,751 00
The bill makes no provision for the class to enter in June and September next, for which there are 761 vacancies, which if filled will render necessary, at $500 each, an additional sum of		30,500 00
And should there be appointed to the next class, as is usual, 25 cadet engineers, there will also be required, at $500 each		12,500 00
Total estimated deficiency in provision for cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers for ensuing fiscal year		86,751 00

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in lines 66 and 67, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for the pay of the Navy, for the active list," from $3,698,750 to $3,822,875.

Mr. SARGENT. That is merely a footing to correspond with the previous amendments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "require," in line 118, to strike out "five hundred and twenty-five thousand" and insert "four hundred and eighty-one thousand seven hundred and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For clerks to fleet-paymasters, paymasters of vessels, clerks at inspections, navy-yards, and stations, and extra pay to men enlisted under honorable discharge; exchange and mileage, and for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1879, in excess of the numbers for each class provided for in this act, and for any increase of pay arising from different duty, as the needs of the service may require, $481,725.

Mr. SARGENT. That is a reduction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 121, after the word "the," to strike out "passage of this act" and insert "1st day of July, 1878;" and in line 125, after the word "and," to strike out "a line officer" and insert "an officer;" so as to read:

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1878, there shall be no appointments made from civil life of secretaries or clerks to commanders of squadrons nor of clerks to commanders of vessels; and an officer not above the grade of lieutenant shall be detailed to perform the duties of secretary, and one not above the grade of master to perform the duties of clerk to a rear-admiral or commander, and one not above the grade of ensign to perform the duties of clerk to a captain, commander, or lieutenant-commander when afloat.

* Congressional, 51; at large, 10—61.

Mr. SARGENT. On behalf of the committee at the commencement of line 124, before the word "commanders," I want to put in the words "the Admiral, Vice-Admiral, or."

Mr. BECK. How will it read then?

Mr. SARGENT. It will read:

There shall be no appointments made from civil life of secretaries or clerks to the Admiral, Vice-Admiral, or commanders of squadrons, &c.

We had to take one of two courses: either to make special provision for these gentlemen or put them in the same category as all the rest. We chose them in the latter as more economical if not more just.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. Now I move to strike out the word "or," in line 124, and insert "or;" so as to read:

Of clerks to commanders of vessels, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. SARGENT. After the word "secretary," in line 126, I move to insert "the Admiral, Vice-Admiral, and;" so as to read:

An officer not above the grade of lieutenant shall be detailed to perform the duties of secretary and one not above the grade of master to perform the duties of clerk to a rear-admiral or commander, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is to conform to the former amendment. The Chair hears no objection, and that amendment will be made.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the end of line 130, to insert:

Provided, That the secretaries and clerks in service on the 1st day of July, 1878, on vessels abroad shall continue as such until such vessel shall return to the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. The proviso is inserted because it will cost a great deal more to transport these clerks back to the United States, where they are serving on vessels, than it will do to allow them to perform their duties and return with their vessels. For that reason it is inserted both in the way of justice and economy. It would be very hard on these men to be suddenly dismissed from the service at Yokohama or the north pole or wherever they might be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after the word "Navy," in line 135, to strike out "Department;" so as to read:

For contingent expenses of the Navy, namely, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. On behalf of the committee I move, in line 140, after the word "recording," to put in the words "expenses of naval prisoners at penitentiaries;" and a subsequent amendment will provide for this by increasing the gross appropriation in this paragraph $3,000, and the reason for it is that before the adoption of the Revised Statutes the duty of paying the expenses of persons sentenced to penitentiaries by courts-martial was devolved upon the Department of Justice and they were paid out of the judiciary fund. That was omitted by the Revised Statutes probably by mistake. It is just as well, however, to provide for it in this way, as by the repealing clause of the Revised Statutes the Department of Justice cannot pay it out of that fund hereafter. Therefore it is necessary that provision should be made for it, and the Attorney-General called the attention of the Secretary of the Navy to that fact, and sent us a communication with his recommendation that it be provided for under the head which I now move. I send to the Chair the communications to which I have referred.

The communications are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 12, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a communication, dated the 26th ultimo, addressed to me by the Attorney-General of the United States, in relation to the expenses of prisoners sentenced by naval courts-martial to confinement in a penitentiary.

The expenses of such prisoners, as the Attorney-General states, have heretofore been a charge upon the Department of Justice, under an old statute not embodied in the Revised Statutes, and therefore obsolete.

It is necessary, therefore, that some provision should be made for the expenses of the class of prisoners in question, and I have therefore the honor to suggest that an appropriation of $3,000 be made for that purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, either as a separate item or by inserting in the items of the naval appropriation bill, under a head of "Contingent Navy," the words "expenses of naval prisoners in penitentiaries," and increasing the aggregate amount of the appropriation $3,000.

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. S. J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 4, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a communication addressed by this Department to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on the 12th ultimo, and copy of the communication of the Attorney-General therein referred to, suggesting that provision be made in the naval appropriation act for the maintenance of naval prisoners confined in State penitentiaries.

There are now four or five prisoners who have been sentenced by court-martial to imprisonment for one or more years in such penitentiary as the Secretary of the Navy may designate, and the Department is embarrassed as to approving the sentence and carrying it into execution, having no appropriation on which to draw for the expenses attending such imprisonment.

I therefore respectfully suggest that the naval appropriation bill now before the Senate may be amended in the manner indicated in my letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. A. A. SARGENT,
Of Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 26, 1878.

Sir: It is the conclusion of this Department that the fund under its control for defraying expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned ought not to bear the expense of supporting prisoners of the United States sentenced by naval court-martial to confinement in a penitentiary. It is understood that heretofore such expense has been borne under section 3, page 373, volume 13, United States Statutes at Large. This section being omitted from the Revised Statutes, while the other sections of the same act are retained, is now repealed by section 5596, page 1691, of the Revised Statutes.

Under this view, some other provision must be made for their support.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. On line 163, after the word "eighty" I move to insert "three," being for the object which I have just stated and for which I have sent the documents to be read at the desk. The effect is to make the total appropriation for contingent expenses of the Navy $83,000 instead of $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Bureau of Navigation," in line 209, after the word "price," to strike out "to" and insert "of paper and printing paid by;" so as to read:

Provided, That all charts hereafter furnished to mariners or others not in the Government service shall be paid for at the cost price of paper and printing paid by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for expenses of Naval Observatory," in line 218, after the word "three," to strike out the word "assistants" and insert "assistant astronomers;" so as to read:

For pay of three assistant astronomers at $1,500 each, $4,500; and one clerk, at $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 239, to increase the appropriation "for pay of computers and clerk for preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac" from $18,000 to $19,000.

Mr. SARGENT. I present a communication from the Department on that subject.

The communication is as follows:

NAUTICAL ALMANAC OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 2, 1878.

Sir: The naval appropriation bill, as passed in the House of Representatives, makes a reduction of $2,000 from the estimates for the work of this office. I therefore respectfully request that the following statements be communicated to the proper committee of the Senate.

First. Before the civil war the usual annual appropriations for the preparation of the Almanac was $25,890. Deducting $4,000, the average cost of printing, the sum of $21,890 was left as applicable to computations and office expenses. The corresponding sum asked for now, when services of all kinds are more expensive, is $20,500, the item for planets discovered by American astronomers being an additional work assigned to the office in 1872.

Second. It has heretofore been the practice to issue the Almanac without any independent check upon the accuracy of the results obtained by the computers, and the frequency of errors has, in consequence, been such as seriously detract from the character for accuracy which such a work should maintain. To remedy this it is necessary to employ two or three additional computers.

Third. With the approval of the Department I have made considerable reductions in the prices paid for computations, but these reductions will be more than absorbed by the above requirements of additional force.

Fourth. The improvement in the Almanac recently approved by the National Academy of Sciences will involve some extraordinary expenses during the next fiscal year, which, however, will not be permanent.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SIMON NEWCOMB,
Superintendent Nautical Almanac.

To Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

[Indorsement.

Copy of a letter from the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac to the Department, April 2, 1878.
Respectfully forwarded and recommended to the favorable consideration of the Department, April 3, 1878.

D. AMMEN,
Chief of Bureau of Navigation.

Respectfully communicated to the Committee on Naval Affairs of United States Senate, with the recommendation that the committee grant what is desired.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

MARCH 3, 1878.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting," in line 276, to increase the total appropriation "for equipment of vessels" from $800,000 to $870,000.

Mr. BECK. I ask the Senator from California if it would not be well to lay before the Senate or put upon record what is said by that bureau about the necessity of that increase.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir. The Secretary of the Navy sends to me a statement from Commodore Shufeldt, who is the head of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting in the Navy Department, and certainly one of the most accomplished and careful officers in the whole service, in which he shows the reasons why this appropriation should be increased. This bureau is the only one, (except that of medicine and surgery, and there only for absolute necessities,) where we have made any increase at all. The Bureaus of Engineering and Construction, which ordinarily engross so much of the money appropriated by Congress, are left by us as the House left them. If it is desired, I will have this letter read at the desk or will incorporate it in my remarks.

Mr. BECK. I merely want it put in the RECORD.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well. It is referred to in a general letter of the Secretary; but I send the letter of the head of the bureau to be inserted in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING,
Washington, March 28, 1878.

Sir: Referring to appropriation "Equipment of vessels," for 1878 and 1879, as lately passed by the House of Representatives for $800,000, the bureau respectfully requests that Congress may be asked to have this appropriation increased to $900,000, as in its opinion the former sum will not be sufficient for the operations of the coming fiscal year. By reference to the annual report of this bureau for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1877, it appears that in addition to $620,000 expended from the sum of $570,000 appropriated for the year 1876-77, there was expended in materials from stock on hand at the several navy-yards, $461,245.99, making in reality the expenditure under appropriation "Equipments," for the year 1876-77, amount to over $1,000,000.

The bureau has therefore to state that the stock on hand has been greatly depleted, and requires to be replenished for the coming wants of the service.

The fact that this bureau was able on the 30th June, 1877, to cover into the Treasury a large amount of its appropriations for the fiscal year ending that date, was owing principally to the want of funds in several bureaus of the Navy Department to continue its work of repairs on vessels, in consequence of which this bureau was obliged to stop its work.

The bureau would also request that its "contingent" in said bill may be increased from $50,000 (as passed) to the sum of $60,000, owing to the many contingencies of expenditures arising under the said appropriation.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. SHUFELDT,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 287, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting from $50,000 to $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, in line 346, to increase the appropriation for necessary repairs of naval laboratory, hospitals, and appendages, including roads, wharves, out-houses, steam-heating apparatus, sidewalks, fences, gardens and farms, cemeteries, furniture, head-marks for graves, from $20,000 to $30,000.

Mr. SARGENT. In explanation of that item and of the following, "for maintenance of the several naval hospitals," I will state that the committee are satisfied that the condition of repair of a great many of these hospitals, cemeteries, &c., especially the one at Norfolk, requires this expenditure, and that to employ the nurses and pay all the other expenses which are necessary in the second item, which the clerk has not yet read, but which I speak of at this time for convenience, it is absolutely necessary to increase the appropriation there $15,000. Upon this point I ask to incorporate in the RECORD a letter from the bureau and which I send to the reporter.

The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,
March 28, 1878.

Sir: The naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, as it passed the House of Representatives, has reduced the estimates of the bureau as follows:

For "surgeons' necessities and appliances" from $48,000 to $45,000.

For "civil establishment of naval hospitals and laboratory" from $38,000 to $25,000.

For "repairs and improvements of hospitals" from $51,300 to $20,000.

For "contingent" from $25,000 to $15,000.

I respectfully beg leave to state that experience has shown that the hospitals and laboratory cannot be conducted efficiently with an appropriation for the civil establishment of less than $50,000.

The amount estimated for "repairs and improvements of hospitals" is absolutely necessary to preserve the several buildings from decay, and to furnish the naval hospital at Norfolk with steam-heating apparatus and to improve its sanitary condition by providing improved water supply and sewerage.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. GRIER,
Surgeon-General, United States Navy.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 350, after the word "laboratory," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$40,000;" in line 351, after the word "naval," to strike out the words "hospitals at Washington and" and insert the words "hospital at;" and in line 352, after the word "same," to strike out the word "are" and insert "is;" so as to read:

For the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals and naval laboratory:

For the maintenance of the several naval hospitals and naval laboratory, $40,000; and that the naval hospital at Annapolis be, and the same is hereby, discontinued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Naval Academy," in the clause making appropriations for pay of professors and others, in line 406, to insert:

Secretary of the Naval Academy, $1,800.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say but a word about the Naval Academy, not by way of criticism of this bill, because I believe we are obliged to make all the appropriations here made, but we have a Naval Academy which is turning out young officers for the Navy far in excess of what the needs of the country require. The law as to it is different from the law governing West Point; it not only authorizes but I believe requires the President to send ten cadets there each year, so that we are obliged to keep up forty at large, whereas at West Point we allow only ten at any one time, but the word "annually" is used in the Annapolis law. Many of the changes we were compelled to make in this bill grew out of the number of these young officers.

All I rise for now is to call the attention of the Naval Committee, of my friends from New Jersey and California and Maryland, who are on it, to the importance of looking into that and seeing what amendments ought to be made and seeing also what can be done with an exceedingly expensive retired list. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. SARGENT. I concur entirely with the remarks of my friend from Kentucky. I should like to say, however, as a member of the Naval Committee, that it has been my sad experience that the time of the committee is so much taken up by applications from officers to be changed about on the naval list or to secure some old bill twenty to thirty years old for services which they now find the Government did not pay them at that time as much as they ought to have been paid, that there is very little time left to the committee for general reforms in the service.

Mr. BECK. I am not complaining of the Committee on Naval Affairs; but I do hope if we adjourn over again for a few days they will make it a specialty to see what reforms can be made, as they are very much needed.

Mr. SARGENT. I do intend, as far as I am concerned, to try to get some measure that shall secure some reform. I never have appreciated human selfishness, or emulation if that is a better term, [a laugh,] so much as I have by observing the crowds of officers of all degrees from ensigns to admirals dissatisfied with their places on the retired list, or the pay they receive or have received from the Government, seeking petty advantage either over each other or over the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to concur with the remark of the Senator from California, and apply it to the Army. I think it will not be long until every officer in the Navy and in the Army will be appealing to Congress for some relief, and I think it is time to give them relief, permanent relief, relief which will place them quietly in the discharge of the duties which the law has imposed upon them, and outside of applications to Congress.

Mr. SARGENT. I am in favor of that, provided it can be done without crippling the arm of defense, either land or naval, of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 428, to increase the total appropriation for pay of professors and others at the Naval Academy from $50,718 to $52,518.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for pay of watchmen and others at the Naval Academy, in line 435, after the word "dollars" to insert "and fifty cents;" after the word "at," in the same line, to strike out "$2.50" and insert "$3;" in line 436 after the word "dollars" to insert "and fifty cents;" in line 437 after the word "each" to strike out "three joiners, two painters, and two masons," and insert "one foreman of joiners, one foreman of painters, and one foreman of masons, at $3.50 per day each; two joiners, one painter, and one mason;" and in line 444 after the words "in all" to strike out "$23,085.75" and insert "$25,905.75;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay of watchmen and others: Captain of the watch, at $2.25 per day; four watchmen, at $2 per day; foreman of the gas and steam-heating works, at $3 per diem; ten attendants at gas and steam-heating works of academy, one at $3.50, one at $3, and eight at $2.50 per day each; one foreman of joiners, one foreman of painters, and one foreman of masons, at $3.50 per day each; two joiners, one painter, and one mason, at $2.50 per day each; one tinner, one gas-fitter, and one blacksmith, at $2.50 per day each; and for one steam-pipe fitter, $547; in all, $25,905.75.

Mr. SARGENT. In explanation of the several amendments which appear upon that page, I desire to read from a letter addressed to the committee by the admiral in charge of the school:

In the appropriation bill, as it passed the House, the master-laborer's pay has been reduced from $2.28 a day to $2. I ask most earnestly that the master-laborer may receive the pay he has received for many years past, of $2.28 a day. He has charge of all the laborers, whether on the permanent or temporary rolls; of the teams and teamsters, of the grounds and shrubberies; of the wharves and roads, and sea walls; of the sewers and drainage; of the Naval Cemetery; and of the large tract adjoining it, and his office is one of the most exacting that we have, and requires a man of good head, and tact and industry. I have never seen a more faithful and efficient man in the public service than the present incumbent of this office; he came here as a lad, has held his place for many years, and is worth his weight in gold.

If all the mechanics cannot be paid as they were last year, I hope that the foreman of joiners, and of masons, and of painters, and the machinist, boiler-maker, and pattern-maker may receive the pay they received last year: $3.50 a day; also, that the ten attendants at the gas and steam-heating works of the academy may receive the same pay as they did last year, namely, one at $3.50, one at $3, and eight at $2.50 a day, each.

These men have contracted to work twelve hours for a day's work and they divide the twenty-four hours between two gangs, each gang working twelve hours. During the greater part of the year this work is very severe.

The foremen of whom I have spoken have charge of the workshops and tools of their department and are men of especial skill, long employed here and have frequently many men employed under them on the temporary rolls while improvements are being made.

The machinist, &c., are special men, of much value in the workshops where the cadet engineers are taught the use of tools.

In addition to that the committee are informed by the Secretary of the Navy that these foremen are instructors of engineers; of course, I do not mean foremen of laborers, but foremen of machinists, mechanics, &c.; they instruct them in the use of tools, in the construction and use of machinery, &c., and they are necessarily men of intelligence. They cannot be ignorant men or mere mechanics, but must have a good education outside of it, and they have secured such men. This is simply to pay them what was allowed last year, though we have not restored the pay of mechanics generally, and with some shamefacedness I admit that, because I do feel a mental twinge at cutting down the pay of mechanics in this great appropriation bill. Still while we have not done that we have complied with the request of Admiral Rodgers to restore these foremen to the amount received last year. The same remark applies to all the amendments in this paragraph. They amount to very little money in the aggregate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the clause making appropriations for pay of mechanics and others at the Naval Academy, in line 450, after the word "dollars," to insert the words "and twenty-eight cents;" so as to read:

One master-laborer, to keep public grounds in order, at $2.28 per diem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 458, to increase the total appropriation for pay of mechanics and others at the Naval Academy from $16,013.75 to $16,115.95.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the clause making appropriations for pay of employés in the department of steam-engineery at the Naval Academy, in line 462, after the word "for," to strike out "machinist, at $3 per day" and insert "master-machinist, boiler-maker, and pattern-maker, at $3.50 per day each;" in line 465, after the word "blacksmith," to strike out "one boiler-maker, one pattern-maker;" and in line 468, to strike out "$6,752.50" and insert "$7,665;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of employés in the department of steam-engineery: For master-machinist, boiler-maker, and pattern-maker, at $3.50 per day each; one machinist, one blacksmith, one molder, at $2.50 per diem each; and two laborers, at $1.50 per diem each, $7,665.

Mr. WHYTE. I do not wish to make any objection at this time, but I desire to say that I shall offer a substitute for the proposition of the committee when we get into the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "return," in line 457, to strike out the words "and shall, in addition, receive $5 per day for expenses during each day of his service at the academy;" so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, $2,600: Provided, That each member of the Board of Visitors shall receive not exceeding eight cents per mile for each mile traveled by the most direct route from his residence to the academy and return.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to make a remark in reference to that. In the debate in the House upon this point, in explanation of the proviso it was stated by the gentleman who reported the bill that this $5 a day was inserted here in order to make the same provision for these visitors as for those to the Military Academy at West Point; but it seems not to have been understood that at West Point there is a hotel within the grounds of a decent character, where a person can obtain his living and defray his expenses probably at $5 a day, while at the Naval Academy at Annapolis there is no hotel within the grounds at all, and visitors will be compelled to go entirely outside the grounds, which will be very inconvenient, to sleep and get their meals.

For that reason some years ago what was called a "board-house" was erected within the academy grounds and the amount which we appropriate from year to year, and which is the same in this bill as in previous bills, has been used for the expenses of that board-house as well as for the amount of mileage allowed to the visitors. On account of the very different circumstances and the extreme inconvenience there it would be at Annapolis to apply the rule which is very applicable to West Point, we have recommended this change striking out the latter part of the proviso.

But furthermore there is danger that the proviso, if it remains as it came from the House, would be construed to allow them not merely their expenses at the board-house, but $5 a day additional as compensation for their services. That would be very far from economy. The whole matter is explained in some letters which I send to the desk.

The letters are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.
Washington, April 2, 1878.

Sir: I have the honor to submit herewith a copy of a letter from the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, dated the 30th ultimo, inclosing one from Paymaster Kenny, the commissary at that institution, in relation to the clause in the naval appropriation bill providing for the expenses of the Board of Visitors, which if not amended is likely to produce much embarrassment.

I would suggest, if no other amendment occurs to the committee, that after the word "academy," line 459, page 19 of the bill, the following be added: "If not furnished with board and lodging at the board-house within the grounds; but if so furnished the per diem shall be allowed to the commissary at the academy."

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. A. SARGENT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY,
Annapolis, Maryland, March 30, 1878.

Sir: I beg leave to submit a letter, just received from Paymaster Kenny, the commissary of the Naval Academy, in relation to that part of the naval appropriation bill passed by the House of Representatives which provides for the expenses of the Board of Visitors at the Naval Academy. As I fully concur in the opinion of Paymaster Kenny, I must beg to call the attention of the Department to them. Should the provision as it now stands become a law, much embarrassment and grave dissatisfaction will, I think, ensue.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

C. R. P. RODGERS,
Rear-Admiral, Superintendent.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY,
Annapolis, 25th March, 1878.

ADMIRAL: In accordance with your desire, I beg to set forth some considerations concerning the clause in the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 3822) which provides for the traveling expenses and entertainment of the annual Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy.

The bill as passed by the House appropriates as traveling expenses eight cents per mile for each member of the board to and from his home, coupled with a proviso that each member shall receive $5 per diem for his expenses during his attendance as a member of the board. In the debate in Committee of the Whole, just before the passage of the bill by the House, it was stated by Mr. CLYMER, who reported the bill, that the same provision was in the West Point bill and that this was copied from that. I desire now to call your attention to the different methods which, owing to different circumstances, prevail here and at West Point in the entertainment of the respective Boards of Visitors.

At West Point there is a hotel within the academy limits, where, as there is no other provision for them, the members of the board are compelled to go. Their per diem expenses are therefore justly provided for by a special clause in the bill. Here, however, there being no hotel within the grounds, the Government has erected a "board-house," especially for the accommodation of the yearly boards, where they have for many years been entertained, the expense having been defrayed from the appropriation for the purpose. Such a house was a necessity, owing to the unwillingness of nominees to serve if compelled to rely upon the very indifferent hotels at Annapolis for their accommodation.

Judging by the experience of past years, it would be impossible to open the "board-house," furnish the necessary staff of steward, cooks, and servants required for their entertainment and comfort, besides making from time to time the necessary renewals in the furniture, room and table linen, and tableware out of the limited sum of $5 per diem for each member, particularly as the members are generally accompanied by their wives or others of their families.

Moreover, even if that sum is deemed sufficient by Congress for any necessary outlay in their behalf, a technical difficulty is presented in the mandatory character of the act, which provides that each member "shall receive $5 per diem for expenses during each day of his service at the academy."

It would seem perhaps, under the strict wording of the bill, that each member should receive, in any event, $5 per diem for expenses, even if provided with board and lodging at the "board-house," though the debate shows that such was manifestly not the intention of the House in passing the bill.

Should the bill become law in its present form, great embarrassment will necessarily arise in making proper provision for the Board of Visitors, owing to its being framed to meet a state of things which does not exist here.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. S. KENNY,
Paymaster Commissary, Naval Academy.

Rear-Admiral C. R. P. RODGERS, Superintendent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Marine Corps" in the clause making appropriation for "pay of officers," in lines 509 and 510, to strike out "one assistant quartermaster, $2,700," and insert "two assistant quartermasters, $5,400," and in line 512, before the word "captains," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty," and after "captains" to strike out "$49,140" and insert "$46,800."

Mr. SARGENT. I wish the Senate to understand the reasons for the action of the committee. I have here as part of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy an explanation of this proposed action. He says:

The proviso commencing on page 21, line 510, abolishes one assistant quartermaster of the Marine Corps. By law there are only three officers, a major and two captains, belonging to this branch of the service; and their duties combine those of quartermaster, commissary and ordnance. The Marine Corps consists of two thousand men, rank and file. So that at present these three officers do the duty of provisioning, arming, equipping, transporting, and clothing this body of men. They construct and repair all barracks and quarters for the corps, besides meeting all contingent expenses arising at nine regularly established commands. To deprive the Quartermaster's Department of one of these officers would, in my opinion, embarrass it to such an extent that if from any cause, sickness or otherwise, one of the two remaining officers was unable for a time to be upon duty, the duties of the department could not be performed as the law requires, as there would then be only one boarded officer left, and he could not possibly do all the duties.

The only difference in the bill by retaining him is $360; that is, the pay of one captain, who by the House bill is restored to the line, is while in the line $360 more than while acting as assistant quartermaster. The great inconvenience to the corps and the service is not compensated for by the saving of that small amount of money.

I desire to present for information the letter from the Secretary of the Navy covering this subject and others involved in our amendments to the bill.

The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.
Washington, March 29, 1878.

SIR: In reference to the naval appropriation bill (House bill No. 3822) I desire to make the following suggestions:

The provisions in reference to the pay of the Navy do not embrace the full number of all the classes. Inasmuch, however, as the appropriation of $525,000 is designed to remedy this, it is perhaps better to leave the bill as it is, in order that the plan for which it provides may be tried. If insurmountable difficulties should arise, the remedy can be applied at the next session of Congress.

There is, however, an exception to this in the case of ensigns on the active list. On page 2, line 19, they are put down at 71, whereas there are 109, and their present pay is as follows:

12 at sea, (after 5 years,) at $1,400.....	$16,800
71 at sea, (first 5 years,) at $1,200.....	85,200
7 other duty, at $1,000.....	7,000
10 waiting orders, at $800.....	8,000
	117,000

Appropriated in bill.....76,400

Short of present duty pay.....40,600

It will therefore be best to increase this appropriation to the proper amount, as the specific charges against the $525,000 may so nearly exhaust that amount as to render it impracticable to make up this difference, with others that may occur.

I suggest that on page 5, line 108, the words "passage of this act" be stricken out and the words "beginning of the next fiscal year" be inserted; also, the following proviso after the word "aforesaid," page 6, line 116: "Provided, That the secretaries and clerks in service on the 1st July in vessels abroad shall continue as such until such vessels shall return to the United States." To discharge them in a foreign country would involve large expenditures for transportation home.

In line 117, page 6, the word "Department" should be stricken out, as the contingent fund of the Navy, included in this part of the bill, is different from the contingent fund of the Navy Department, which is only for the office of the Secretary of the Navy and bureaus, for stationery, &c.

On page 9, line 191, it is provided that charts shall be furnished at "the cost price." If this shall include the whole cost, it will introduce a new practice, not customary with other governments. It would be more in consonance with former custom to strike out the word "to" and insert the words "of paper and printing paid by."

I do not think it advisable to abolish the Naval Hospital at Washington, as provided in lines 331 and 332, page 14. Upon this subject I inclose a letter from the Surgeon-General.

In reference to the Naval Academy, I refer the committee to the letter of Rear-Admiral C. R. P. Rodgers, which I handed you at our interview yesterday. I concur in his views.

It has been customary to fix the wages of laborers at the Academy at Annapolis, and I have no wish to have this plan departed from. This, however, is the only case in which it is done in this Department, and it is proper that I should suggest the difficulties which arise in my mind. Does it not violate the rule which prevails with reference to laborers in the navy-yards, &c., that wages shall be fixed by prices outside? The law on this subject has been omitted from the Revised Statutes, but, as it is an equitable rule, I have followed it. I understand that mechanics at Annapolis get $2.50 a day and work ten hours and unskilled laborers $1. Does not this bill discriminate against these, inasmuch as the wages fixed by it are greater than theirs? That is, if the term "per diem" in the bill is to be construed as not requiring more than eight hours of labor, according to the statute. In my opinion it does.

The proviso commencing on page 21, line 510, abolishes one assistant quartermaster of the Marine Corps. By law there are only three officers: a major and two captains, belonging to this branch of the service, and their duties combine those of quartermaster, commissary, and ordnance. The Marine Corps consists of two thousand men, rank and file, so that at present these three officers do the duty of provisioning, arming, equipping, transporting, and clothing this body of men. They construct and repair all barracks and quarters for the corps, besides meeting all contingent expenses arising at nine regularly established commands. To deprive the Quartermaster's Department of one of these officers would, in my opinion, embarrass it to such an extent that if from any cause, sickness or otherwise, one of the two remaining officers was unable for a time to be upon duty, the duties of the department could not be performed as the law requires, as there would then be only one boarded officer left, and he could not possibly do all the duties.

I inclose letters from the chiefs of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, Medicine and Surgery, Provisions and Clothing, and Steam Engineering, all of which are approved by me. In my opinion, they present sufficient reasons for an increase of the appropriations therein referred to.

If any increase shall be made in the bill it would be necessary to change the last line of the bill, which states the total sum. According to my calculation it is erroneous as it now stands, being $10,100 less than the amount stated.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. A. A. SARGENT,
Subcommittee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

P. S.—I have omitted a suggestion in reference to secretaries and clerks to commanders of squadrons and vessels. If it shall be deemed expedient to give these positions to officers and thus compel them to employ their time otherwise than in the pursuit of their professional studies, (which is of doubtful expediency,) then the words "a line" in line 111, page 5, should be stricken out, and the word "an" inserted, as there is no reason why they should not be taken from the staff as well as the line.

R. W. T.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 540, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for pay of officers of the Marine Corps from "$614,455" to "$614,815."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso, beginning in line 542:

Provided, That hereafter there shall be but one assistant quartermaster, and that the junior captain now holding that grade shall be restored to his place in the line, and that no more promotions shall be made to the grade of captain until the number is reduced below twenty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHYTE. I wish to offer a substitute for one of the amendments of the committee. I move to strike out from line 461 down to 470, and insert in lieu of that the proposition I send to the Secretary to be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For pay of employes in the Department of Steam Engineering: for machinist at $1,095 per year, one machinist, one blacksmith, one boiler-maker, one pattern-maker, one molder at $912.50 each per year and two laborers at $1.50 per day each $6,752.50.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senate will see that instead of my proposition increasing the amount of the appropriation, it leaves it precisely the same as it came in the bill from the House of Representatives. The only difference is that instead of increasing the pay per day of some of these parties it makes the pay payable per annum, dividing the appropriation among them according to the scale in the bill as it came from the House. The employes in this department of the Naval Academy are equal to instructors; they teach the young cadets who are sent there as cadet engineers their whole education for future service in the Navy; and inasmuch as almost every other officer and every other employe of that grade in the Navy is paid by the year, I propose that these men be paid by the year, and it will not increase the appropriation as it came from the House a single dollar, and they will be perfectly satisfied with it as they have told me.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the Senator if these men are absent for a month at a time on leave of absence will they not be paid for the year? The difficulty about changing the system is that it furnishes men whose pay goes on when they are off duty, whereas if paid by the day, deducting for absence, they are not absent or idle. I should like to have that control over them. Besides, all the money now appropriated, if they are idle and do not work, goes back to the Treasury, whereas if a year's salary is voted it is gone from us whether they work or not. These reasons I think make the present condition of things better than the amendment.

Mr. WHYTE. If the Senator from Kentucky in the Committee on Appropriations had seen that before, why did he not apply the same rule to the various seamen that are teaching in the different departments? They are paid by the year.

Mr. BECK. Because they are enlisted men.

Mr. WHYTE. That may be.

Mr. BECK. And there is a general law for their payment.

Mr. WHYTE. These men are under the control of the Naval Academy superintendent.

Mr. BECK. But they can retire at any time they please, and the seamen cannot.

Mr. WHYTE. If they remain away from the Academy for a month, the superintendent need not take them back, but can put somebody in their place. That is the advantage of it.

Mr. SARGENT. The trouble is that where they get a yearly salary there will be leaves of absence for a month or two months. So in reference to the force of clerks; every one supposes he has a right to go away and stay a month and be paid the same as if he stayed right on, whereas if a man is paid by the day absence is deducted. That is the control we have. It is very strange that these employes are willing to take a reduced pay. There must be some advantage in it that I do not understand, some eat in the meal that I do not perceive.

Mr. WHYTE. There is an advantage in it. They get paid for Sundays; that is the advantage of it, whereas under the per diem they do not get paid for Sundays. You are willing to increase their pay and increase the appropriation to give them what they would get under this amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. We do not increase their pay one dollar; we simply put them at the amount they received before, which they fairly earned. If they do not work Sundays they ought not to be paid for Sundays.

Mr. WHYTE. You increase them over the pay fixed in the House bill.

Mr. SARGENT. We simply restore the amount we appropriated last year and every other year, and it is not any more than they deserve.

Mr. WHYTE. But what I want is to pay them by the year. They do not get a dollar more than you propose by that.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Kentucky pointed out some excellent reasons, and I certainly could supplement them with others.

Mr. WHYTE. Is it not a good reason for it that you can discharge a man if he fails to attend to his duty and put some one in his place immediately.

Mr. SARGENT. We can do that under either system. If a man works by the day he can be discharged as well as if he works by the year, and more readily.

Mr. WHYTE. No doubt of that; but that is not any objection to my proposition; it is equally against yours.

Mr. SARGENT. Where a man works by the year for the Government, he thinks he is entitled to a leave of absence, and that system has grown up and will never cease unless a law shall be passed that it shall cease.

Mr. WHYTE. We are paid by the year ourselves.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator objects that we increase over the House appropriation. We increase it on the House system. The House contemplates their payment by the day. Does the Senator contemplate their payment for week days and Sundays?

Mr. WHYTE. I only apply to them precisely the rule we apply to a seaman in the department of seamanship, and to the armorer, corporal, and all these men who are paid by the year. These men are instructors; they are not ordinary laborers; I do not apply it to mere laborers.

Mr. SARGENT. That is one reason why I do not want to cut down their pay.

Mr. WHYTE. I want to pay them by the year, and I do not cut down their pay because now they do not get paid for Sundays.

Mr. SARGENT. It is very strange arithmetic that these men get as much pay under an item of $6,000 as if we appropriated $7,000, unless, as the Senator from Kentucky suggests, if a man lays off duty he does not get pay under the present system and the money goes back to the Treasury; but he wants to be above the contingency by having a yearly salary. The armorers, seamen, and the others to whom the Senator has referred are enlisted men and they receive, besides their enlisted pay for that sort of general service which they render in the Navy, an additional amount per annum. It is an entirely different system. These men are not enlisted men. They can leave the service whenever they see fit. They are under no contract for continuous service of any kind whatever as seamen are; they are under no naval discipline unless they commit a breach of the peace on the Academy grounds, and therefore might be liable to some peculiar proceedings of which I am not aware. In every respect they stand like citizens.

Mr. WHYTE. How are your professors?

Mr. SARGENT. The professors are officers of the Navy; they are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate as officers of the Navy, and not one of them stands on any other footing. We even call the teacher of languages a professor of mathematics in order to keep up that system which the Senator, I think without the consideration he usually gives to such matters, proposes to interfere with.

Mr. WHYTE. How about the clerks to the Superintendent; what is the difference there?

Mr. SARGENT. We always pay clerks by the year.

Mr. WHYTE. These men are instructors and they ought to be paid by the year.

Mr. SARGENT. They are only instructors incidentally, not principally; they are principally mechanics.

Mr. WHYTE. They teach the cadet engineers all they learn.

Mr. SARGENT. Then the cadet engineer learns very little by the course of instruction at the academy; that is all I say. The cadet engineer studies a great many departments of knowledge, and among others mathematics, which these men do not teach and are not capable of teaching.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill why on page 14 the expenses of the Naval Asylum at Philadelphia are to be paid out of the income of the naval pension fund. Has that been customary?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir. The bill does not make any change in that respect.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time; and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Quartermaster-General relative to the appropriation for the service of his office as made by House bill No. 4104; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Paymaster-General forwarding an estimate for collection and payment of bounty, prize-money, and other claims of colored soldiers and sailors and also a communication from the Adjutant-General on the same subject; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 151) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the Society of the Sons of St. George, established at Philadelphia, the sum of $1,440.25 in gold, being the amount paid by said society upon a colossal statue of St. George and the Dragon, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress providing for the completion of the Washington Monument was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M.

ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 691) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas," approved February 19, 1875; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 22) providing for a place of deposit for the records and proceedings of the commission appointed under the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, 1877.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3924) to authorize the survey of the Cattaraugus Indian reservation, in the State of New York, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 2287) to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation, submission, and opening of the bids for contracts under the War Department; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 15) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. CHAFFEE.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is difficult to overrate the importance to the people of this country of a proper decision of the measure proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary, and that importance is the only excuse I shall offer for continuing the debate, which has been so thoroughly conducted on both sides of the question, yet I feel a responsibility attaching to the action of each member of the Senate in regard to so far-reaching and important a subject and from which he cannot divest himself.

The amount of money alone involved has been stated, and as I believe correctly, at simple interest will amount to the enormous sum of $120,000,000, or if subjected to the custom of merchants, and the rests in the calculation of interest were made that are common in the business transactions of this country, it would reach the mighty sum of $170,000,000 at the maturity of the bonds issued by the Government to these companies. I know that of late days the people of this country have had their ears accustomed to the repetition of sums, the force and meaning of which are but little comprehended. If the morality of a people is bound up, as I believe it to be, with a reasonable degree of prosperity, then I say that such enormous debts as have been so recklessly created, and are oftentimes so lightly discussed, are incompatible with that prosperity which is the necessary associate of political morality. It will be vain to sing paeans to public credit and to public honor, and disregard those practical rules of economy, of self-denial, of rigid observance of contracts, which are essential to their preservation.

But there is, even irrespective of this vast sum of money, a still greater, because it is a more continuing, question raised as to the legislative power of Congress, by way of amendment or repeal, to correct the errors or the impolicies of preceding legislation. In this case we find the question raised as to the power and duty of the Government of the United States toward two artificial persons, who have been placed in charge, for public purposes, of a vast amount of public property, to further a great public end, in the construction and maintenance of a continuous line of railways binding together the Pacific and Atlantic coasts of this continent. The creation of these railways was not simply for the development of the central portion of the continent, and to make a new route of commerce between Europe and Asia conducted through the United States; but there was a great political object, to strengthen the bands of union between distant portions of this great Republic, and to effectuate this, two acts of Congress were passed, one in 1862, and the other in 1864, amending and enlarging the means whereby this great work was to be accomplished through the agency of two corporations, one then created by Congress, and the other claiming existence under the laws of the State of California employed in co-operation, with extended and renewed powers beyond the scope of its original charter from the State of California.

Sir, this was called by the Supreme Court in the case in 1 Otto at page 81 "a national undertaking for national purposes," and "a national work originating in national necessity and requiring national assistance." To this end the credit of the people of the United States and their Government was loaned by scores of millions of dollars; the public lands, the property of the American people and the generations who are to succeed them, was granted on a scale and to an extent truly imperial. To whom did this vast property and dominion belong? It was wholly the property of the nation. Under whose control was this negotiation made? By the governmental agencies of the American people who had no jot or tittle of power to part with one acre of land or one dollar of money excepting for a public use.

There seems to me throughout this debate to have existed in the minds of some Senators a confusion, that whereas private property may at all times be taken for public use upon just compensation being rendered, the converse of the proposition is wholly untrue, and under no pretense can public property be justly taken for private use.

But, Mr. President, I do not propose to weary the Senate by repeating the history of these gigantic grants, or to criticize the spirit and means through which they were enacted into law. The time of their enactment was not favorable to serenity or calm judgment. The people of America were in the throes of a dreadful strife in which human passions and emotions were excited to the utmost for good or for evil, and the temper and tone of the hour extended itself in a great degree to their representatives in the Halls of Congress. It is to be expected that in times of great popular excitement a great deal will necessarily creep in that calm retrospection would disapprove, that calm inspection at the time would have excluded.

But, sir, we must not forget, in considering the proposition now before the Senate, the true origin and history of these undertakings, what was the paramount and continuing object of the creation of these corporations and their endowment, and learn, so far as we may, what has been their action in the past, in order that we may know how to adjust our action to the probabilities of the future. It is therefore with the intent only of gaining light from the past history of the action of these corporations, that I propose to refer to an examination, thoroughly and carefully made by a responsible branch of the Government a few years since.

In 1873 a select committee of the House of Representatives was appointed under a resolution to make inquiry in relation to the affairs of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Credit Mobilier of America, and other matters specified in said resolution and in other resolutions referred to the committee; and they submitted their report on the 20th of February of that year, being No. 78 of the third session, Forty-second Congress.

At page 2 of the report I find so well stated the objects of the acts of 1862 and 1864 that I shall employ the language of the committee in preference to my own:

The purpose of the whole act was expressly declared to be "to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times, but particularly in time of war, the use and benefit of the same for postal, military, and other purposes."

Your committee cannot doubt that it was the purpose of Congress in all this to provide for something more than a mere gift of so much land and a loan of so many bonds on the one side, and the construction and equipment of so many miles of railroad and telegraph on the other.

The United States was not a mere creditor, loaning a sum of money upon mortgage. The railroad corporation was not a mere contractor, bound to furnish a specified structure and nothing more. The law created a body politic and corporate, bound, as a trustee, so to manage this great public franchise and endowments that not only the security for the great debt due the United States should not be impaired, but so that there should be ample resources to perform its great public duties in time of commercial disaster and in time of war.

This act was not passed to further the personal interests of the corporators, nor for the advancement of commercial interests, nor for the convenience of the general public alone; but in addition to these the interests, present and future, of the Government, as such, were to be subserved. A great highway was to be created, the use of which for postal, military, and other purposes was to be secured to the Government "at all times," but particularly in time of war. Your committee deem it important to call especial attention to this declared object of this act, to accomplish which object the munificent grant of lands and loan of the Government credit was made. To make such a highway, and to have it ready at "all times," and "particularly in time of war," to meet the demands that might be made upon it; to be able to withstand the loss of business and other casualties incident to war and still to perform for the Government such reasonable service as might under such circumstances be demanded, required a strong solvent corporation, and when Congress expressed the object and granted the corporate powers to carry that object into execution, and aided the enterprise with subsidies of lands and bonds, the corporators in whom these powers were vested and under whose control these subsidies were placed were, in the opinion of your committee, under the highest moral, to say nothing of legal or equitable obligations, to use the utmost degree of good faith toward the Government in the exercise of the powers and disposition of the subsidies.

Congress relied for the performance of these great trusts by the corporators upon their sense of public duty; upon the fact that they were to deal with and protect a large capital of their own which they were to pay in in money; upon the presence of five directors appointed by the President especially to represent the public interests, who were to own no stock; one of whom should be a member of every committee, standing or special; upon commissioners to be appointed by the President, who should examine and report upon the work as it progressed; in certain cases upon the certificate of the chief engineer, to be made upon his professional honor; and lastly, upon the reserved power to add to, alter, amend, or repeal the act.

Here let me advert to the second section of the act of 1864, which provides—

That the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall cause books to be kept open to receive subscriptions to the capital stock of said company, (until the entire capital of $100,000,000 shall be subscribed,) at the general office of said company in the city of New York, and in each of the cities of Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, and Saint Louis, at such places as may be designated by the President of the United States, and in such other localities as may be directed by him. No subscription for said stock shall be deemed valid unless the subscriber therefor shall, at the time of subscribing, pay or remit to the treasurer of the company an amount per share subscribed by him equal to the amount per share previously paid by the then existing stockholders. The said company shall make assessments upon its stockholders of not less than $5 per share, and at intervals of not exceeding six months from and after the passage of this act, until the par value of all shares subscribed shall be fully paid; and money only shall be receivable for any such assessment, or as equivalents for any portion of the capital stock heretofore authorized.

This important fact is emphasized by the learned judge who delivered the opinion of the court in The United States vs. The Pacific

Railroad Company, 1 Otto, who, in considering the mutual rights and duties of the company and of the United States Government, at page 81, says:

The policy of the country, to say nothing of the supposed want of constitutional power, stood in the way of the United States taking the work into its own hands. Even if this were not so reasons of economy suggested that it were better to enlist private capital and enterprise in the project by offering the requisite inducements. Congress undertook to do this in order to promote the construction and operation of a work deemed essential to the security of great public interests.

Here was a comprehensive statement of the purview with which this undertaking was commenced, not only its objects but the means whereby they were to be attained. How has this company executed its part of this undertaking? I shall let the committee speak in their own forcible language, and will here give their names, well known to the country for intelligence and character—one of whom, Mr. Shellabarger, of Ohio, will be hereafter cited by me, as he now appears professionally engaged in opposition to the plan proposed by the Judiciary Committee to protect the company against insolvency. The members who signed this report were J. M. Wilson, of Iowa; Samuel Shellabarger, of Ohio; GEORGE F. HOAR, of Massachusetts; THOMAS SWANN, of Maryland, and Henry W. Slocum, of New York. At page 3:

Your committee find themselves constrained to report that the moneys borrowed by the corporation, under a power given them, only to meet the necessities of the construction and endowment of the road, have been distributed in dividends among the corporators; that the stock was issued, not to men who paid for it at par in money, but who paid for it at not more than thirty cents on the dollar in road-making; that of the Government directors some of them have neglected their duties and others have been interested in the transactions by which the provisions of the organic law have been evaded; that at least one of the commissioners appointed by the President has been directly bribed to betray his trust by the gift of $25,000; that the chief engineer of the road was largely interested in the contracts for its construction; and that there has been an attempt to prevent the exercise of the reserved power in Congress by inducing influential members of Congress to become interested in the profits of the transaction.

And at page 19, in reference to the provision that nothing but money should be paid for the capital stock—and paid in full:

In this case the provision of the charter requiring the stock to be paid for in money has been grossly violated; because, as is apparent, nearly the whole of the stock that has been issued represents no value to the railroad company; or, to state it differently, was issued without any consideration whatsoever.

At page 21 they say:

The statute requiring the capital stock to be paid for in money at par, it has in fact been paid at not exceeding thirty cents on the dollar in road-building, excepting, perhaps, the sum of about $400,000.

Why, Mr. President, this "road-building" was more than one-half clear profit. To speak more properly that stock was not paid for building the road; it was gratuitously issued as profits to those who contracted to build it. And who contracted to build it? At page 9 of this report the testimony of Mr. J. M. S. Williams, who was one of the contractors, is given:

Question. Then what purpose had you to propose to build a road that had already been built by the company at a cost to them of less than the amount mentioned in your proposition?

Answer. We were identical in interest. The Credit Mobilier and the Union Pacific Railroad Company were the same identical parties. We were building it for ourselves, by ourselves, and among ourselves. There was not $20,000 outside interest in it.

Mr. President, I do not propose to repeat the sad and shocking history of that Credit Mobilier corporation and its complete identification with the Union Pacific Railroad Company. It is a stain, that will never be wiped out, upon republican institutions. It is something for which conscientious men who, from patriotic motives voted to enact these laws of 1862 and 1864, must ever feel themselves responsible to the people of this country that so much of money the result of human toil was poured into a gulf of riotous corruption and ruinous results. Contracting with themselves, the very corporators, the trustees into whose hands this property of the American people had been so generously given in the sacred trust and confidence that they would use it honestly and only for the great public ends, and in the manner prescribed by the acts of Congress, how did they use it? Availing themselves of this creation of the law by which a mere corporate title shall stand instead of a real person, they dealt with themselves. They dictated their own profits, they sold out the powers for their own aggrandizement that were intrusted to them so generously, so munificently, for the benefit of their fellow-countrymen and succeeding generations.

At page 14 of the report is a short table which I will read, showing the cost to the railroad company of three contracts, and the real cost to the contractors for doing the work; that is to say, the cost that the corporators, directors and officers, knowingly paid to themselves and their associates by way of profit:

COST TO RAILROAD COMPANY.
Hoxie contract.....	$12,974,416 24
Ames contract.....	57,140,102 94
Davis contract.....	23,431,768 10
Total.....	93,546,287 28
COST TO CONTRACTORS.
Hoxie contract.....	$7,806,183 33
Ames contract.....	27,255,141 99
Davis contract.....	13,629,633 62
Total.....	50,730,955 94
To this should be added amount paid Credit Mobilier on account of fifty-eight miles.....	42,825,328 34
Total profit on construction.....	1,104,000 00
	43,929,328 34

There are other tables here, showing the dividends in stock made by this company to these "contractors" in the Credit Mobilier under the pretense of paying them. I find at page 14 of the report, one Mr. Ham, one of the accountants and experts, explained how upon the balance sheet the aggregate profit of the Ames and Davis contracts was $37,657,095.43. He was asked how much of it was money, how much bonds, and how much stock. He gave an exhibit, in which $24,000,000 of stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company was paid as profit to "contractors" by themselves. At page 24 the committee say, after repeating again the cost of the road:

But we think the corporation and the United States sustain the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. The United States have placed in the hands of the corporation large properties to be managed for a public purpose, for which management the corporators are to be compensated by the gains lawfully made in the employment.

The committee do not doubt that the proceeds of these lands and bonds, as well as of the first-mortgage bonds which the Government has provided to secure by a lien prior to its own, are held as an express trust by this company, and applicable alone to said declared purposes of the acts. Any distribution of the proceeds of either of these funds as profits or dividends to stockholders is illegal as violative of the declared purposes of the trust.

We have, then, the case of a corporation which is a trustee, in the management of persons who have divided the trust funds among themselves, who have promised to pay for its capital stock in cash, which promises they have not kept, and on which they are still liable, and which the corporation neglects to enforce, and who have made contracts with themselves in reference to the trust fund, the profits on which contracts they ought in equity account for to the trust fund upon the most ample principles of equity.

Again, on page 23:

We think the facts we have stated would furnish ground for judgment of forfeiture of all the franchises of the corporation, including the principal franchise, to be a corporation on proper process. According to the American decisions, judgment of forfeiture on quo warranto is not followed by an absolute forfeiture to the Government of all the property of a corporation, as was the earlier English practice; but a court of equity in such case has jurisdiction to divide the assets among the creditors or stockholders.

I here call the attention of Senators to this expression:

We have no doubt also of the right of Congress to repeal the charter, which is expressly reserved in the act of 1862, and that on such repeal equity would distribute the assets in like manner. But the objection to either proceeding is twofold: first, it would be harsh and unjust to forfeit the rights of the present stockholders, a large majority of whom have bought their stock in good faith in the market, for the wrong-doing of their predecessors; second, in either case above supposed, equity could only distribute the assets as in case of bankruptcy or death; neither court nor Congress could compel the present owners to embark their property in continuing the exercise of the same franchise under a new organization. The railroad must then stop or be operated by the Government, or be sold at a forced sale in the market. To either of these proceedings there are grave public objections.

Certainly, Mr. President, there were grave public objections, the chief of which would have been, that it destroyed the great object for which these companies were organized, and for which they were endowed with these enormous powers flowing from the property committed to their hands.

I have read this much that we may see the case from testimony which cannot be disputed, for this report is founded upon abundant testimony which accompanies it and which sustains every allegation. No dissenting views were expressed, and it stands to-day as the recorded judgment, accepted and acted upon by the House of Representatives of the United States, after the fullest consideration and examination of all the facts. But the Government did not proceed, as it had a right to do, according to the opinion of this committee, to revoke this charter, to annul any privilege, to deprive them of any right. Proceedings I believe were taken in one of the courts of the United States, to recover from some of these corporators individually, the money which they had transferred to their own pockets in violation of their trust. For some reason or other that effort seems to have been unsuccessful. I care not now to criticise the vigor or the ability of the prosecution, although I have heard both questioned. But we see what has been done in the past, confessedly proven to be done, the complete destruction and perversion of the objects for which these two laws were passed; and what is our condition to-day? Has any remedy been furnished; has any portion of this money been refunded? Have the other provisions of the law been carried out satisfactorily to Congress? No, sir. I do not care to repeat the statements which have been made by the honorable Senator who reported this bill from the Judiciary Committee or his able associates, which stand unchallenged by any minority report or upon the floor of the Senate; but it seems that the sinking fund provided for in the sixth section of the act of 1862 is as yet without one dollar. I mean that up to the 1st of last January not a farthing had been paid, but under a construction of the company or that of their private counsel, which they so readily obey, "net profits" are held to mean whatever the will of the company shall define them to mean, that everything shall be paid in preference to the sum of 5 per cent. net profits.

As to the past this bill proposes no interference, but I believe an adjudication is now pending before another branch of the Government which shall so far as the past is concerned decide the question. As to the future this bill proposes an amendment. It proposes in terms, which have been read in detail in debate, that a sinking fund, a regular annual or semi-annual accumulation of the funds of the corporation shall be established, all of which, be it remembered, are the proceeds of Government bonds or Government lands held by the company in trust for the effectuation of one great object. For whose use is this accumulation to take place? For the sole use of the company itself. It is not proposed that one dollar more shall reach the Treasury of the United States at this time. It is not proposed to hasten the payment of the debt one day, nor to alter the terms of payment, either as to the time of payment or the sum to be paid. It seeks only to provide security, that when the principal and interest shall become due in 1898, or in twenty years from this time, the means of payment shall then be ready to meet and discharge both; so that twenty years hence the company shall be solvent and capable of prosecuting the great object for which it was created and which if insolvent it would be incapable of doing.

This proposition of the Judiciary Committee, which I shall not detail at greater length, has been denounced as an attempt to impair the obligation of a contract, and so to be in conflict with the spirit, not the letter, of the Constitution. Never was there a more palpable misdescription of the object and effect of this measure. It is not an act to impair in any degree the obligation of a contract, but rather an act to assist and promote the performance of a contract, by averting a state of things which will render impossible the great and paramount object for which the contract was entered into, and whereby these corporations are made the agents of the Government and trustees of the public lands and money in order to effectuate it. If no steps shall be taken, and taken promptly, to arrest the present course of the companies, who are selling and dividing everything they can among their stockholders, in twenty years from now no alternative will be presented to the people and the Government of the United States, but that of losing their entire loan, which with simple interest would amount to a sum over $120,000,000, or else taking into their hands a railway two thousand miles long, subject to a prior lien of first mortgages, the principal of which alone is far more than the cost of building a new road. The United States cannot become the operator of a railway. No government however consolidated in executive power has yet done so successfully; and individual interest and enterprise and the spur of individual profit are essential for the proper management of such undertakings.

Then I ask, can Congress, as the guardian of the money and the interests of the American people, stand by and allow the great object of this work to fail? Can they suffer this road to be sold and pass out of the hands of corporators with whom there is such a contract? It seems to me it would be the clearest default in duty, to which every man among us would be and ought to be held strictly answerable to his constituency. The act of 1862 was altered and amended by the act of 1864; the land grants were doubled; half of the Government transportation was released; the iron and coal, those twin giants of industry and of necessity to a people, on all the lands were given for the purposes of this act; and for what object? For the profit of those corporators, to enrich the stockholders? No, sir. They were given to enable the companies to fulfill and accomplish the great object of their agency.

The honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] yesterday said that this company was "not incorporated for the purpose of paying its debts;" but I would say it was incorporated to be and remain a solvent instrument capable of performing the objects for which it was created. Its solvency and its ability to pay its debts are essential for the performance of the great object of its creation; and the power that made it can promote the object, by compelling such an administration of its affairs as will enable that corporation to do its duty under the law that brought it into being and by force of which alone it can exist.

I say if from any cause, dishonesty, incapacity or simple misfortune, the great object of the law is imperiled, it is within the inherent as well as expressly reserved power of the Government to protect the object by amendatory legislation, if it be requisite to accomplish that end. Mr. Huntington, the president of the company, admits, as I understand, in his statement before the Judiciary Committee, that insolvency is threatened, but whether he says so is not the question. It is within the competency and the discretion, and the plain duty of the Congress of the United States, to ascertain such facts for the information of its own conscience, and to act as to it shall seem meet and proper under all the circumstances.

Mr. President, the charge that this bill impairs the obligation of a contract, is not only serious as a matter of law, but even more serious as affecting the moral character of the American people. I do not stand here to inquire whether the Constitution, which contains so clear an inhibition to a State, affects in any way by intentment the functions of the General Government. I prefer to make a broader statement.

That property is the creation of law and can securely exist only under a government of laws is certain, and therefore, when by law a right of possession and enjoyment of property has been fairly acquired, it would be wholly subversive of every principle, to admit that it was competent in the law-making power to destroy that which it was designed to create and protect. All such pretensions are met and overthrown by reference to the fundamental principles upon which a government of laws is founded. Hence flows the duty of government, State and Federal, not to impair the obligation of contracts, which means, of course, the moral and legal binding force of laws in existence and under which the contract was created. The right to take private property for public use upon the payment of just compensation is, of course, excluded from this.

The interpretation of contracts is to carry into effect the mutual intent of the parties, and to do this the language they have used, in its just sense and meaning, is taken as the controlling guide. Where the contract is expressed in the words of a statute, the courts are bound to take the act as they find it, or to use the figure of the honorable Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.] "As the tree has fallen there must it lie."

The binding force of statutes upon courts of justice is well stated at page 85 of 1 Otto, the case of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company. I read the language of Justice Buller in an early case in the King's Bench, cited by the learned Judge DAVIS:

We are bound to take the act of Parliament as they have made it: a casus omnis can in no case be supplied by a court of law, for that would be to make laws; nor can I conceive that it is our province to consider whether such a law that has been passed be tyrannical or not.

And Lord Chief Baron Eyre, in a case in 1 Henry Blackstone's reports, said:

I venture to lay it down as a general rule respecting the interpretation of deeds, that all latitude of construction must submit to this restriction; namely, that the words may bear the sense which by construction is put upon them. If we step beyond this line, we no longer construe men's deeds, but make deeds for them.

Then said the Supreme Court:

This rule is as applicable to a statute as to a deed.—1 Otto, 85, 86.

Whether "the law be tyrannical or not" the court must construe it as they find it. Chief Baron Eyre says that "the words may bear the sense" which by construction is to be put upon them. No word can be superadded, and e converso none may be subtracted.

Mr. President, such was the rule laid down to the admiration and perfect satisfaction of the Pacific Railroad Companies, in a suit against them by the United States Government, to collect the interest upon the subsidy bonds loaned by the Government, and theretofore paid out of the public Treasury; and it was then, for want of a few simple and customary words to secure the repayment of interest upon bonds payable in thirty years and which had been regularly paid every six months by the United States, that the American people were informed, to what I believe was the astonishment of every one excepting the select few who had been parties to the drafting and passage of those acts under which the decision was reached, that on a loan of its credit by the Government for thirty years, during which time the interest would amount to more than double the principal, no interest whatever should be paid by the party to whom the loan was made, but all payments of interest should be postponed until the principal itself became due!

Is not such a result out of the usual course of business? May I not appeal to the common sense and experience of every man who hears me? What would be the fate of a counsel, of a conveyancer, of any simple scrivener, who should permit his client to make such a loan, in which the interest was so far more important than the principal, and make no provision in the instrument taken for its security for the payment of the interest as it should fall due? It is saying not too much to say that such an agent would be strongly suspected of infidelity to his client, and if not condemned as unfaithful, would be judged so incompetent that employment in similar cases would never happen to him again. I do not desire to criticise the opinion of the court under the law as they found it. It was so interpreted according to the strict letter of the statute, and all through the decision, as rendered by the learned jurist who is at present a member of this body and one of those who favor the present bill, will be found the expression showing that he held himself bound by the letter of the law as it stood, and he sought from no fact to obtain a construction, which would relieve the legislature from the effect of the language which they had seen fit to adopt.

I ask shall not the same rules of interpretation and construction be accepted now? If a single word could not be interpolated in the casus omnis of the act of 1862, what is to be said of the proposition now made by the opponents of this bill, to subtract an entire, independent, concluding, and controlling section of an act from its just place and weight in the construction with the remainder? By what canon of interpretation can warrant be discovered to drop an entire section from a statute, and control a statute without having reference to all its parts? Section 22 of the law of 1864 provides:

And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

We are now gravely asked to read that law with that section blotted out. It seems to me not more unreasonable, if the holder of any mortgage should, by the same methods of so-called interpretation, convert it into a deed in fee simple, simply by dropping out the clause of defeasance. One would be just as reasonable, and in my judgment just as successful, when urged before a court learned in the law.

These words "alter, amend or repeal" are words of common use and undoubted signification. Lexicographers give them. They are almost synonymous. Worcester says that alter means, "to change partially, to make otherwise or different, to vary, to modify." "Amend," he says, is "to reform, to correct, to make better, to rectify, to improve, to amend." "To repeal" is "to call back, to recall, synonymous with to abolish," and "to abolish," means "to make void, to annul, to abrogate, to revoke, to repeal." I will not agree that these words can be deprived of any of their usual force and meaning as defined in their common acceptance. I ask with confidence of those who hear me, in the language of Lord Chief Baron Eyre, are they to be permitted "to bear their sense," the sense that universal use and acceptance has always assigned to them? If this reasonable and admitted rule be adopted, is not this question lifted out of all doubt? For if these words are permitted to bear their sense, then the act of Congress of 1862 or of 1864 is open at any time at the will of Congress to alteration, amendment, or repeal.

But, sir, I have sought light from every quarter in this case. There were made before the Senate Judiciary Committee, on behalf of the railroad companies, many able arguments by distinguished men, to whose arguments I have given careful examination, having been supplied with them in printed form, and having read them with the respect to which the character and standing of their authors entitle them. One of the counsel, Mr. Shellabarger, of Ohio, who has so full knowledge of the affairs of this Pacific Railroad, shown by the report in which he joined and from which I gave copious extracts at the beginning of my remarks, undertakes to find a reason why this twenty-second section does not apply to the loan of its credit by the Government, and the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] has taken the same position. At page 56 of the pamphlet of arguments before the Judiciary Committee, printed for the use of the company, from which I now read, Mr. Shellabarger asserts, that the effect of this law compelling the creation of a sinking fund for the protection of the debt, and the preservation of the solvency of the company in order that it may be able to perform its duties under the act, is in effect making a loan due thirty years from the date immediately due; or, in his own words, converting "a thirty-year loan into a call loan," thereby impairing the obligation of a contract, and in order to overcome the power expressly reserved to Congress to alter, amend, or repeal the act he makes this criticism:

First of all, let it be carefully kept in mind that the parts of these acts which tender this loan and fix its terms are in no proper sense parts or elements of the charter or incorporation, and, as such, defining the nature of the corporate life, power, and relations to the public, but, on the contrary, these parts of the act making the loan and fixing the date of its payment are severable and distinct parts of the acts, directed to the tender and making of a loan to the corporation, and to fixing its exact terms. These loan clauses are no more part of the charter proper than they would be, were they embodied in a separate statute, as they might have been.

And again, at the next page:

The parts of these acts which fix the terms of the loan and tender it to us are, in a legal sense, no part of the charter proper, but are in the nature of a commercial and personal contract between two parties, as borrower and lender, having its own distinct and fixed terms as a contract, such parts of these acts are not subject to the same rules of interpretation as are those parts directly creating the corporation and bestowing its powers, and which more immediately affect the public, as public laws.

And following in the track of the counsel for the railroad companies, the honorable Senator from Georgia at page 32 of the speech delivered by him on the 27th of March spoke in reply to a question by Mr. BECK:

Mr. BECK. The act of 1864 gives the right to alter, amend, and repeal. In your mind that is an absolute nullity on that position.

Mr. HILL. I say those words apply to the exercise of the corporate franchise; but they are an absolute nullity as applied to the contract.

Mr. President, by what authority Mr. Shellabarger and the honorable Senator omit the language of the act I do not know. The repealing clause of the act of 1864 does not give to Congress the power at any time to alter, amend, or repeal the incorporation of the company or any of its franchises. It gives to Congress the right to "repeal this act." I ask by what authority is it that you are to apply a different rule of interpretation to one section of an act than to another. It is a rule of construction never doubted, that a law must be read each part having reference to every other part. It is without warrant of any rule of construction known to me, that a concluding and interpreting section of an act is to be read in different senses when applied to different parts of the same law. At page 59 of his argument, Mr. Shellabarger says:

"The provision making this loan," the Supreme Court says, "are outside of the usual course of legislative action concerning grants to railroads, and cannot be properly construed without reference to the circumstances which existed when it was passed."

But nowhere has the Supreme Court said that any one provision or section of this law was to be construed "outside" of the act in which it was contained. It is, with all due respect to the honorable Senator and the able counsel who urged this defense, a perversion and misapplication of the language and meaning of the court. At page 79 the judge said this:

Many of the provisions of the original act of 1862 are outside of the usual course of legislative action concerning grants to railroads, and cannot be properly construed without reference to the circumstances which existed when it was passed.

Will it be believed that this language of the court, construing an act by the surrounding facts of contemporaneous history, should gravely be sought as an authority to control the interpretation of one portion of the act of 1864 by wholly omitting another portion of the act? Judge DAVIS, who delivered this opinion, nowhere suggested the idea that there was anything special or different, more or less restrained, in the power of the Government over one section of that act than over any other section or part. On the contrary, so far as the expression of one thing shall be held the exclusion of another thing, Judge DAVIS did intimate throughout the whole of the opinion that if that power of amendment had been exercised, and words had been found in a statute passed in pursuance of the power, his decision would not have been that which it was. It is the act of 1864 that we are construing; and this expression of the court, which Mr. Shellabarger has forced from its natural meaning, and the phrase which he has torn from its context, when you come to read it, would have application only to the act of 1862, and then only in regard to the construction to be given to the entire act in reference to historical events. I do not dispute the ingenuity of this proposition but altogether deny its soundness or relevancy. Mr. Shellabarger says it "might as well have been a separate act." My answer is that it was not a separate act. It was a single act containing many provisions, but all subject to the final section. The power of the Government to alter, amend, or repeal ran just as much to one part of the act as to any other.

Therefore, to say what it might have been as a separate act is, of course, to state a new case. Nor did the Supreme Court say that any provision of the statute or any section of the statute was "outside" of it, but merely that the whole statute was "outside the usual course of legislation concerning grants to railroads." Nowhere in the whole opinion can any warrant be found for saying that a different rule of interpretation is to be applied to one as against another provision of the act. The honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] says at page 14 of the same speech:

It is that the Government is not a party to contracts like these contracts of loan in its character as a sovereign but only as a civil corporation. As a sovereign the Government does not lend money. As a civil corporation it does not legislate. As a civil corporation it is subject to the law of contracts precisely as are individuals. When, therefore, the Government as a civil corporation enters into such contracts, it cannot reserve the right to use its legislative powers as a sovereign to alter, change, or annul that contract to which it is a party. As a civil corporation it can reserve no power which in its character as a civil corporation it does not possess.

But surely the fountain of authority to pass every part and all the parts of this statute is one and the same. The law-making power originated every franchise, every grant, every authority for every contract, and all in the same capacity as the legislative branch of the Government. It reserved to Congress the same right to alter and amend every feature alike, and has the same power over all, and can repeal one or all with equal right and power.

At page 78 of the same book of arguments on behalf of the railroad companies is a letter from Mr. Sidney Bartlett, of Boston, a gentleman so well known and conspicuous for his professional ability, whose powers of discrimination in the use of language are admitted and admired by all and excelled by none. This letter was produced by Mr. Shellabarger in aid of the view he had taken, and in which Mr. Bartlett criticises the power of Congress under this power to alter, amend, or repeal the act of 1862 or 1864 which he restrainedly declares are "debatable if not difficult questions." He uses these words:

The next question raised by the proposed legislation is the following: Under the power to alter or amend, can legislation be sustained which shall make a debt already incurred, and by contract—that is, by charter—made payable with interest in thirty years, payable immediately, in part or in whole?

I merely refer to the use of language by this careful master of the art of language, to show that he uses the charter and the contract as convertible terms, and that, when he speaks of the charter he speaks of the contract, and when he speaks of the contract he speaks of the charter. I submit that this is also the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case in 1 Otto; that the contract which is referred to by the court is the contract that was created by the granting of a franchise, and the acceptance by the corporation, or of any act performed by the corporation under the authority of the charter; that you cannot separate one from the other; you cannot detach the contract from the charter; for the charter and its acceptance constitute the contract; the contract was formed by the passage of the law and the assumption of duty under it by the party who accepts the franchise.

No, Mr. President, these arguments are ingenious but they are met by the plain legislative language which cannot be frittered away or argued out of its natural and just force. No case has been cited, or can be cited, all the way from the Dartmouth college case to this day, which contains any such facts as the present. No court ever decided that such an express power of amendment and repeal could not be exercised; but on the contrary, the Supreme Court by a unanimous opinion, in the case of Tomlinson vs. Jessup, 15 Wallace, which has been referred to, have given the fullest effect to the power of reservation of a charter and of all the contracts under it. I read from page 459. The case has been cited before but I read now from it in order to sustain the position which I have taken:

The power reserved to the State by the law of 1841 authorized any change in the contract as it originally existed, or as subsequently modified, or its entire revocation. The original corporators or subsequent stockholders took their interests with knowledge of the existence of this power, and of the possibility of its exercise at any time in the discretion of the Legislature. The object of the reservation, and of similar reservations in other charters, is to prevent a grant of corporate rights and privileges in a form which will preclude legislative interference with their exercise if the public interest should at any time require such interference. It is a provision intended to preserve to the State control over its contract with the corporators, which without that provision would be irrevocable and protected from any measures affecting its obligation.

Immunity from taxation, constituting in these cases a part of the contract with the Government, is, by the reservation of power such as is contained in the law of 1841, subject to be revoked equally with any other provision of the charter, whenever the Legislature may deem it expedient for the public interests that the revocation shall be made. The reservation affects the entire relation between the State and the corporation, and places under legislative control all rights, privileges, and immunities derived by its charter directly from the State.

There was also a more restrained power of amendment and repeal contained in section 18 of the act of 1862, and I am disposed to believe with the committee of the House, that there might have been full warrant for the present law or for the repeal under that. But looking at the fact, as stated by the Supreme Court in 1 Otto, that the enterprise languished and virtually had failed, and but for the act of 1864 would have had no vitality, is not clearly one of the considerations for the passage of the law of 1864 and its acceptance by the company, with all its enormous grant of money and land, the expressed and unrestricted reserved right "to alter, amend and repeal," with no limit but the discretion of Congress, enlightened by reason and justice, and acting in subordination to the great first principles of the social compact for the protection of property lawfully acquired?

Mr. President, there seems to me a strange insensibility on the part of the American people to the immense practical importance of this legislation. The apparent indifference with which they witness the enactment of laws, by force of which they and their posterity are saddled with debts of enormous magnitude, amazes me—nor is my surprise lessened to see members of either branch of Congress, who desire and expect to be maintained in their positions as popular representatives, so hastily and recklessly dispose of the hard-earned property of the people, and yet expect to retain their confidence and approval. When I contrast the coolness and indifference with which measures involving such enormous pecuniary interests to the whole people are acted upon, with the excitement I have seen in this Senate and in the other House over some such comparatively small matter as the payment of a few thousand dollars more or less to the Chief Magistrate of the Union; when I have seen special bills brought in here, and valuable public time occupied, and an immense degree of interest excited and sensational attention given by the press and people to the question whether the Chief Magistrate of this country should receive $50,000 a year or $25,000, or whether the Supreme Court judges should receive two or three thousand dollars more or less of salary, or whether the Cabinet officers should be advanced to a rate that would support them a little more independently without draining their private resources to maintain the official hospitalities expected from them, or when members of Congress themselves are to have their pay advanced so that there shall be an equalization of receipts by all, as based upon the present mileage allowance—when I see all this popular interest and excitement on such subjects and then see votes given and bills passed which carry away from the public Treasury, and into the coffers of corporations and the pockets of skillful lobbyists—not money by thousands—but millions, such sums as by comparison render the expenses of the executive branch mere drops in the bucket, I cannot but be amazed. Here we are in this bill dealing with sums so great, that the question of executive or legislative or judicial salaries is utterly dwarfed in comparison, and yet there seems to be no popular comprehension, and sometimes I think very little congressional comprehension, of the gravity of the amounts involved and the consequences to our Government.

We were discussing here a few years ago the question of the pay of the Chief Magistrate, and some Senators were asserting that that which barely paid the actual expenses of George Washington in 1789 was quite enough and more than enough for his successor in 1876; and I happen to turn to a bit of testimony found on the second page of the report on this same Credit Mobilier subject, in which the salary paid to one Mr. Franchot as an agent for one of these companies is stated, upon whom was devolved the onerous duty and incredible hardship of spending the winter in Washington and "watching the interests of the Central Pacific Railroad Company" for which service the small remuneration of $20,000 a year was allowed! I know not what may be the allowances of the presidents and high officers of these great corporations, but I suppose they all are in the same proportion; and such sums are mere flea-bites, so to speak, compared to the millions taken every year from the Treasury of the United States in the payment of interest on these subsidy bonds, every dollar of which represents some human being's toil from sunrise until sunset.

Mr. President, these great debts, which are being piled upon the toiling masses of this country in total disregard of the sufferings which are causing one universal groan to arise all over the land, are greatly to be deplored and dreaded in their results—but still more formidable is the question of the inroads upon and the overthrow of the great republican idea of disintegration, and distribution of power. The possession of irresponsible power never failed in human history to corrupt its possessor. Well did our forefathers know it. They knew that power, like jealousy, grew with what it fed upon, and in many modes in building up this Government they sought to check its growth.

They did not intend that the individual should wither, but by encouraging individuality they sought to encourage the growth of men. They sought, not strength by massing weakness, that atom might protect atom, but, by creating the greatest number of vigorous integers, to make the state strong. Out of individuality grows competition; out of consolidation grows monopoly. Hence their political institutions, the abolition of rank and title, abolition of the rule of primogeniture, an equal division of estates without regard to sex, the subjection of lands to the payment of debts, the equality of all men before the law, wide-spread suffrage, destruction of entailed estates, limitation upon devises, all tending to facilitate the distribution of wealth and power and to prevent perpetuities. And yet the doctrine and practice of incorporation was suffered to creep in, destroying as it does individuality, consolidating as it does all power and making its owners morally irresponsible, creating artificial beings who never die and whose estates are never to be distributed, but are perpetual.

Mr. President, the consequences of this may be remote, but to my eye they are certain. It is the creation of power without moral and legal responsibility, and that is fatal to any form of government under which it shall be encouraged or permitted to exist.

The consequences of this measure now proposed are intended not for to-day so much, as for a future time when few or none of those of us who now discuss it will be here. It is for the future that this law is prepared; it is for generations perhaps yet unborn that this law is demanded. I hold it to be the duty of Congress to assert, and to exercise in the spirit of high and wise discretion, its reserved power over the great public interests touched by these corporations. I hold that nothing can justify the release of any portion of that power. I hold that no compromise of any kind can be discussed in relation to that power. This is no mere grant of land, it is no mere grant of money, because the grants of both have reached such a magnitude, that the power contained in their possession becomes political power; and it may well be that, in the generations yet to come, the vast population who are to inhabit the grand territory traversed by these railways, to fill it with American activity and enterprise, over whose necessities of transportation, over whose necessities for fuel, over whose necessities for the arts and occupations of life as connected with iron, the great working metal of the world, and coal its necessary coadjutor—it may be that those people will come to ask whether they are to live under the principles of a free constitution or under the by-laws of a corporation, which is without restraint except those limitations that human endurance will ever put upon power, let it assume what shape it may.

Sir, I hope and pray that this Congress will not release one iota of its power of amendment, alteration, or repeal over the acts which brought into being these artificial persons and created them the agents of the American people, to use the money and the property of that people for the public welfare and not for private profit. It is my sense of the importance of this bill, of the magnitude of the consequences involved in the decision of the Senate that has induced me to detain it so long.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President—

Mr. THURMAN. Before the Senator from Virginia proceeds, I rise to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to sit this bill out to-day.

Mr. EATON. I hope the Senate will not do anything of that kind. This is a matter too large to be sat out to-day, in my judgment.

Mr. PADDOCK. Do I understand the remark of the Senator from Ohio to be more than a suggestion that we shall sit it out to-day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The matter rests wholly with the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. There is no motion.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, before proceeding to discuss the two bills reported respectively from the Committees on the Judiciary and Railroads, touching the debts due from the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific roads to the United States, I consider it appropriate to make a brief statement of the FACTS OF THE CASE.

The first law authorizing the construction of a railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean was passed July 1, 1862, and reserved to Congress the right at any time to add to, alter, amend, or repeal the act. The United States were to issue their bonds for the use of the companies, bearing 6 per cent. interest, which aggregated for the Union Pacific $27,236,512. These bonds constituted ipso facto a first mortgage upon the roads and all their stock, &c. On the 2d July, 1864, another law was passed which contained a proviso differing only from that in the law of 1862 in that it omitted the words "add to." This last permitted the companies to borrow money and issue their bonds for it to an amount not to exceed the bonds issued by the Government and displaced the first mortgage of the Government and gave these last-named bonds the priority.

Under this authority the Union Pacific issued its 6 per cent. bonds for $27,232,000, which are a first mortgage. The annual interest on the bonds issued by the Government is $1,634,190.72, payable semi-annually. The annual interest on the first-mortgage bonds is $1,643,920.

To indemnify the Government for the interest paid by it annually the law allowed the retention of one-half of the amount due each year from the Government to the roads for transportation of troops, supplies, mails, &c., and also required the companies to pay each 5 per cent. upon their net earnings. As was only to be expected, a difference arose between the roads and the Government as to what constituted net earnings. The Government said that net earnings were what remained after deducting from the gross income nothing but operating expenses. The roads said that net earnings were only the residuum of income after paying all just and lawful obligations. The 5 per cent. on net earnings payable to the Government under existing laws is in round numbers $250,000 and the one-half transportation amount $421,000, which together make $671,000. The interest paid by the Government annually on its Union Pacific Railroad bonds is as stated above $1,634,190.72. Deducting the sum received by the Government from the interest it pays and we have $863,190 paid out each year by the Government in excess of what it is entitled to and can take under the present law. The whole interest paid by the Government to this time is $15,969,801.45, of which $5,134,327.84 have been repaid by the company in the manner prescribed by law, leaving $10,835,473.61 still unpaid. But the company claims further credits amounting to $2,899,652, which if allowed will leave the balance due the Government of interest paid by it of $7,935,216.1.

The condition of the Central Pacific is very similar. The loan to it and to the Western Pacific is $27,555,120 at 6 per cent., the interest paid by the Government in semi-annual installments being $1,671,340.80. The interest paid by the Government and not refunded is $13,508,338.65.

The half-transportation account for the past warrants an estimate for the future of $200,000 each year, and the 5 per cent. of net earnings may be put upon the same basis at $300,000, making half a million in all. Taking this from the interest paid by the Government, it leaves the road in arrear each year about $1,170,000.

The Committee on Railroads, in the elaborate and able report presented by them on this subject, estimate that at the maturity of the bonds issued by the Government to the two roads, the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, principal and interest, will amount to $154,258,137. If no sums are paid to the Government by the roads except as now provided by law, the committee estimate that after deducting credits already given and those to be annually received, the roads will be in arrear the enormous sum of $120,000,000 to the Government alone. Add to this the principal of their first-mortgage bonds—for they are paying the interest on them—which is in round numbers $55,000,000, and we find that twenty-two years hence—not a long time in the existence of a government or a great public corporation—the debt of the two roads will be $175,000,000.

THIS IS A SITUATION FULL of peril to the Government and to the stockholders of the road themselves. There is danger that the Government may lose the whole or at least a large part of its debt or be forced into the purchase of the roads, and I would consider this last alternative a greater evil and a result more to be deplored than the loss of all the money. I would never be willing to see the United States become owners and managers of a large railroad corporation. Carried on as it would have to be by an immense corps of officers and employes, it would never be profitable. It would add to the already overgrown patronage of the Executive, afford another opportunity for official plunder and dishonesty, swell and enlarge the powers of the General Government. It would be an utterly irresponsible corporation, doing absolutely as it pleased and liable to nobody for damages for anything. No session of Congress could occur in which its affairs would not be the subject of debate and probably of legislation.

On the other hand the purchase of the roads by either Congress or any other party for any sum less than the lien upon them would destroy the stock and be attended with its total loss to the stockholders. So that have every interest to agree upon some measure. The stockholders ought to strive to save their stock and retain control of the road, and the Government to save itself if it could without having to buy and carry on a railroad.

BOTH THE PARTIES

THE ENDS TO BE ATTAINED ARE:

1. To save the Government as far as possible.
 2. To interfere as little as may be with the control of the road.
 3. Not to disturb any vested rights.
 4. Not to destroy the stock, but to leave the roads at the end of the century free of debt, the stock unimpaired in value, and the stockholders in the complete possession and enjoyment of their property.
- If these things can be accomplished everybody ought to be satisfied. Much has been said of the

POWER OF THESE CORPORATIONS

and the fear has been expressed that they would become so powerful as to defy the Government or even govern the Government. But I do not share these apprehensions. To enable companies to accomplish great results great powers must be given them. Without these the enterprises which excite the admiration of the world and affect the commerce, trade, and wealth of all civilized nations would never be completed or even undertaken.

And upon this point

A HISTORICAL RETROSPECT

may not be unprofitable. Under the Stuarts in England monopolies very similar in their powers and appliances to the modern corporation grew up and acquired a control not only of the government but of the whole business of the people, far greater than these companies are likely to do. Their powers were exercised entirely for private advantage, without any regard for the public good. Hume has described their birth and growth, the evils they inflicted upon the country. He says:

James had already, of his own accord, called in and annulled all the numerous patents for monopolies which had been granted by his predecessor, and which extremely fettered every species of domestic industry. But the exclusive companies still remained; another species of monopoly, by which almost all foreign trade, except that to France, was brought into the hands of a few rapacious engrossers, and all prospect of future improvement in commerce was forever sacrificed to a little temporary advantage of the sovereign. These companies, though arbitrarily elected, had carried their privileges so far that almost all the commerce of England was centered in London; and it appears that the customs of that port amounted to £100,000 a year, while those of all the kingdom beside yielded only £17,000. Nay, the whole trade of London was confined to about two hundred citizens, who were easily enabled, by combining among themselves, to fix whatever price they pleased both to the exports and imports of the nation. The committee appointed to examine this enormous grievance, one of the greatest which we read of in English history, insist on it as a fact well known and avowed, however contrary to present received opinion, that shipping and seamen had sensibly decayed during all the preceding reign. And though nothing be more common than complaints of the decay of trade even during the most flourishing periods, yet is this a consequence which might naturally result from such arbitrary establishments, at a time when the commerce of all other nations of Europe, except that of Scotland, enjoyed full liberty and indulgence.

And referring to a period a quarter of a century later, he says:

Monopolies were revived—an oppressive method of levying money, being unlimited as well as destructive of industry. The last Parliament of James, which abolished monopolies, had left an equitable exception in favor of new inventions, and on pretense of these and of erecting new companies and corporations was this grievance now renewed. The manufacture of soap was given to a company who paid a sum for their patent. Leather, salt, and many other commodities, even down to linen rags, were likewise put under restriction.

It is affirmed by Clarendon that so little benefit was reaped from these projects that of £200,000 thereby levied on the people scarcely fifteen hundred came into the king's coffers. Though we ought not to suspect the noble historian of exaggerations to the disadvantage of Charles's measures, this fact, it must be owned, appears somewhat incredible. The same author adds that the king's intention was to teach his subjects how unthrifty a thing it was to refuse reasonable supplies to the crown.

It would seem that these monopolies had acquired such power and were so securely fixed that they could control both king and Parliament and could never be shaken off. Yet not only were they overthrown and broken into pieces, but some of the best safeguards of English liberty grew out of them in the end. In describing the between them and the people, we seem to be narrating the history of the last few years of our own country. Investigating committees flourished in that day even more than now. In Anderson's History of Commerce it is told that in the Parliament which assembled on the 3d of November, 1740, "debates and speeches on the nation's grievances ran extremely high. The grievances complained of were so many and so various, both public and private, laid before the commons, by complaints and petitions, that there were above forty several committees appointed by that house for examining them; and of all those grievances, that of monopolies gave such offense that the house of commons expelled four of their own members who had been concerned in them, and many other members thereupon voluntarily withdrew themselves from Parliament and others were elected in their stead. In consequence of all which strict inquiries a law was passed which the king was obliged to consent to, 'that a parliament should be held at least once in three years for the future, even although the king should neglect to call it.'"

FINAL CONFLICT

So these mighty institutions were destroyed, and free parliaments grew out of their ruins.

THE ISSUE

between the Government and the railroads and between the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Railroads relates to the powers of Congress. It is claimed by the Judiciary Committee, and their bill embodies that idea, that, putting aside all consideration of the general power of Congress over corporations created by themselves, and looking only at the laws passed in regard to these two companies, the right reserved in the acts of 1862 and 1864 to add to, alter, amend, or repeal them, gives the right to pass the bill reported by them. On the other hand, the Railroad Committee insists that the acts referred to and the acceptance and performance of the conditions embraced in them gave the companies vested rights and constituted a contract between the United States and the corporations, which the former was bound by and could not violate; that the parties might make a new voluntary contract, but nothing more, unless the companies were guilty of such default as gave the courts jurisdiction to interfere, and that the words in the law, "add to, alter, amend, or repeal," are mere surplusage and mean nothing.

There is no occasion for claiming that Congress has power to invade vested rights or to impair the obligation of contracts. The bill of the Judiciary Committee does neither. Even the advocates of the bill of the Railroad Committee admit that touching certain matters and in certain events Congress may legislate as to these roads. The distinction seems to me to be very clear. If the proposed legislation is contrary to the original purpose of the charter and does not seek to carry it out, it should not be passed. But if it is only in the line of the first purposes of both parties and intended to execute their original intention and contract, then it is entirely within the powers of Congress. The case of the Holyoke Company vs. Lyman, 15 Wallace, quoted by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. MATTHEWS,] clearly defines and well expresses this. The court says:

Vested rights, it is conceded, cannot be destroyed or impaired under such a reserved power, but it is clear that the power may be exercised, and to almost any extent, to carry into effect the original purposes of the grant and to protect the rights of the public and of the corporations, or to promote the due administration of the affairs of the corporation.

Power to legislate, founded upon such a reservation, is certainly not without limit, but it may safely be affirmed that it reserves to the Legislature the authority to make any alteration or amendment in a charter granted subject to it that will not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant or any rights which have vested under it which the Legislature may deem necessary to secure either the object of the grant or any other public right not expressly granted away by the charter.

Under this decision it is only necessary to inquire whether the bill of the Judiciary Committee interferes with vested rights or "carries into effect the original purpose of the grant, protects the rights of the public and of the corporations, and promotes the due administration of the affairs of the corporation."

What vested right does it interfere with? It leaves the lands sold by the companies in the undisputed possession of the purchasers; it leaves the whole management and control of the road in the hands of its owners. It is not a vested right in the stockholders to pay themselves the profits of the road in the form of dividends and leave the debts of the road unprovided for. The original purposes of the grant were the construction of a great highway for the benefit of the public and the promotion of trade and commerce, the loan of large sums by the Government, the repayment of these sums by the roads, and the management in such a manner as to enable them to make the repayment. If the bill will accomplish these things or tends to accomplish them, then according to the Supreme Court it is entirely within the powers of Congress.

Unless the railroad companies deny their obligation to repay to the United States the bonds loaned them, with the accruing interest, they cannot deny the right of Congress to take such steps as may be necessary to secure ultimate payment, if such ultimate payment seems to be endangered. That it is so endangered the roads themselves admit, as has been clearly demonstrated by the Senator from Tennessee in his very able speech.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] says that he "utterly denies the power of Congress to declare that a debt not due is due and to make the debtor pay it before it is payable." The bill of the Judiciary Committee does not declare that the debt owing by the companies is due now to the United States, nor does it attempt to make them pay it before it is payable. When the companies accepted the terms tendered to them by the Government they accepted all the terms—each and every provision of the laws. They could not then be permitted to say, nor can they now, that they took so much as suited them and rejected the rest. Section 5256 of the Revised Statutes, part of the act of March 3, 1873, is as follows:

The books, records, correspondence, and all other documents of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, shall at all times be open to inspection by the Secretary of the Treasury, or such persons as he may delegate for that purpose. The laws of the United States providing for proceedings in bankruptcy shall not be held to apply to said corporation. No dividend shall hereafter be made by said company but from the actual net earnings thereof; and no new stock shall be issued or mortgage or pledges made on the property or future earnings of the company without leave of Congress, except for the purpose of funding and securing debt now existing or the renewals thereof. No director or officer of said road shall hereafter be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract therewith except for his lawful compensation as such officer. Any director or officer who shall pay or declare, or aid in paying or declaring, any dividend, or creating any mortgage or pledge prohibited by this act, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding two years, and by fine not exceeding $5,000.

Now, Mr. President, suppose the attempt should be made to throw the Union Pacific into bankruptcy, no other corporation and no individual in the whole nation being entitled to that exemption, would not the railroad company protect itself under this section? And could it do this without admitting and yielding to the force of all the other provisions of the act? This section contains this provision very applicable to the present condition of things:

And no new stock shall be issued, or mortgages or pledges made, on the property or future earnings of the company without leave of Congress, except for the purpose of funding and securing debt now existing, or the renewals thereof.

When they agreed that Congress might add to, alter, amend, or repeal the acts, they agreed to a certain extent to put Congress in the place of the courts and to allow that body to protect the Government by legislation instead of by appeal to judicial tribunals. Having agreed to this they cannot now plead to the jurisdiction of Congress. They said in substance that "We consent that you may add to, alter, amend, or repeal our charters, and we do this in order to put it in your power as a legislative body to protect the Government in the large loan now made to us, and to compel us to carry out in good faith all our obligations and duties, and especially the duty of repaying the advances made to us. To effectuate these things we are willing to substitute you for the courts."

Their agreement that Congress may do this is part of their contract, since it is insisted so strongly that a contract exists between the Government and the companies.

The view taken of the powers of Congress by the Judiciary Committee receives countenance from the provision of section 5256 of the Revised Statutes, which exempts the Union Pacific from the operation of the bankrupt law. This was probably done because it was considered that the Government had ample means of protecting itself under the provisions of the acts of 1862 and 1864. There is no other reasonable explanation of this feature of the act of 1873. When the Government as a creditor surrendered its right to throw the road into the bankrupt courts it must have been because it had in its own hands the means of self-protection.

The right of Congress to take steps for present protection to avoid ultimate loss is only the right secured to the creditor by statute law in every State in the Union, and is also one of the best-established features of equitable jurisdiction. If a man owes a debt not due for years to come and is absconding or removing his property an attachment lies to seize upon the property and hold it for the security of debt. The debt is not due, and the court does not so declare, yet the court sees that it is secured or that the debtor's property shall be held to answer it as far as it will go.

It is upon this same principle that courts seize upon railroads, displace the directors, and put the whole in the hands of receivers; that foreign attachments in equity lie; that injunctions are awarded; that bills "quia timeo" are maintained. We proceed now against these railroad companies because "we fear" that if we do not the Government will sustain a loss. And we fear so for the best of reasons; at least for a reason that the companies cannot dispute; that they themselves have told us so.

Now are there any special facts which justify the interference of Congress? I insist that there are.

The first duty of every corporation is to provide for the payment of its debts and to apply its means to that end. They should not be permitted in the same breath to declare and actually pay large dividends and to proclaim their own insolvency. Law and good faith both require them, if their income and assets are not sufficient to pay both debts and dividends, that the former should be paid to the exclusion of the latter. But that is not the mode of procedure of the companies. They seem inclined to say, dividends first, debts afterward; that is, if there is anything left after paying dividends. And this not only gives the right but makes it the imperative duty of Congress to interfere.

But this is not the only reason. The law of 1864 declared that the bonds loaned by the Government should constitute a lien upon all the property of the companies. This is the provision:

And to secure the repayment to the United States, as hereinafter provided, of the amount of said bonds so issued and delivered to said companies, together with all interest thereon which shall have been paid by the United States, the issue of said bonds and delivery to the companies shall, ipso facto, constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of the railroad and telegraph, together with the rolling stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description, and in consideration of which said bonds may be issued.

Suppose the roads take their means and instead of paying their debts divert their means to other purposes and invest them in property not subject to the mortgage of the United States; what then? Would not this make a just case of interference? It is no matter how profitable to the roads themselves this may be, because their profits derived from this source do not help the Government. They could keep on indefinitely; could continue to invest in other property which would add to their own means and give them increased dividends. They could in this way gradually but surely slip from under the Government mortgage as to much of their assets. That this process is going on, we find from the report of the Secretary of the Interior to this session of Congress, and the documents accompanying it. On the subject of branch roads the Government directors in their report of 1878 say:

With regard to the advances which the Union Pacific Company has made in aid of the roads mentioned, we can but repeat what we said in our report of 1872: "We do not question the wisdom of a policy which tends to secure to the trunk line the business which the said several roads may command. It could not well afford to have said business diverted from it. The policy, however, should be ordered as not to interfere with whatever present or future claim the Government may have for reimbursement." The ability of the company to make the advances referred to shows that it could have returned more to the Government than it has, and raises the question of the power of the company to divert its means into channels not authorized by the law.

The total advances made and the companies aided appear in the following table and those in last year's report:

Investment in Summit County Railroad Company: $134,500 bonds; 622 shares full-paid stock; 2,759 shares assessable stock, and valuable coal-lands. Estimated value and cost, $60,000.

Colorado Central Railroad has been aided to the extent of..... $1,610,497 86
Credits secured by Union Pacific Railroad Company 767,156 20

Balance without interest 843,341 66

The investments in the Utah Central, Utah Southern, and Utah Northern Companies have not been increased during the past year, and remain as stated in the report of the Government directors for the year ending June 30, 1876.

The statement of investments in the Republican Valley Railroad has not yet been received, and will not be in time to be embraced in this report. The Union Pacific Company's investment in this road is regarded as a safe and remunerative one, as very considerable aid has been secured from the counties into which it has been constructed, and the country will supply it with a large local business. The Utah Central, Utah Southern, and the Colorado Central are the most important of the roads aided. These, and the Utah Northern, are reported quite fully in the reports of the Government directors for the years 1872, 1873, and 1876. The Republican Valley road in Nebraska, and the Summit County Road in Utah, involve investments of more recent date.

Aid to other roads is in contemplation by the company; one to the Black Hills region, and one to secure the business of Montana. The Government directors believe that this policy of the company should at all times be held subordinate to its obligations to the United States.

These extracts show not only how extensive have been the investments of the Union Pacific in other roads, but indicate what is to be the policy in the future in this respect. However profitable this may be to the road itself and beneficial to the country at large, still it is, nevertheless, a divergence from the original charter, an enlargement of the powers of the road, and a withdrawal of the assets to purposes not contemplated.

It is admitted by the counsel for the roads, who put in a printed argument before the Judiciary Committee, that the clause reserving the right to amend, alter, or repeal has some meaning and significance, because he says that it "was inserted to protect the rights of the Government in case the companies should fail to build the roads, as was then not improbable that they would do, and the Government should be obliged to take up the unfinished work itself, or so alter the law as to bring in other parties to complete it."

There is nothing whatever in the law to justify this restricted interpretation. If this was the only purpose of the reservation the right to repeal need not have been reserved. But this is a concession on the part of the companies that the reservation is not entirely surplusage, but that it actually had vital force and means something. And if it is once conceded that the Congress could alter the law for failure to comply in any one respect, it is an admission that it could be legally altered or amended on account of any other failure of duty. If the companies are voluntarily doing anything to impair their ability to pay the Government or if they are putting any of their means out of the reach of the Government, unquestionably they are failing in the performance of one of the duties imposed by the laws.

But while I agree that we can constitutionally impose terms upon the roads and have power to pass the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, still I do not altogether approve all its provisions. The provision as to net earnings may give right to disputed constructions of the law and litigation in the courts, a thing to be avoided if possible. It would be better to require the roads to pay semi-annually a sum in gross, so many dollars, dependent upon no question of earnings or transportation, but such a sum as the roads could pay without serious injury and as would indemnify the Government in a reasonable time. This sum ought to be paid not in money but in bonds of the United States. There is now a premium upon the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds of the United States, which is likely to continue. If money is paid in, this premium will disarrange all our calculations about the sinking fund, for a million of money will not buy a million of bonds, and thus the sinking fund will fall short of realizing what is expected and desired. But if the companies, instead of paying in money are required to pay bonds, no such difficulty will arise and the effect of the fund can be easily estimated and a calculation will tell with certainty how much it will make by a given period.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, it is conceded on all sides that a sinking fund is necessary, or at any rate desirable. An important difference arises, however, as to the question whether such sinking fund shall be obtained by further contract between the Government and these parties, or shall be the result of the exercise of the will of one of the parties. The extraordinary claim of power to repeal not only the provisions of the charter but legislation affecting property rights, has been perhaps sufficiently discussed. I do not intend to go at any length into that question although I may refer to it incidentally as I proceed in my remarks; but I wish to call the attention of Senators to the fact, and specifically to the fact, that this bill furnishes the occasion for the fattest lawyers' fees, for the most glorious prospects in the legitimate pursuit of their profession, of any legislation in my memory that has ever passed Congress. It certainly cannot be called a statute of repose. It promises no rest either to the Government or the railroad companies.

There is a provision in this bill contingent upon the amount that shall be necessary to pay other obligations besides those due to the Government that the amount required for the sinking fund may be reduced, and one of the elements of calculation is put entirely within the power of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is to allow more than 75 per cent. or less as he may see fit; and one of the points which he is to decide upon is what are the necessary repairs of the Pacific roads. What does this term include? I have no doubt if the question were asked the Senator from Ohio who reports the bill [Mr. THURMAN] and the Senator from Vermont who sustains it [Mr. EDMUNDS] what is meant by "repairs," their definitions would be very different; certainly it would be very different between those who have unfriendly feelings toward these companies and desire to punish them, in the parlance of the prize ring to "punch them," and those who wish to deal fairly with them.

Do these "repairs" include the replacing of worn-out rails or not; and, if so, are iron rails to be replaced with steel rails? A common carrier is liable for accident upon his road unless he uses the very best appliances known to his business. Does this term "repairs" include the substitution for old appliances of those which experience or invention has produced in order to observe the common law in this regard? Does it mean the replacing of wooden bridges and trestle-work, which time makes more and more frail and infirm, by iron bridges as good business sense and tact would require should be done; or is a quarrel to be raised before the Secretary of the Treasury on this question every time a wooden trestle is taken away and an iron one put in place of it?

There is scarcely one of the details of the bill that is not liable to the same criticism. In fact, the bill prepares for an annual contest between the companies and the Government by that clause which goes upon the assumption that 75 per cent. of the net earnings may not pay their operating expenses and their interest on the first mortgage. They must make this manifest to the Secretary of the Treasury, and then he can allow them to retain more than 75 per cent. How make it manifest? Suppose he will not act on this reasonable showing? Suppose he will not take the responsibility of deciding any doubtful point in their favor, for fear of popular clamor or congressional censure? This is likely to happen. It did happen when the Secretary of the Treasury refused to pay one-half of the transportation account, illegally, according to the Supreme Court, and did so before the act of Congress authorizing him to retain it until action by the courts. This power confided to the Secretary of the Treasury supposes a duty on his part, and a right in the companies, which can be enforced in the courts, or should be, and hence it is the theory of the bill that there may be as many suits as there are years before the maturity of the bonds—suits depending upon a complicated tissue of facts and not upon mere questions of law that a single case would settle.

The first section of the bill goes upon the principle that not only the contract of the companies with the United States can be waived off under this right of amendment, but even any decision that the Supreme Court may make of the contract in favor of the companies may be disregarded. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] explains for the Judiciary Committee the reason why this provision was inserted in the bill, namely, "This section shall take effect on the 30th day of June next, and be applicable to all computations of net earnings thereafter; but it shall not affect any right of the United States or of either of said railroad companies existing prior thereto," by saying:

The reason of this last clause is that a suit is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, in which a judicial determination is sought as to what is the meaning of that provision in the charter which provides that the United States shall receive 5 per cent. of the net earnings, and very dissimilar views are taken of the right of the United States under that clause by the law officer of the Government on the one side and by the companies on the other. The law officer of the Government insists that there should be deducted from the gross receipts of the companies nothing but their operating expenses, in order to ascertain the sum upon which the 5 per cent is payable to the Government; in other words, that "net earnings" in that clause of the charter consist of gross receipts, less operating expenses alone. On the other hand, it is contended by the companies that "net earnings" are only what remains to each company after it has paid all its interest upon its debt which is inferior in lien to that of the United States, as well as that which is superior, and all other expenses of every kind and description; that, after deducting all these from the gross receipts, what remains and would be distributable as dividends to the shareholders is the sum upon which 5 per cent. is to be computed and paid.

The Senator says the bill proposes to leave that question to the Supreme Court as far as the past is concerned, but for the future the bill is to substitute the meaning of Congress for what the Supreme Court may say is the proper interpretation of a contract to run by its terms until 1900. By this provision a serious legal question is raised, going to the very root of this legislation, that the Supreme Court must ultimately decide, and that is whether the right of amendment of the charter or contract, "having due regard to the rights of the companies," gives to Congress the power to impair rights vested under it, and which have been judicially ascertained by the highest tribunal of the land.

In short, a contest arises that goes to the very root of the matter. Have we the legal power to pass this bill? The question is by no means the clear one assumed by the Judiciary Committee. The decisions of the courts, from Marbury vs. Madison, guard rights vested under legislation against invasion under subsequent legislation and limit the effect of a legislative reservation to alter and amend within boundaries that protect private and corporate rights.

The force of these decisions and of this principle was amply recognized in 1862, when the power to alter, amend, and repeal was limited by the condition that due regard should be had to the rights of the parties. The power conferred by the act of 1864 related to the same subject-matter, and must be construed pari materia with that of 1862. In any event, in my judgment, it must be so construed as not to impair the obligation of existing contracts. Sound morals so require. I differ with my colleague in his position on this matter. I do not deem it ridiculous to hold that the nation owes the same honorable dealing to its debtors and creditors that a private man owes to his. We are stronger. We love to call ourselves sovereign. But how long has it been that might makes right or excuses violated faith? And Congress has no more right to violate its promises, either in letter or spirit, to an artificial person, like a corporation, than to a natural person. It has no more right to take back its promises to a corporation that it has created than to one which it has not. While arraigning these corporations for acting in bad faith, let us keep our legislative garments clean.

Undoubtedly any State can enact as part of its general corporation law that all corporations organized under it shall set apart 25 or 50 per cent. of their net earnings for the security of creditors, and if corporations organize under it they cannot complain. But that is not the case here. The Government is a contracting party; in the language of the Supreme Court, it held out inducements for capital and enterprise to embark in this undertaking, one of which was that the interest should not be exacted until the maturity of the bonds, and one-half transportation and 5 per cent. of net earnings should be annually applied on it. Now, after the inducements have had their effect, and capital and enterprise have accepted and built the road, it is proposed to repeal the inducements, to break the promises; and this is justified on the ground of power. I concur with those Senators who say that this is not only a violation of the Constitution by impairing the obligation of contracts, but of those moral instincts and principles of natural justice which underlie society and make civilization possible; and it is not philosophy which finds anything unnatural in this position.

But all these questions are to be decided by the Supreme Court, and we may find ourselves back again where we started, as we were so recently set back.

My colleague objected to the assent of the companies being asked to the modifications of the contract contained in our legislation, and said, as he did in his speech two years ago, that the bill on that theory ought to be transmitted for approval to the presidents of the companies as well as to the President of the United States. The object of such assent is to avoid litigation. Such an assent was sought in 1862 and 1864. I do not know that it was then claimed that it was illegal, illogical, unconstitutional, or unfair to submit the bills in that form to the companies for their assent. Section 7 of the original act provided as follows:

And be it further enacted. That said company shall file their assent to this act, under the seal of said company, in the Department of the Interior, within one year after the passage of this act, and shall complete said railroad and telegraph from the point of beginning, as herein provided, to the western boundary of Nevada Territory, before the 1st day of July, 1874.

Where is the impropriety of submitting the present act to the companies for their assent? The subsequent act of 1864 had the same provision for such assent, requiring it to be filed within a year, under the seal of the company. If that act was an exercise of power complete when it sprang from the legislative will, as it is claimed that a law is, that we legislate and do not contract, why require this assent of the companies to its validity, to its going into effect? New conditions are to be now required, and old modes of securing them, if now asked for, are denounced as unusual, unconstitutional, and infringing the dignity of Congress, or submitting to a corporation that which only can be submitted to the Executive. Why, sir, in the State law-books statutes will be found, over and over again, that where modifications are made in the privileges granted to corporations, or restrictions are made on them, the companies are required to file their assent to the act. They might be piled up by the dozen and hundreds to show that I am correct in my remark in that particular.

The Supreme Court of the United States said with reference to this matter that there was not merely a charter but a contract, referring to the Union Pacific Railroad. It might have said with reference to the Central Pacific road that there was no charter but a contract, for the charter was derived from the State of California, and subsequently from the State of Nevada, and those two States, embracing nearly the whole length of its road, authorized it to construct the road through their territories so far as the franchise was concerned. Only one hundred or one hundred and fifty miles toward Ogden were built under any assumed franchise from the Government of the United States. The laws we have passed on this subject, the laws of the State Legislatures, have never gone upon the presumption that it takes only one party to make a contract, or one party to alter it. Or is the animus of this legislation mere persecution, and that which the companies will assent to, however fair, liberal, and just, is to be rejected because they assent to it, to find something that will be distasteful to them? That is worse than the pitilessness of Shylock, for he did not seek to enforce a contract that Antonio had not assented to, or to vary one by his own will. He only asked what was nominated in the bond. Senators are so sensitive when it is suggested that a senatorial majority may be unjust, which by the way it sometimes is, and misinformed and inconsiderate, that they might repel the intimation that the duke made to the merchant of Venice if made by some observer to the railroad companies:

I am sorry for thee; thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

To justify this state of feeling Senators have lashed themselves into fury over the presence of the officers of the companies, at a time when the very life of the enterprises committed to them may be in peril, and have raked over the muck of forgotten slanders for motives for a heat that cannot be disguised. I do not care to go over that beaten track. If there is sufficient motive to be found in the acts of the Credit Mobilier for what would otherwise be inexcusable in this legislation, you stop short of your duty. It seems to me that this contract must be treated as subsisting, or as violated. Either forfeit the property to the Government and administer on it, or cease railing at the men who created it under contract with you while allowing them still to hold it. But this bill, with its declared purpose of still further agitation, gives no promise that these companies can be permanently dismissed from Washington. I fear they will still come between the wind and our nobility. They must do so in self-defense.

But there is a fairness to be observed even in such arraignments. When my colleague computes the cost of the roads as if the full value of the various bonds had been available for their construction and deduces therefrom that no money was paid for stock, he overlooks very discernable facts. It is well known that these roads were built during the period of the greatest depression of the Government credit. Government currency bonds were not worth more than ninety cents on the dollar. Mr. Dillon says that some of their income bonds, for which they have now a sinking fund, were sold at forty cents on the dollar. Labor and material had to be paid for in gold on the Pacific side, and at one period gold was bought at the rate of $220 in paper, and was always at an enormous premium. The debt now stands in magnified proportions compared with the value of the money loaned by the Government. Thus the proceeds of the twenty-five million eight hundred and eighty-five thousand one hundred and twenty dollars' worth of Government bonds issued by the Government to the Central and Western Pacific Road was but $19,119,552.92; an enormous shrinkage. Yet the whole amount of nearly $26,000,000 stands charged against those companies and is to be repaid in full by them in current money when due with the interest. I do not know whether it will be admitted that any equitable considerations arise therefrom; that the Government should consider that it advanced depreciated money and receives by its contract good money. But it is not fair to assume that the fearfully depreciated money of that day had the purchasing power of good money, or was as much aid in the enterprise as its nominal value indicated.

Again, not only was currency so greatly depreciated as compared with gold, but all articles needed in building railroads were at abnormal prices. Thus rails cost $100 per ton. Steel rails can now be bought at $40. Locomotives, of which the Government was a large competing buyer, cost $32,500 apiece, that can now be bought for $7,000. All iron, rails, and material for the building of the Central Pacific had to be sent round the Horn or across the Isthmus. Freight which are now $5 per ton cost from $25 to $33 per ton. The freight on a locomotive was $4,000, nearly its present price. Insurance was at war risks, 17 per cent., that is now 2½ per cent. The road was built through an uninhabited and mountainous country, where was nearly no timber, water, fuel, food, or forage, the Pacific side thousands of miles distant from the real base of supplies. Supplies for man and beast had to be hauled long distances. Even water had to be so hauled, there being none to be had for miles. It was the same with fuel, which had to be hauled eastward over six hundred miles for the use of trains. It is a standing wonder that the road was built at all, considering the engineering difficulties of the Sierras, the depreciation of the currency loaned, and the great cost of all necessary articles.

But after the track was laid across the mountains it was a matter of doubt whether it could be kept open through the winter snows. Ten first-class engines were necessary to a single snow-plow in some storms. Forty miles of snow-galleries were built, as solid in construction as timber and iron could make them, story on story against the sides of the mountains, to catch and carry over the avalanches that swept from the heights above. The cost of these structures on the average was $100,000 per mile, making the cost of that forty miles for snow-sheds alone as much as building two hundred and fifty miles of road would cost in a prairie country. But add to that the cost of the long tunnels, the deep cuts, the rock-ribbed mountains, which were deeply furrowed to make a bed for the iron track, with the expenses of equipment, stations, and other outlays, and some idea can be formed of the cost of the Central Pacific road across the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

Such a road could not be built without substantial Government assistance. Enterprising men could not have been induced to undertake it and push it through unless the Government had held out prospects of profit to them both in building and running the road; and the Government was liberal in promises, even if the currency in which it redeemed its immediate engagements was subsequently depreciated by the progress of the war. It did not seek to make a close bargain. Viewed from the stand-point of to-day, and now that the country has become accustomed to the benefits of the road so much that it has forgotten the great necessities that induced it, it made a bad bargain. The Judiciary Committee said in 1873 that it was a bad bargain, but there was no help for it.

I am not at all satisfied with the commentary that was made upon this opinion of the Committee of the Judiciary submitted February 24, 1871, by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] when attention was called to it the day before yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] This decision or opinion of the Judiciary Committee of that day says as plainly as the English language can say it that there was this bargain made between the companies and the United States, in effect that it was a bad bargain, but that there was no remedy except according to the terms of the contract. I venture to say that not a single man who assented to that report of the Judiciary Committee had an idea that the contract could be avoided by legislation. The very resolution of instruction which led to the report required the committee to ascertain "what legislation, if any, is necessary to compel reimbursement to the Government." They did not suggest any legislation, not a line of it; it is new light which they have acquired since, and this report is entirely in opposition to the report which they have submitted on the pending bill and to all the theories which they have advanced in this debate. They had then something to say about what would be honest on the part of the Government. Their solicitude on that point seems to have vanished; they are now only solicitous about the honesty of the corporations. The honesty and good faith of the Government does not seem to be within their guardianship as it was at that day. On page 4 of that report they say:

It is questionable, however, whether, in a case like this, where the Government, by its legislation, has encouraged the investment of capital in a work of national importance, it would be quite honest or becoming the dignity of the Government to shelter itself behind this technical rule of judicial construction. The stockholders of this company might well say that they understood these acts as they were understood by the two Houses of Congress at the time of their passage. It would be rather harsh treatment to twist out of these acts, by refinement of criticism, a construction unfavorable to the company, and directly opposed to what everybody in Congress and out of it understood to be their meaning at the time they were passed and the money invested.

But what difference does that meaning make under the present theories of this same committee? All they have to do is to pass a ten-line bill and vary it or repeal the whole thing. They may call it all a charter, divested of the character of a contract by their theories, and remedy the whole matter at will.

But furthermore they say :

Your committee were not called upon to criticize the wisdom of these acts of Congress, but to answer as to their true construction ; and in discharging this duty the committee is obliged to report the law as it is, without regard to what they might desire it to be.

And yet they were instructed to report further legislation provided it was necessary. They seemed then to think it was necessary to give it true construction to these laws. Why ? You can wipe out the law and the contract by substituting something else in place of it, under the power to amend and repeal, say the Judiciary Committee at the present day. Why then construe what is so easily obliterated ? They say, then :

It is proper however, to suggest that the company is clearly bound to keep its road in repair and in use ; and any failure of the company in this respect would authorize the Government to take possession of the road.

But nothing short of that would authorize them to do it. Until there was a default they could not proceed, through the courts or otherwise, to wind up the affairs of the corporation.

The refusal of the company to perform the services for the Government provided for by the sixth section, or to appropriate 5 per cent. of its net proceeds, would also authorize the Government to take possession.

All these things the company does, and these are the only contingencies, say the committee of that day, which would authorize the taking of such possession or dealing harshly with the companies.

But while the company shall continue to comply with these requirements, the Government, if it has not all the security it might desire, has all it ever stipulated for, and has no right to complain. And at the maturity of the bonds, if the company fail to pay principal and interest, the Government may take possession of the road, which the company, in the mean time, must keep in use and repair.

Any one who assumes that that opinion can be made consistent with the present position of the Judiciary Committee will be able to demonstrate that black is white, that good morals are bad morals, or any other proposition whatever, no matter what its absurdity. The whole report goes upon the presumption that there is a contract to be construed and not to be violated or set aside, and that the Government must be satisfied with the security which it took at that time and cannot enlarge the security, and if it made a bad bargain it must abide by it.

The Court of Claims in the case of the Union Pacific vs. The United States also said it was an improvident bargain but treated it as a bargain binding in the future as in the past. On page 583 of 10 Nott and Hopkins's Court of Claims Reports in the opinion of the court in that case is found the following :

But beyond the confines of all disputed construction there remains one uncontroverted provision in the statute, which seems decisive of the legislative intent. The only party to whom an option was reserved by the act is the Government, and that option is the important right of making the company's services as little or as great as it pleases. If it requires these services, the company cannot withhold them ; if it refuses all employment, the company cannot exact it. As the compact originally stood the Government could keep down this interest without the expenditure of any ready money, by simply furnishing to the company this employment, and it might push the advantage to an unlimited extent, even to carrying the earnings of the road to the liquidation of the debt before it had matured. The subsequent statute, which substituted a half for the whole of the earnings, did not affect the legal import of the Government's reserved discretion nor change the legal relations of the parties, nor vary the construction applicable to the original statute. It was an alteration in degree and not in kind, and still left the company in this matter of service entirely subject to the orders of the Government. In contemplation of law, the wrong and injury of which the Government complains are entirely of its own choosing. Courts of law cannot be invoked to aid persons where they themselves possess the means of redress. If an ordinary party were to come into another court with such a complaint, he would be told : " Either you have willfully withheld this employment from the other contractor or you have been unable to furnish it to him. If the former supposition is the fact, then the fault is your own, and you cannot ascribe wrong to one who, you confess, has always been willing to repay you in the manner which your agreement prescribes. If the latter is the fact, then, because the sources of payment which you provided disappoint you, and because the payment in kind which you elected to take gives you more of the transportation service than you really require, you are trying to shift your loss to other shippers than your own. Your misfortune is really this, that you made an improvident bargain."

I pause here to say that the Government has acted a most unbusiness part toward these companies by not giving them all its transportation instead of shipping by way of the isthmus, where it has had to pay all cash from the Treasury, when it could thereby have applied at least one-half of the cost to the extinguishment of this debt. It is not the fault of the companies, for they have always stood ready to do that transportation as low as for private parties. The interest could have thus been kept down, and perhaps extinguished. As the Court of Claims say, it is a wrong, and one of the Government's own choosing, and it ought not to complain of the accumulation of interest and make it an excuse for rigorous measures, when it had the remedy in its own hands under the contract, and to neglect that remedy was an expensive loss to itself and a gross injury to the companies. Congress should long ago have directed this to be done, and not have left the different Departments, which had transportation to be done but no particular interest in the reduction of this debt, to use other modes of transportation to the Pacific, which took large annual appropriations from the Treasury. The neglect of Congress has partly arisen from the jealousy of rival Pacific Railroad schemers, who feared to have such a law passed lest it would injure the interests of their projected roads when completed. But under the circumstances the accumulation of interest is not an argument against the companies.

But, resuming my train of remark, where is the great misfortune in making an " improvident bargain " provided the bargain may be varied in any way by the legislative will ? Certainly it is a very temporary misfortune. I should like to ask upon that theory where was the use of sending this to the Court of Claims and the United States Supreme Court at all ? Why was it necessary to go through all this machinery to get the construction of a law which was to be repealed as soon as it was construed, and the legislative will substituted for the construction of the courts ? These parties were sent to litigate this matter in the Court of Claims ; they were allowed to do so, and in the Supreme Court ; and these courts sent them back, or sent the United States back, with the assertion that you made an improvident bargain and you must abide by it. How do we propose to abide by it ? By this legislation, by exacting that which we did not exact before, by enlarging the terms of the bargain on behalf of the United States and shrinking them so far as the companies are concerned. That is the logic of the whole proposition. The Supreme Court unanimously confirmed this judgment of the Court of Claims, which was for $512,632.50 in favor of the company, and no one can read the opinion of the court, delivered by Justice Davis, and not see that the idea is carried all the way through it that a contract binding on the respective parties is being construed one to run till the maturity of the bonds, and not a mere moot case, the decision of which had no binding force on the future relations of the parties.

The court proceed to show that the enterprise was considered a national undertaking, for national purposes, and that the public mind was directed to the end in view rather than the particular means of securing it ; that the road was a military necessity, and that there were other active reasons for it, the protection of an exposed frontier, &c. ; that there was a vast unpeopled territory lying between the Missouri and the Sacramento Rivers, practically worthless without the facilities afforded by a railroad for the transportation of persons and property ; that its construction would develop the agricultural and mineral resources of those regions, bring them forward and make great States of them, turn them first as they have been into organized Territories, and some of them, like Nevada and Colorado, into States. This was pointed out by the Supreme Court as a reason for the bargain which the Government made at that time. They then go on and speak of the difficulty of building the road considered by many persons as insurmountable, building a railroad two thousand miles in length over deserts, across mountains, through a country inhabited by Indians jealous of intrusion upon their rights, and they say :

It is nothing to the purpose that the apprehended difficulties in a great measure disappeared after trial, and that the road was constructed at less cost of time and money than had been considered possible. No argument can be drawn from the wisdom that comes after the fact. Congress acted with reference to a state of things believed at the time to exist ; and, in interpreting its legislation, no aid can be derived from subsequent events. The project of building the road was not conceived for private ends ; and the prevalent opinion was that it could not be worked out by private capital alone. It was a national work, originating in national necessities, and requiring national assistance.

The policy of the country, to say nothing of the supposed want of constitutional power, stood in the way of the United States taking the work in its own hands. Even if this were not so, reasons of economy suggested that it were better to enlist private capital and enterprise in the project by offering the requisite inducements. Congress undertook to do this, in order to promote the construction and operation of a work deemed essential to the security of great public interests.—1 Otto, 81.

The Supreme Court directly recognizes that inducements, extraordinary inducements, were held out because there was an extraordinary work in hand, of great public utility, which the Government could not build properly except through private hands. Now, when the road is completed, these inducements, which undoubtedly were understood by the capitalists whose energy and capital were brought in play to be promised until the maturity of the bonds, these inducements, I say, which the Government then held out are now to be withdrawn and we are to say to them, " Why, we of course got you into this ; we have got you to labor for it ; in the language of the Supreme Court we got you to put your money into it ; but we only meant it until you got firmly fastened into the enterprise and then we would take it away from you ; then we would lay down new and exacting conditions, of which if we had notified you in advance you would not have taken a step toward building the road ; now we will pass a new law and not rest upon the judicial construction of the contract under which you operated. We will pass a new law varying these terms, which will remove the inducements under which you acted." I say every line of this decision goes upon the theory that that is improper, that it is unfair, unjust, contrary to public morals and in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The court say :

It is true, the scheme contemplated profit to individuals ; for, without a reasonable expectation of this, capital could not be obtained, nor the requisite skill and enterprise.

And yet by this bill all hope of profit would be cut off except in a certain contingency ; and the reasonable expectation which grew out of the legislation of that time is to be disappointed by taking away the opportunity of contemplated profit to individuals.

But this consideration does not in itself change the relation of the parties to this suit. This might have been so if the Government had incorporated a company to advance private interests, and agree to aid it on account of the supposed incidental advantages which the public would derive from the completion of the projected railway. But the primary object of the Government was to advance its own interests, and it endeavored to engage individual co-operation as a means to an end, the securing a road which could be used for its own purposes. The obligations, therefore, which were imposed on the company incorporated to build it must depend on the true meaning of the enactment itself, viewed in the light of contemporaneous history.

And further along in this decision they show what these companies can be required to do, which they say are three things, and three things only:

First, to pay said bonds at maturity; second, to allow the Government to retain the compensation due the corporation for services rendered, and apply the same to the payment of the bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid; third, to pay over to the Government, after the road shall have been fully completed, 5 per cent of the net earnings of the road, to be appropriated to the payment of the bonds and interest.—1 Id., 85.

On page 88 the court say:

Compelled as it—

The Government—

was to incorporate a private company to accomplish its object, it proffered the terms on which it would lend its aid. If deemed too liberal now, they were then considered, with the lights before it, not more than sufficient to engage the attention of enterprising men, who, if not themselves possessing capital, were in a position to command the use of it. These terms looked to ultimate security rather than immediate reimbursement, inasmuch as the corporation would require all its available means in construction; and to require it, while the work was in progress, to keep down the interest on the bonds of the United States, might seriously cripple the enterprise at a time when the primary object of Congress was to advance it. There could, however, be no reasonable objection to the application "of all compensation for services rendered for the Government" from the outset, and of "5 per cent. of the net earnings after the completion of the road" to the payment of the bonds and interest. These exactions were accordingly made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I notice that he reads very fairly the part of the decision that he thinks applies to his views, but I notice one phrase there that he reads, where the court say that the thing arranged for was looking to ultimate security. Now I wish to ask my honorable friend—

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator please read the passage? [Handing book.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I heard the Senator read it. I have no doubt the words "ultimate security" are there. It is at the bottom of the page, I see:

These terms looked to ultimate security rather than immediate reimbursement, inasmuch as the corporation would require all its available means in construction.

I wish to ask my honorable friend what there is in this proposition of the committee for a sinking fund but exactly that thing, ultimate security for the performance of a duty, which I believe everybody agrees rests upon these corporations, to meet their obligations to their creditors, including the United States, when they became due?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is very readily answered. Whatever Congress then did in making this contract looking to ultimate security is binding, but it has no right to come in now and enlarge the terms in favor of the United States, in order to still further look to ultimate security. That is all. I was reasoning from the late decision and showing that the court treated it as a contract between the parties; but because the Government has power, through its National Legislature, to express its will in proper cases by law, it is no more potential, in morals or justice, than a private individual dealing with another private individual, to avoid its contracts. It cannot tear up the parchment containing its stipulations and deny to the party of the other part the benefit of them because it can make laws. By what right can it, after having entered into an engagement, accepted by its creditor or debtor, declare that it will be bound differently from the terms of the engagement?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then "ultimate security" being the thing, and not present payment, that Congress was to look out for, the contract (as the Senator well styles it, an arrangement or contract) provided that the supreme legislative tribunal of the Union, standing indifferent between the people who furnished the money and the people who took it, should have the right in the future to change the constitution of the arrangement. Why is not that a pure exercise of the right of "ultimate security" which the companies themselves agreed to just as much as they did to that part of it which said that they should have the bonds?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator goes off into another branch of the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to discussing that fully. I have already referred to it. I do not believe that when, in 1862, it was provided that Congress should have the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act, having due regard to the rights of the parties, and subsequently, when, in 1864, they reserved the right to repeal or amend in order to carry out the objects of the act, which were the building and maintenance of a railroad, &c., that they thereby ever reserved or that it was thought by Congress that it reserved the power, or that it was understood by the companies that Congress reserved the power to say the Government will make the interest presently due, when it was to be due only when the bonds became due, or the bonds should be required to be paid before they matured, or more than the 5 per cent. should be retained, as this bill proposes swelling it to 25 per cent., or any other of the exactions which are now proposed could be made. In other words, I believe the power to amend, alter, and repeal was simply to provide that if these parties did not carry out their contract and build a good road, a first-class road, and keep it in repair and give the Government preference in the use of it, the Government would have the right to take it out of their hands and put it in the hands of men who would build it and run it properly. It was simply in reference to those matters that the power to amend or repeal was applied and understood by the parties at the time, and not to the taking back of the "inducements" which motivated private parties to enter into the contract.

And I repudiate the idea that Congress stands in the impartial relation to these parties which is claimed. Congress is the mere organ of the Government for certain purposes. It does not stand as an umpire between the Government and those who contract with it. In effect it is one of the parties to be bound by Government contracts, and has no right to deny or impair their obligations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will allow me, because I have entire faith in the sincerity of his convictions, it seems to me that he does not present the case that is presented by the bill now in hand. He says that it was not understood that Congress should require these people to pay their debt before it was due, as if this were the proposition. But it does not appear to us that this is the proposition. The proposition is, when you strip it of its flounces and furbelows, that each of these corporations shall not put its tolls into the pockets of its stockholders in such a way and to such an extent that it is confessedly impossible for it to meet its engagements; that is all.

Mr. SARGENT. The legislation provided for profits to the extent of 10 per cent. to the corporators and that one-half of the net earnings should be retained by the Government. The Senator's bill provides that the whole of the net earnings shall be paid to the Government—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh! no.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not mean the net earnings; I mean the compensation—

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; not the compensation.

Mr. SARGENT. I cannot yield to be interrupted by the Senator unless he lets me complete a sentence before another interruption.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly not. I am only making a suggestion by the courtesy of my friend, and I will not interrupt him to his annoyance for a moment.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator certainly interrupts me when I am trying to complete a sentence.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from California ought not to mistake the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I apologize, because I am acting by the grace of my friend entirely.

Mr. SARGENT. Not merely that; the Senator knows that I am never slow to allow interruptions, even if they come by compleats, as in this case, when the two prominent members of the Judiciary Committee unite their forces. That I have no objection to, only I desire that I may have an opportunity of completing my sentence, and not to be interrupted in the middle of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the Senator to believe that I am not disposed to complain of his right to take his own method to discuss the measure.

Mr. SARGENT. I was only going to say, and I will say, if allowed to do so, that by the original contract between these parties, as modified in 1864, it was provided that only one-half of the compensation for transportation should be retained by the Government, the other half to be paid over to the companies. So stated the Supreme Court when the question was submitted to it. That was not only the language but the meaning of the act, as construed by that tribunal, which was appealed to. Now comes in this proposition, and that not merely one-half the transportation money shall be retained in the Treasury of the United States, but that the other half shall be retained there also. Of course it is said it shall be treated as if it were the money of the companies. They shall not be allowed to use it; but we say we will allow them about two-thirds of the interest they could make upon it if they were allowed to handle it themselves; we will seize upon it and put it into our strong box, or put it into our bonds, and the lowest bonds we can devise, and they shall have the benefit of the interest so made, whereas they themselves claim, and unquestionably with truth, that the money in their hands will be worth a great deal more than the interest the Government will allow for it. I am perfectly willing, now that I have completed my sentence, to have the Senator say if that is not a fair statement of the original contract and the modification to be made by this bill.

In view of this decision, which so strongly emphasizes "the inducements held out" by the Government "to procure the requisite capital and enterprise," I again ask, as I did a day or two ago:

Was it understood by the companies and those who were enlisting in the enterprise that subsequently Congress should take back the original land which was given, or that they could subsequently make new conditions as soon as the road was built and was in operation, stating that the whole of the transportation should be paid to the Government and more than the 5 per cent. should be?

To that question the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] replied from his seat, "Certainly." Then were these "inducements" mere mockery. Then was the most stupendous confidence game played the world has ever seen; and the submission of any such question to the Supreme Court was a roaring farce. Suppose the Government should now pass an act guaranteeing to the Texas Pacific Company a stipulated interest on its bonds, so many thousand dollars per mile, if the road should be built in such a manner and with such speed, and exacting a mortgage on the completed road as security, reserving a right to alter and amend the act, would it be said, if it left the act unamended until after that company had completed its road, as required, that the Government could refuse to pay the interest, or any part of it, or compel the company to refund the interest as fast as it was paid, or forgo all dividends to deposit in its hands annually a sum of money not originally stipulated for, as a sinking fund or security? And yet why not, on the principle claimed by the majority of the Judiciary Committee? On that principle no company can rely on retaining the benefits of an executed contract. I warn my friends who are interested in the Texas Pacific road that you may assent to a principle that by and by may destroy you; for who would take your bonds with such practical repudiation insisted on by the Congress of the United States?

My colleague assumes that it is admitted that Congress has a right to alter a contract after default, if I correctly understand him. Everyone will admit that in its original legislation it had a right to reserve any power, and the assent of the companies to the legislation made the reservation binding on them. But it is not admitted that a reservation was made in that original legislation to withhold the promised consideration of an executed contract, but only to retain power to compel the completion and due maintenance of the road, to carry out the objects of the legislation. There is no more power to change a contract after than before a default, but there is a present power to seize property and revenues in case of default which does not exist before default. The assumption that "the right to alter, amend, or repeal is the right to alter every section, every line, word, and syllable of the act, subject only to such limitations as are in the Constitution of the United States," means nothing in view of the limitation contained in the last part of the sentence, or it is flatly denied by the able lawyer who reported this bill from the Judiciary Committee, [Mr. THURMAN,] in reply to the question of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. WHITE. I am rather opposed to this sinking-fund theory, and I supposed there was no impediment to requiring the companies to pay, in addition to the 5 per cent. and the half-transportation account, a sum which would be equal to the whole interest paid semi-annually by the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. And apply it now to payment?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly, apply it now.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg to call the Senator's attention to what in my judgment, and in his I think, as a lawyer, is an insuperable obstacle to that proposition. So far as the 3 per cent. of net earnings and the half-transportation account, which under existing law are applicable annually, to use the very language of the act, to reimburse the Government the interest which it pays are concerned, there is no difficulty whatsoever; but to take a further sum and apply that presently to the payment of the interest of the debt due to the Government, would be to make the bill obnoxious to the charge that we are requiring money from these companies before it is due.

Mr. BLAINE. Why cannot Congress alter the law in that respect?

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator mean that we shall alter the law and make the whole debt payable now?

Mr. BLAINE. Under the Senator's theory, where is the particular point at which the Senator from Ohio stops in his volition to alter the law? That is what I want to be instructed upon.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator needs instruction it is because he has not listened to me or anybody else who has spoken in favor of the bill of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BLAINE. I have listened with a great deal of interest.

Mr. THURMAN. If we had the power, I for one would not be willing to exercise it; but we have never asserted the power to make that which is payable thirty years hence, or now twenty years hence, payable to-day. We have never asserted any such power yet, and I do not think we ever shall.

Mr. CONKLING. When was this debate?

Mr. SARGENT. Last night.

A line of that legislation made the debt due in thirty years, and both as a lawyer and an honest man the Senator from Ohio recoils from altering or amending it. The same principle, I submit, and for the same reasons, should protect other stipulations put in the legislation as "inducements to capital and enterprise" to build the road.

Mr. President, in summing up the great favors which these companies have received from the Government of the United States, the great grants which have been given to them, described in such exaggerated language, it may be worth while to reflect whether those considerations presented by the Supreme Court of the difficulties almost insurmountable, considered by many as too insurmountable to be overcome, should not be considered, and also the fact that the Government for years before and during all the time that the Pacific railroads were being built was taxed for transportation, necessary transportation, far more than the whole amount of annual interest which it pays upon these bonds.

Mr. PADDOCK. Was it not nearly double the amount?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir. The Senate is not in want of official information on this point and has not been for years. Suppose by the loan which the Government made to these companies, which costs it annually $3,000,000, it has saved $6,000,000; is not that to be taken into account? Suppose the whole amount of expenditure on account of these roads, if never a dollar was paid upon them, funded up to 1900, is not more than half the amount that the rate of expenditure which the Government was paying at that time, funded into a sum, would reach, I ask if there is not an immense balance on behalf of the Treasury on account of the dealings of the Government with these companies? The Government, says the Supreme Court, wanted to cheapen its immense cost of transportation over these deserts, widely separating the inhabitable parts of the country, and it succeeded in that. A Senate committee in 1871 laid all the facts in reference to this matter before the Senate, and showed that the cost of the mail service to the Pacific coast had been annually increasing for several years before the opening of the road. The committee says:

From June 30, 1860, to June 30, 1861, the cost of the overland route from the Missouri River to California alone was $354,855.15. From June 30, 1861, to June 30, 1864, the same service from the Missouri River to Placerville, was $3,210,000, or, per annum, $1,070,000. To these sums should be added the steamship service, which averaged, including incidental charges for agents, &c., at least $300,000 per annum, and the cost from Placerville to San Francisco, about $50,000 per annum.

Against these enormous sums, which the Government was then annually paying out, and which it would be paying to-day, and even greater sums, were it not for the Pacific railroads, is to be put the present cost, which is about $250,000 a year. The statement itself is startling, but it is entirely waived aside in the eager desire, the eager rush, headed by the Judiciary Committee, to put their hands upon all the money which the men may have earned who carried out the enterprise under the inducements of the Government, contrary to the contract by which this great saving in the matter of mails alone has been effected. The committee proceeds as follows:

It will thus be seen that the average cost of mail transportation for four years, previous to June 30, 1864, was $1,296,213 per annum.

It costs now less than the odd figures.

With the increased cost of labor and materials, the cost of this service was greatly increased after 1864. The effect of the railroad will be shown by a comparison of the cost of mail service in 1868 with the year 1870.

And then they give a table showing the total cost from June 30, 1867, to June 30, 1868, $2,129,550. Be it understood furthermore that this mail service as then rendered was always uncertain, interrupted, liable to be broken up by Indians, toilsomely going over barren plains. I do not know that the cost was greater than the expense of it to those who carried it or much greater; but at any rate it was a very precarious and uncertain service. The shortening of the time is of great importance to the business of the country. Instead of twenty-five days, the mail is now carried across in seven or in six and a half. There are other incidental advantages besides the immense reduction of cost to the Government, besides the immense added amount which is left in the Treasury of the United States to be devoted to other purposes, which, had it not been for this enterprise, would have been annually taken from it. The committee show by their report made in 1871 that the contract price for Government transportation before the war was $1.30 per hundred pounds for each one hundred miles, and the prices increased after that greatly. The highest price of transportation paid to the railroads in 1871, and it is less now, was not more than twenty-five cents per hundred pounds for one hundred miles; that is to say, less than one-sixth of the amount that it was before the construction of the road and much less than one-sixth of the amount it was during the time of the construction of the road.

The amount which the transportation—for which $4,178,967.90 was paid—would have cost, at the rate of $1.30 per one hundred pounds per one hundred miles, is therefore—

Says this committee—

a matter of mathematical calculation. That sum would have been, $21,730,633.80, showing a saving of $17,551,666—which would pay all arrears of interest now due upon the bonds issued to the Pacific railroad companies more than three times over.

Up to 1871—

Oh, there was no advantage to the Government in building the road! There was a deceitful pretense of munificence to certain private parties, under false inducements held out, intended to be repealed, to get them into it, to get all this great saving of millions afterward to the Government, and then to draw back any promise the Government had given. It was no advantage to the Government, of course! Seventeen millions and over up to 1871 lying in the Treasury of the United States, or used for other beneficial purposes, before that time would have been paid out for transportation, but is saved by the operation of the road. Oh, let us grind them down; let us be hard-hearted to them; let us exact the most that we can; take away their profits, and rail at them because they made money out of the construction of the road. That is the animus of the legislation, it seems to me. I say it is unjust and unfair and harsh, and well merits a comparison with the language of the Duke of Venice to Antonio that he deals with—

A stony adversary, * * *
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

Then the committee proceed and say:

The Secretary of War on the 15th of February, 1871, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, estimates the cost of the military service, through the War Department, in guarding the overland route from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, from the acquisition of California to 1864, a period of sixteen years, at about $100,000,000, and states that this sum "is rather below than above the true cost of the service." This sum would equal $6,250,000 per annum for the entire period. As this expense was constantly increasing, the annual cost at the time of the opening of the Pacific Railroad must have been much greater.

The expenses of the Indian service for the same period, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was over $500,000 per annum, and the mail service averaged a little less than $1,000,000 per annum for the whole time, but in the year 1864 it had reached $1,296,000 per annum, and was increasing with the population of the Pacific coast. These sums together make an average annual cost, from 1841 to 1864, of over $8,000,000.

These statements fully corroborate the statement of Secretary Stanton and of the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Pacific Railroad, made in 1862, that the cost of this Government service at that time was about $7,500,000 per annum, and that this cost was annually increasing.

The whole amount of the bonds issued in aid of all the Pacific Railroads is $64,618,832. The annual interest on the same is $3,877,129.92. The earnings thus far have paid about 30 per cent. of the interest, which, deducted from the annual interest, leaves the net annual expenditure for interest $2,713,991.

The net result to the United States may be thus stated:

The cost of the overland service for the whole period from the acquisition of our Pacific coast possessions down to the completion of the Pacific Railroad was over $8,000,000 per annum, and this cost was constantly increasing.

The cost since the completion of the road is the annual interest—$3,877,129—to which must be added one-half the charges for services performed by the company, about $1,163,138 per annum, making a total annual expenditure of about $5,000,000, and showing a saving of at least $3,000,000 per annum.

Mr. President, with a saving of $3,000,000 per annum to the Government ever since the road went into operation, there is certainly a strong reason why the Government should be considerate in its dealings with the companies, why it should, while it can, secure adequate security that this debt and its interest shall be ultimately paid, yet not require that it shall be paid at a too short specific time with the accumulations of interest, to the danger of breaking up the road, throwing the company into bankruptcy, or causing the roads to become dilapidated, or overburdening Pacific commerce. The Government should not do these things, but instead it should give such time and such terms to the companies as will enable them to discharge their obligations.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from California is kind enough to yield to me to make a suggestion. I heard the Senator from Ohio suggest that he would ask the Senate to wait and "sit out" this bill to-night. It seems to me there is as little reason for submitting the Senate to a night session upon this bill as upon almost any bill I can think of. The Committee on Appropriations, pending the bill, with the consent of the Senate, take up their appropriation bills seriatim as they are ready, and it therefore is hindering no legislation which is urgent; and, inasmuch as there are some twenty years, I believe it has been frequently stated, in which to accomplish this purpose, certainly a day or two will not be valuable in its consideration. For the convenience of a number of Senators, I venture to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that we have an understanding that on Monday, if he thinks it is important that it should be Monday rather than Tuesday, some time during the day we shall take a vote on the bill. I know there are several Senators who mean to be heard upon the bill, and I would ask if Tuesday is not as well as Monday; and if Tuesday were fixed as the day, I would ask my friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] whether that would not, in his opinion, so far as he knows the views of Senators, give a reasonable time for such a debate as may be desired.

Mr. EATON. My own impression is that upon a great measure of this character there ought not to be any haste. This matter has twenty years to run; it would not make any essential difference if the bill were not passed at all this year or if it were passed next year rather than this. I would suggest that Wednesday or Thursday be fixed upon to take the vote as giving time enough, so that the measure may be thoroughly discussed, and then there will be ample time to explain our legislation and understand it well. I see no reason why the matter should be hurried in the way suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CONKLING. Two Senators, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] and the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM], suggest Wednesday, and that suggestion I submit to the Senator from Ohio and ask him to hear a remark in connection with it. I have been told since I rose, and indeed I knew before, that several members of the Senate have gone or are compelled to go away between now and Monday, who will not be back before Tuesday, and possibly not before Wednesday next. I know also that they would be very glad to be here in reference to the vote on this bill; indeed I have made with one a conditional pair myself to answer his convenience, as he was hurried away and had no time to arrange affairs. I was very reluctant, I confess, to pair on the bill, but I did it under the circumstances, saying that if a vote were pressed between now and Monday I would see that his vote counted by pairing with him myself. That is not agreeable to him, and it is not agreeable to me.

As the Senator from Connecticut says, and as I believe I said, I think a case can well be supposed in which a day or two of time is not important in the decision of the final question upon the bill. That such is the case the Senator from Ohio will admit, and I would suggest that that arrangement will save our remaining here for some hours and wearing out each other in attempts on one side to keep the Senate in session on Friday night, which is not a fortunate night for the purpose, and on the other side in attempts to defeat that purpose.

The Senator from Ohio knows also, without my referring to it especially, that a considerable number of members of both parties have taken to-morrow to attend an observance which it would be a little hard unexpectedly to attempt to deny to anybody who feels disposed to go.

Under all the circumstances, I hope the Senator from Ohio, either without a definite time being fixed or fixing some day agreeable to others, will not ask us to stay here longer to-day. If that suggestion is convenient to the Senator from California, he will retain the floor to continue his remarks when the Senate meets again, and we can now adjourn until Monday. The acceptance of this suggestion by the Senator from Ohio would enable him to do what he is always willing to do, and that is something very agreeable to the views of a majority of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand the Senator from New York to say that to-morrow there will be a ceremony or something of that kind, or words to that effect.

Mr. CONKLING. Words to that effect.

Mr. THURMAN. He intimates that as Parliament adjourns for the Derby we ought to adjourn for that ceremony. I believe that ceremony is the launching of a ship.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me, I am sorry that he sees any similitude between a horse-race and the launching of a great ship that carries the flag of the country.

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly my fancy is not as good as that of the Senator from New York, and he sees in the flag and the ship and all that a great deal that I would not see; and I and my friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] see a great deal more in a horse-race than he does. That is a western kind of fondness that I shall not deny. But all joking apart, I was going to say to the Senator that if he will let me launch my little ship to-day I am perfectly willing that he may go to see his big ship, with the flag flying, launched to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. But suppose the Senator sinks his little ship?

Mr. THURMAN. No Senator will say that I ever pressed him to sit a bill out, staying here all night. I never had charge of a bill yet that required me to do that, I must say; and therefore I can take no merit for not having done so. But I know this: that in nine years' experience here I scarcely ever have seen a hotly contested measure that we did not have to sit out. I have sat here many and many a time—sometimes when there were but seven or eight of us on our side—and helped to make a quorum and sat the whole night long that measures might be passed. We have no previous question and I hope we never shall have, at least while I am in the Senate; and therefore our only method is to sit a bill out or to do another thing which is attended with very great inconvenience, and that is to fix a time at which a vote shall be taken. The great objection to that is this, as Senators know: if we agree that the vote shall be taken at a particular time without any reference to amendments that may be offered, then a Senator may offer the best amendment in the world and one that the Senate would see was the best if the mover had an opportunity to explain it; but his mouth is sealed, he cannot say a word to show its necessity or its propriety. On the other hand, an amendment may be offered that is the worst in the world, and which could be demonstrated to be so if a Senator could rise and expose its weakness or its vicious tendency; but his mouth is sealed and we must vote without any discussion or explanation whatever.

So we have been compelled from time to time, when we fixed a particular hour of a particular day to vote on a bill, to make an exception in favor of amendments, allowing a five-minute debate on amendments that should be offered; but that five-minute debate may run for ten or twelve hours, because you can offer as many amendments as you please. Any Senator can offer an amendment, and you can go on in that way and speak almost ad libitum. Therefore, practically I think I am right in saying that the experience of the Senate has been against fixing a particular time to vote upon any subject where there were amendments to be offered or where amendments were likely to be offered; and we are compelled to sit the bill out.

Now one word in reply to the remark of my friend on my right, [Mr. EATON,] that he saw no necessity of hastening this bill or pressing this bill in this way. I submit to him that there has been no undue pressure of this bill. Let us look for a moment into the facts—

Mr. SARGENT. I was on the floor and only gave way temporarily.

Mr. THURMAN. Just let me finish what I have to say; and I shall be but a minute or two. Let us look a moment at the facts. On the 10th day of July, 1876, now nearly two years ago, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate reported a bill in all its main features identical with the bill which is now before the Senate. The only difference is that the bill now before the Senate is not quite so exacting as was the bill reported at that time. I tried to get that bill up, having been charged with reporting it to the Senate, at that session. I could not get it taken up; it was toward the close of the session; the appropriation bills occupied time, and I was defeated in every attempt to get it up. At the next session, December, 1876, that bill was taken up and it was before the Senate, according to my recollection, for several weeks and underwent much discussion, but the incidents connected with the count of the presidential vote prevented any vote from being taken on the bill; but it was discussed. That was in all its main features just the bill we now have before us. On the second day of the last October session, on the 16th day of October, I introduced that identical bill and had it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Why it was not reported from that committee for a long time is a chapter of history that I do not care to go into; it is one that would not reflect much credit on some men who imposed on that committee. But so it was. The bill was at length reported on the 8th day of March, now nearly a month ago, and I gave notice that on the succeeding Monday I would ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration. The Senate did so, and it has now discussed this bill nearly four weeks; more than three weeks this bill has been under discussion. Now, four-fifths of the Senators—I think I am right in saying—have spoken upon it. My own belief is that every Senator has made up his mind one way or the other how he will vote upon it. Under these circumstances and after the very full and exhaustive arguments that have been made both upon the legal aspects of the case and upon the economical and the business aspects of the bill, it does seem to me that I am not obnoxious to any censure for asking the Senate to proceed with the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I have no objection to going on and concluding my remarks—

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from California will yield to me, I should like to make a motion.

Mr. SARGENT. I will do so after submitting some amendments to the bill, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and ordered to be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. SARGENT. I send to the Secretary's desk the following amendments to the bill, which I shall propose at the proper time. Let them be read.

The Chief Clerk read, as follows:

Strike out section 1.

Amend section 3 by striking out the last word on line 6, and lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and inserting in lieu thereof: "Interest on all sums placed to the credit of the sinking fund shall be credited, and added thereto semi-annually, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum."

Strike out section 4, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

SEC. 4. That there shall be carried to the credit of the said fund, on the 1st day of March and September in each year, the one-half of the compensation for services hereinbefore named, rendered for the Government by said railroad companies respectively, not applied in liquidation of interest; and, in addition thereto, each of said companies shall on said days in each year pay into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of said sinking fund, such a sum as, with the said half of the amount earned by it as compensation for Government service, and the 5 per cent. of the net earnings payable to the United States under said act of 1862, shall amount in the aggregate to the sum of $1,300,000 per annum: Provided, That the amounts so credited and paid into said sinking fund each year, under the provisions of this section, shall not be less than $600,000 for each company.

Strike out section 5.

Mr. CONKLING. To enable the Senate (meaning a majority of the Senate) to determine whether it sees any reason for a session to-morrow or a night session to-night to struggle over the question whether this bill shall pass, if it is to pass, an hour sooner or an hour later, I move that the Senate do now adjourn until twelve o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. THURMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MATTHEWS, (when his name was called.) I agreed with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] to pair with him on this bill until six o'clock. If my colleague thinks that that pair extends to this vote, I shall not vote.

Mr. THURMAN. I think it does, for this reason, that the Senator from Michigan knew perfectly well that we could not get to the final vote by six o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the roll-call, debate is not in order.

Mr. THURMAN. I know that the Senator from Michigan would vote "nay" if he were here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. Before the vote is announced I should like to understand whether the Senator from California still retains the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No debate is in order pending the roll-call.

Mr. SARGENT. I have not concluded my speech.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Allison,	Conkling,	Ingalls,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Conover,	Jones of Florida,	Sargent,
Barnum,	Dawes,	Lamar,	Sanders,
Blaine,	Dorsey,	Mitchell,	Spencer,
Bruce,	Eaton,	Paddock,	Teller,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Patterson,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Wis.,	Gordon,	Plumb,	Whyte,
Chaffee,	Hill,	Ransom,	Windom.

NAYS—31.

Armstrong,	Davis of Illinois,	Howe,	Merrimon,
Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Morgan,
Bayard,	Edmonds,	Kernan,	Morrill,
Beck,	Eastis,	McCreery,	Oglesby,
Booth,	Gariand,	McDonald,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Grover,	McMillan,	Thurman,
Cockrell,	Harris,	McPherson,	Wallace,
Coke,	Hereford,	Maxey,

ABSENT—13.

Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Matthews,	Withers.
Christiancy,	Jones of Nevada,	Randolph,
Dennis,	Kellogg,	Sharon,
Hamlin,	Kirkwood,	Wadleigh,

So the motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday next at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 5, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, requested the return to the Senate of the bill (S. No. 490) supplementary to and entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs Reservation in the State of Arkansas," approved March 3, 1877.

SESSION ON SATURDAY FOR DEBATE.

Mr. O'NEILL. I rise to a question of privilege. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Would it be in order to move as an amendment that the House meet to-morrow for debate only?

The SPEAKER. It would not; but the proposition of the gentleman from California can be agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the House meet to-morrow for debate only.

Mr. O'NEILL. I will accept that as a modification of my motion. The motion, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to reconsider the action just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECORDS OF ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for present consideration, the joint resolution (S. No. 22) with regard to keeping the records of the electoral commission.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read; after which the Chair will ask for objections, if any.

The joint resolution (S. No. 22) providing for a place of deposit for the records and proceedings of the commission appointed under the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, 1877, was read.

The joint resolution directs that the records and proceedings of the commission appointed under the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, 1877, shall be deposited by the secretary of the commission with the Secretary of State, who shall preserve the same among the archives of his office.

There was no objection; and the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, and read three times, and passed.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I rise to a question of personal privilege. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I find in a sensational sheet published in this city an article entitled "Mr. BAKER's falsehood," which I send to the clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR. BAKER'S FALSEHOOD—A FLAT CONTRADICTION FROM MR. GEORGE C. WEDDERBURN.

In his speech in the House yesterday, on the great Doorkeeper question, Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, made use of the following language:

"I propose to show also that this man Polk had a competitor for Doorkeeper by the name of Wedderburn, who conveniently dropped out of the list as a rival candidate against him, and on the 16th of October last, the day after Polk's election, as a reward for something he had done, was promoted to the position of 'superintendent of passes' at a salary of $2,500 a year. The sworn evidence shows that without a shadow of law for it this man Wedderburn received for one month $165.50 as payment for his services in an office which, with its salary and emoluments, had been created by Polk alone."

Last night Mr. George C. Wedderburn, the gentleman referred to by Mr. BAKER, called at the office of The Post to correct the false statement. He said to a reporter for the paper: "It is due to Mr. Polk, and especially to myself, to say that this statement is false. I was never promoted to the position of superintendent of passes, at a salary of $2,500 a year; and I did not receive $165.50 for one month as alleged. The gentleman from Indiana has simply made a false statement, and that is all that is necessary to say about this lunatic."

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if either here or elsewhere I make any statement in reference to anybody that I find is incorrect I trust that I shall have the manhood and courage whenever I ascertain that to be the fact to do justice to the man that I have thus wronged. The remarks that I made on yesterday in reference to Mr. Wedderburn in the heat of debate I find on review to be substantially accurate in every respect except the little non-essential in reference to the amount of compensation. And I desire to say in reference to that matter that I was led into error from the fact that I had not computed the amount that it would aggregate at the rate I found he was paid for his services as certified to by himself in one of the months during the extra session of Congress. The gravamen of the charge that I made, Mr. Speaker, was that this man Wedderburn was a competitor and rival candidate against Mr. Polk and that he conveniently dropped out of the list of candidates. That is the first charge that I made.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I know my friend does not desire to misrepresent anybody.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. No, sir.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. As regards what is stated about compensation, I know nothing and have nothing to say. But so far as regards the gentleman's information that Mr. Wedderburn dropped out of the canvass in consequence of having formed a combination with Mr. Polk, I beg to tell him—and my means of information are far superior to his—that Mr. Wedderburn dropped out simply because of want of votes. He was before the caucus three times, and when he had no longer any votes he was dropped from necessity.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I cannot yield for the purpose of speeches being interjected into mine. I propose to show, however, by the sworn testimony of Mr. Polk, that the gentleman from Virginia has been entirely misled, and I propose to show I commented very mildly on the damaging facts that are testified to in the record which I hold in my hand and from which I read on page 109. This is the testimony of Mr. Polk:

By Mr. COX:

Question. I asked you yesterday whether Mr. Wedderburn was not one of your personal appointments?

Answer. Mr. Wedderburn never has been appointed by me to any position except some time in January. During the democratic caucus that nominated the officers of the House * * * promises were made to Mr. Wedderburn without my knowledge, but which were fully authorized. * * * It was promised that he should have some place, provided his friends, at a certain point in the balloting, should support me. After that Mr. Wedderburn came to me to get me to redeem that promise. I told him I had no place that would pay him a better salary than $1,300 a year, and he said he could not accept that, that it would not support him; and then there was a suggestion, coming I believe originally from a Missouri member, not my own Representative, which was talked over in a conference of leading members of the House, that an officer should be created to take charge of the passes and of the ladies' reception-room.

This extract proves, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Wedderburn not only, as I charged on yesterday, conveniently dropped out of the canvass against Mr. Polk, but that he did it in virtue of an arrangement that had been made that he should be compensated by an office at the hands of Mr. Polk after Mr. Polk had been elected.

The next charge is as to the rate of compensation. I admit frankly that the amount was not $2,500 a year, but $1,800. That, however, was not the gravamen of the charge that I made. The charge that I made, and the charge that I intended to make, was that by a bargain an arrangement had been made, by virtue of which, if Polk succeeded, Mr. Wedderburn was to have a place. My charge was that he was appointed to a place which was unknown to the law, and that for his services in that place he was awarded a compensation largely in excess of the amount provided by any law on the statute-book of the country. That was the gravamen of the charge.

Now, it is trifling with the charge that I made for this man to say that I was mistaken as to the amount being $2,500 a year. I admit that the amount was $1,800 and I also admit that I was mistaken to the extent of ten cents in the amount which I said that he received. I stated that he received $165.50; I find that he received $165.60. That is the head and front of the error I committed. Now, let us see whether or not I am mistaken with reference to the fact that he served as superintendent of passes in the ladies' reception-room. I do not know but what this gentleman may feel indignant because I did not contribute sufficient honor and rank to his position. The truth is that he was not only the superintendent of passes in the ladies' reception-room, but his all-embracing grasp took in the press-gang of the country in addition. If he feels at all sensitive because I did not allude to that fact yesterday, I will now apologize for it and make the amende honorable.

I read from page 391 of the testimony. There is given there a list of those who received the $3,840 that we appropriated to pay for this extra force which was foisted upon the House and upon the Treasury of the country without any authority of law. I read the following:

We, the subscribers, acknowledge to have received from George M. Adams, Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, the sums opposite our respective names, in full of our salaries in the employment of the House of Representatives, for the month of ———, 187 :

I will not read the whole list, but I read from it the following:

George C. Wedderburn, October 16th to 30th November, superintendent of passes, $165.60.

Now, sir, that is the testimony. I say that with the single exception of mistating the amount, the evidence is clear and conclusive that by virtue of some bargain that was made with Mr. Polk, at the instance of Mr. Wedderburn, he did drop out of the canvass and was rewarded by having given him an office with a compensation higher than that provided by law, and that the matter was fixed up for his accommodation.

When Mr. Polk suggested to him that he would reward him with a twelve-hundred-dollar position, such as the law permitted, Mr. Wedderburn, the late candidate for Doorkeeper of the House and a present candidate for Doorkeeper of the House, and who I suppose expects to reward Mr. Polk when he himself comes into the office to-day or to-morrow, replied to Mr. Polk in substance that he was not that sort of a man. He said he could not take a twelve-hundred-dollar place; that was not his size; he wanted a larger place. And Mr. Polk, for some reason, I do not know whether because of Mr. Wedderburn's gallantry and politeness or not, made him superintendent of passes in the ladies' reception-room.

Now I have done with this matter. I admit that in reference to the amount I made a mistake. I find on figuring it up that the rate of compensation which he was actually paid was $150 a month, $1,800 a year. But the gravamen of the charge remains, everything of it remains. As well might a man who was indicted for the larceny of a hundred dollars in bank-bills, and was proved guilty of having stolen say $50, that the indictment was false as for a man to go around slandering those who tell the truth merely because an immaterial and incidental matter, that has no bearing or effect on the gist of the transaction, happens to have been inaccurately stated.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do not desire to be misunderstood. I did not wish to interrupt my friend from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] in his personal explanation. Reference was made to the withdrawal of Mr. Wedderburn on account of some understanding that Mr. Polk would reward him. I only want to say that, so far as I know and so far as his friends from Virginia know, there was no such arrangement. We voted for him until we saw that he was beaten and that he had no votes. That was the whole of it. Where he or his friends went next, and what they did, I have no knowledge.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. It is due that I should say that I did not mean to insinuate nor did I charge that any gentleman on this floor from Virginia was a party to this secret understanding.

Mr. EDEN. I think the time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] ought to be extended, to let him give his full and entire view of this Polk case.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to a question of personal privilege. It is to correct a wrong impression which may have been made by a part of my speech in this House a day or two since. I hold in my hand a letter from J. G. Knight, who was on the soldiers' roll. He concludes it thus:

What I desire to say is that it was no fault of mine that I was on the soldiers' roll. I was put there without my knowledge, and kept there against my protest.

Very respectfully,

J. G. KNIGHT.

I do not desire to do injustice to Mr. Knight or to any other person. Therefore I read this letter.

ELECTION OF DOORKEEPER.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] rises, as he states, to a privileged question.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to have passed this resolution for the purpose of completing the organization of this House.

The SPEAKER. In what respect is this a question of privilege?

Mr. BUTLER. In this—that I desire to proceed now to the election of a Doorkeeper of this House, and have embodied what I desire in the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, which will explain itself.

Mr. CARLISLE. I raise the question of consideration, and call for the regular order, which is the calling of committees for reports of a private nature.

Mr. REED. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. COX, of New York. I raise the point that this is not a question of privilege.

Mr. BUTLER. How can the gentleman tell till he hears the resolution?

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman has stated that it relates to the election of a Doorkeeper.

Mr. BUTLER. Perhaps its terms may bring it within the definition of a question of privilege. Let the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

Mr. COX, of New York. No one objects to the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper, and that the true Union, maimed soldier, Brigadier-General James Shields, of Missouri, be chosen to that place.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would not interfere with any honors to a distinguished soldier like General Shields; but in some contingencies we must pursue the rules of the House. For reasons which the gentleman well knows, connected with our party relations, (he is a partisan himself,) we would prefer to postpone the settlement of this matter till to-morrow. Meanwhile the office is being filled by the Sergeant-at-Arms in pursuance of the order of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. If I believed that the majority of the House on the other side desired to caucus on the merits of General Shields, I would certainly not press my motion now. He was shot through the lungs in the Mexican war; he had his arm shattered in the late war; and he is now an old man. He has been a member on the floor of this House; he has been a Senator of the United States. He is now without means of support; and he comes within the law of the land, which says that in filling civil offices a maimed soldier shall be preferred.

Mr. MORRISON. Why have you not preferred him in all these years?

Mr. COX, of New York. One of the virtues of General Shields is that he is a democrat; we all know that. But we on this side prefer to attend to our business without interference from the other side.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not now open to discussion on its merits. The point is that raised by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] whether it is a question of privilege.

Mr. COX, of New York. As the gentleman from Massachusetts has made some remarks, I wish to say in reply that there shall be no dishonor, as there is no intention to throw any dishonor, upon the distinguished fame of General Shields by action on this side of the House. Gentlemen on the other side have had for years the dispensation of more than ninety thousand offices, but they have never sought to honor this distinguished soldier until this little emergency when they seek to do it at our expense. It gives no credit to General Shields and none to the other side of the House for him to be honored in this peculiar way.

Mr. MORRISON. When General Shields was elected to this House by a majority of thousands gentlemen on the other side drove him out and put in a man who was not elected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentlemen from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to know whether the gentleman has any authority from General Shields to offer his name for the position of Doorkeeper.

Mr. BUTLER. I never ask any authority to do honor to a gallant maimed soldier. I consider that I have a general power of attorney in that respect. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDEN. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he was here and helped to drive General Shields away from this Hall and seat a republican in his place when General Shields had a majority of thousands in his favor?

Mr. BUTLER. My answer to that is that nobody suggested his name—

Mr. EDEN. The people of his district suggested his name.

Mr. BUTLER. The difference was this: that was a question of election; a question which of two candidates had legally been elected to this House.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose that three or four thousand majority to gentlemen on the other side was not enough to seat him.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, do not howl. That was a question of election, and men sometimes have acted according to their partisan ideas. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDEN. Would the gentleman from Massachusetts vote according to his party predilection when a gallant soldier came here with a majority of three or four thousand in his favor?

Mr. BUTLER. If we did wrong then let us do right now. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he repents of the wrong he did then.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sorry and will try to undo it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRANKLIN. Do you repent of your action then?

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the floor for a moment, I will say that everybody knows the distinguished soldier from Massachusetts has had the opportunity, time and again, to have honored General Shields, and has not done so. [Laughter.] This is not the way to honor him. He is worthier, far worthier, of a better and a higher honor—of an office other than this! It is almost a degradation to ask such a gallant soldier to come here and take the position of Doorkeeper of this House.

Who took the commission away from General Shields in the Army? Who, when he was proposed by the people as a Missouri Representative—who drove him from this House? Was it not the distinguished soldier from Massachusetts and his friends? [Laughter and applause.] Who was it, when General Shields came from the Mexican war, all battered and torn; who was it that fought him after having fought with Stonewall Jackson, laden with leaden bullets; who was it when he came here approved by the people, after many migrations and trials, came to ask for a seat upon this floor—who was it that drove him from this Hall, although fairly elected, and now tenders him at last, in his old and impoverished age, this small and unpleasant office? Is it not the distinguished soldier from Massachusetts? [Great laughter.]

Ah! Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Massachusetts becomes so irate on this subject, he must remember one thing: that it is not quite so honorable to give crumbs, when he and others had it in their power to give rich festivity for splendid honors!

Let us do honor to the old soldiers of the Mexican war; let us do them honor by passing, if you please, the pension bill in their favor. But is it fair for us at this time, in the emergency of filling this office, to undertake, by a little clap-trap, to make some little popularity by suggesting our most honorable democrat for this office at this time?

It is too late for the gentleman from Massachusetts to repent of being a partisan. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I do not repent. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman said just now, as I understood him, that if he had been wrong before, it was never too late to do right. Is he tired of his bad associates? Is he coming to the democrats after a little? [Laughter.] What does he mean by it? Is he going to leave the honorable association on the other side and come to us? [Great laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER, (coming over toward the democratic side.) Let me say—[Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. While the lamp holds out to burn, the noblest statesman may return. [Great laughter and clapping of hands.] It is utterly wrong, utterly out of order, utterly unparliamentary for me to say that my distinguished friend from Massachusetts is gradually approaching the democratic breastworks, [laughter:] that he is making his military approaches so quietly and so steadily and so pleasantly by parallels, [laughter:] because I think the case of DEAN may be considered as a parallel to this other case of Polk. [Great laughter.] As he is coming into our camp, I would be the last man to call him the vilest sinner, because we on this side are so very virtuous! [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I think this effort of the gentleman is intended to injure General Shields. So intricate, so strange, and so tortuous are the ways of politicians that I think the gentleman [Mr. BUTLER] means to damage our grand democratic General Shields. Who can tell why a democratic caucus should not, in a noble impulse, or even with a view of repairing its past errors as to doorkeepers and other matters, select this distinguished soldier and elect him! For one, I would be glad to give him my vote, according to the rules and orders of my party. And when I see the gentleman from Massachusetts at this late day, when his hair is becoming silvered with age, and when we are all growing old, when we are all—or should be—on the stool of repentance, when I see that the honorable gentleman is reaching out for his first and early love again, [laughter,] I have no reproach for him; but I do think the regular order ought to be called. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to say that when I left the democratic party it was an honored organization of brave, firm men who never put their sins on a scapegoat and destroyed a poor man to save themselves; and when the party regain their former prestige, I do not know but I may come back to it again if I am not dead.

Again, it has been said that I have attempted to make some clap-trap popularity by offering the name of a Union soldier here. I seek no such thing. I desire to make a provision in his old age for a Union soldier, and, if he is made Doorkeeper of this House, by no vote of mine should he ever be disturbed from that position so long as increasing age and infirmities will allow him to do, as he can do, his duties well. When we on this side of the House voted on a contested-election case he was then, so far as I knew, in good condition of health and circumstances, barring his wounds. Now the case is changed. Then it was almost a partisan question; as a rule, all election cases are, disguise it as we may. I did not think I should hear a reproach from the other side of the House that I had made them one or more votes because I followed the dictates of my conscience and judgment in an election case; and I did not think I should live to hear again in this House an attack upon me, to raise a laugh, from the gentleman from New York. I thought on a former occasion he had learned enough not to do that again. Therefore I grant him the mercy of my silence.

Mr. COX, of New York. You have said that very often here. But I do not want any mercy.

Mr. BUTLER. "Shoo fly! don't bodder me!" [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Very original! This is not the first time you have said it. But I do not "shoo." [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Now let me say a word or two upon party relations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to interrupt the gentleman. So long as he confines himself to the personal references made to himself—

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, I will keep right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so long as he does that he is entirely within the scope of fair play and right. But when the gentleman proceeds on a point of order as to a privileged question to indulge in the line of remarks he is now entering upon the Chair thinks it necessary to apprise and check him.

Mr. BUTLER. I will endeavor to follow very carefully the gentleman from New York. It is said by that gentleman that we have not done our duty here in not taking care of General Shields before. To that I answer that the democrats have had two Congresses, this one and another one, and they have had two caucuses where we did not interfere with them; why did it not occur to them to take that gallant man instead of the gentleman they so ungraciously destroyed yesterday?

Again, why need any caucus on this question? Why say we will do something for him some time? Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation for you upon this question of Doorkeeper. [Laughter.] It may never come again. It is only "while the lamp holds out to burn that the vilest sinner may return." Its flame is flickering now and low, and it may go out betwixt this and seven o'clock to-night, when your caucus is held, and there will be no place for repentance and the lament for this lost chance for repentance shall go up to heaven, "Gone, gone, gone forever!" [Laughter.]

Why do we debate this question? Is there a man who says Shields is unfit? No, sir. What is the objection? That he is too fit, too good, too noble, too high, and that the Doorkeeper's place is not fit for him. The only reason, Mr. Speaker, I have to believe he is not fit is because of the way his two predecessors have been treated. If it had not been for that I might think it might be entirely fit. Objection seems to have been answered by the text, "Better be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord than dwell in the tents of the wicked." [Laughter.]

Now, then, I desire to know whether this House has power when it has not a Doorkeeper, only an acting Doorkeeper, to consider the question whether they will supply the deficiency? The gentleman from New York says he wants to vote according to the behests of his party; "orders" of his party was the word. I never vote according to the order of anybody under God. If I believe my party are wrong, whether I am a democrat opposing the extension of slavery or whether I am a republican opposing any wrong, I stand with those who stand with me and see the right as God gives me to see it, even if I stand alone.

Vote the old man down. Vote in caucus. But after you come out of caucus, if you do not bring the old man out, bring us in some honorable confederate soldier, with his leg off, who once showed his loyalty to the country by fighting in the Mexican war, and I will vote for him against any civilian that can be named.

Mr. Speaker, on the question of order one word, [laughter,] and that is this: it has been decided, ay, it is constitutional, that when the House has not a Speaker it may elect one. It has been decided that when it has not a Clerk it may elect one, although somebody may act as Clerk. It has been decided that anything that pertains to the organization of the House is first in order. Therefore, when we meet here at the commencement of a Congress, we first proceed to organize by the election of a full corps of officers.

That being so, what I claim is, that it is always within the competency of the House to say whether it will consider the question of electing a Doorkeeper. I call for a vote upon the question whether the House will consider that subject, so that the fiat of the Speaker shall not stand between a maimed and disabled soldier of two wars (who will throw his influence for his brother veterans of the Mexican war on the Mexican war pension bill) and the vote of the House on both sides, which I believe will be substantially, and certainly ought to be substantially, unanimous.

Mr. COX, of New York. One word, Mr. Speaker, of a personal nature in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.] The gentleman from Massachusetts I always knew to be rich in intrigues of a political nature. This proposition is perhaps one of them. But I never knew him before to have any poverty of wit, or to be obliged to repeat his stale wit. [Laughter.]

So far as the gentleman's independence is concerned, I have never known it to be shown until he was beaten in the Salem district. He has now become so independent. He has generally voted with his party. Yesterday he did not vote with his friends on that side of the House and I did not vote with many of my friends on this side of the House. So there is a parity between us.

So far as the gentleman's independence is concerned as to the extension of slavery, I am not too old to remember that he was a delegate to the Cincinnati democratic convention—

Mr. BUTLER. To the Charleston convention.

Mr. COX, of New York. To both conventions. He is doubly bad on the slavery question. [Laughter.]

I said, to the Cincinnati convention and Charleston convention, too. And that shows that the gentleman ought to be very tolerant to other people who were with him then, and as he gets older he ought to grow in grace day by day. [Laughter.] Let him come up to the anxious bench to be prayed for. There is no man for whom I would rather lift up a kindly prayer than for the distinguished and intellectual gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

I do not say that he needs it more than some other members. I know the good parts of his character; I know his friendliness of heart. I know many things about him that the world does not know [renewed laughter] that do credit to his honor and to his integrity. [Continued laughter.] It is no laughing matter when I say this. But one thing I beg of the gentleman, and that is never to repeat the little piece of wit which he got off about me a short time ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I will certainly promise not to do it, if you never give me the occasion.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will send you to your seat now, pardoned; go and sit down, [laughter,] and may the Lord God have mercy on your soul. [Great laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I do not see anything to reply to. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] a question. The gentleman from Massachusetts affirms that this matter of the election of a Doorkeeper is a question of privilege. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] makes the point of order that it is not a question of privilege. The gentleman from Massachusetts will be kind enough to direct the attention of the Chair to any decision by a Speaker, or any action on the part of the House, in the past, which indicates that the election of a Doorkeeper is a question of privilege.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Chair will indulge me a moment, there has never been such an occasion heretofore, except in this Congress and in the last Congress. We have never before turned out a Doorkeeper once elected by the majority, so far as I know. Therefore I do not know where to look for a precedent. You must adapt new cases to old principles, and not follow precedents.

The SPEAKER. It has been held that the election of a Speaker and the election of a Clerk were necessary to the organization of the House, and that no business could be transacted by the House prior to such election. But that has never been held in regard to a Doorkeeper. In 1860 a point of order was raised on this question—

Mr. FOSTER. Just a word here. How can the matter be reached except as a question of privilege?

Mr. BUTLER. The Chair will pardon me for a remark. We turned out the old Doorkeeper as a question of privilege. Can we not put in a new one as a question of privilege? The matter came before the House as a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Neither the election of a Doorkeeper nor any matter relating to the Doorkeeper is mentioned in the Manual under the head of privileged questions. But the Chair will submit the question to the House, in some such manner as indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] who raised the question of consideration, and which is equivalent in effect to the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. FOSTER. I asked my question in good faith. I would like to know if there is any other way of reaching this matter except as a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine that point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The question of consideration is raised on this resolution. Does not that take it for granted that the resolution is pending for consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit to the House the question whether the resolution presents a question of privilege. The Chair does not find in the rules or in the Manual anything specifying the election of Doorkeeper as a question of privilege. In reply to the remark of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] that turning out a Doorkeeper was a question of privilege, the Chair remarks that the "alleged misconduct of an officer of the House" is specifically enumerated among questions of privilege, as referred to the other day by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. HALE. Why does not this case come under the general principles always applied to the organization of the House?

The SPEAKER. The House is already organized, and it has an acting Doorkeeper.

Mr. HALE. But it is not completely organized in respect to having all its offices filled. For instance, suppose that by any calamity all the officers of the House should be removed by death, if the filling of those offices were not a question of privilege I do not see how they could be filled except upon the report of a committee, which might have to wait its time, and that might be days or weeks, notwithstanding we might be confronted with such a necessity, as everybody would admit, for having the offices filled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit to the House the question whether this is a matter of privilege. At the same time he states that this is a very different question from that raised the other day upon the resolution declaring the Doorkeeper's office vacant; for the Manual expressly declares "alleged misconduct on the part of an officer of the House" to be a question of privilege.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the Chair allow me to say one word? For the election of a Doorkeeper there is no compulsion. The rules do not require it to be absolutely done. We can devolve the duties of the office upon either the Clerk or the Sergeant-at-Arms. There is no occasion to fill the office unless the House chooses. There is no urgency and there is no question of privilege in the matter. I hope, therefore, the Speaker will take the responsibility of deciding this question himself, and then let gentlemen of the other side take an appeal if they choose.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to say a word on this question. Whether the office of Doorkeeper is mentioned in the rules or Manual or is not mentioned, it has been held from the beginning of the organization of the House that this is one of the necessary officers whose election is requisite to complete the organization of the House. At the beginning of every session the election of this officer is accepted without question as a matter of privilege necessary to the organization of the House. The office is not now filled. By the terms of the resolution adopted yesterday the discharge of the duties are devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms only until the House shall have an opportunity to fill the office. It cannot be filled in any other way than as a question of privilege, as a matter necessary to complete the organization of the House. This has never been questioned before and it ought not to be questioned now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] who asked how the election of a Doorkeeper could be brought before the House except as a question of privilege, that through the agency of the Committee on Rules, who have the right to report at any time, a resolution could be reported for the election of a Doorkeeper. The Chair does not himself consider that there is now existing an actual vacancy in the office of Doorkeeper. If there were an actual vacancy in that office and the convenience of the House or the transaction of its business required an immediate election, then the point might have weight that such election was a question of privilege. But the House yesterday in the exercise of its judgment provided for this very contingency and declared that another officer of the House should perform the duties of Doorkeeper until a new Doorkeeper was chosen.

Mr. BANKS. The Chair will allow me to say that the office of Doorkeeper is vacant. The man who occupied that office has been removed; and no man has been appointed in his place. There never was a session of this House in which there was not some person filling the office of Doorkeeper. The temporary assignment of his duties to another officer does not fill that office, nor does it deprive the House of its absolute right as a question of privilege to proceed to fill this office, which is just as important to the organization of the House as that of Clerk or Speaker or any other of its officers.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Chair suggested that there was no vacancy in the office of Doorkeeper. If that were true there would be force in the suggestion.

The SPEAKER. No vacancy exists as to the administration of the office.

Mr. THOMPSON. But is there not an actual vacancy? When a new Congress convenes there is no Speaker, and under our rules the Clerk acts as Speaker for the time being. Therefore, under the theory of the Chair, there is in such a case no vacancy in the office of Speaker, because a person has been indicated to perform in the interim the duties of Speaker. So here another gentleman has been indicated, not as Doorkeeper, but to perform the duties temporarily. That means that he will discharge the duties in his station precisely as the Clerk performs the duties of presiding officer before the Speaker is elected, that is, pending the organization of the House. But there is a vacancy in both positions and both vacancies must be filled. Therefore, from the very nature of the case, the question does arise, and I think it would be a good objection, if there was a proposition made this morning to proceed to any other business, for any gentleman on this floor, as a matter of privilege, to rise and object and urge the imperfect organization of the House, and demand as a question of privilege no other business should be transacted until the organization of the House was fully perfected.

Mr. BANKS. Let me call the attention of the Chair to Rule 10.

Mr. COX, of New York. The Chair has recognized me. The Doorkeeper is not, Mr. Speaker, at all essential to the organization of the House. The House can sit without a Doorkeeper. We can abolish the office of Doorkeeper and still have an organization of the House; but we cannot do it without a Speaker. The Doorkeeper can be dispensed with. In this case we have provided for a temporary Doorkeeper by order of the House.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to Rule 10. I will call the attention of the gentleman from New York to it as well. Rule 10 provides that there shall be elected at the commencement of each Congress, to continue in office until their successors are appointed, a Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster, each of whom shall take an oath for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office to the best of his knowledge and abilities.

The SPEAKER. It provides "There shall be elected at the commencement of each Congress," &c.

Mr. BANKS. Certainly, at the commencement of each session of Congress. We elected a Doorkeeper at the commencement of this session of Congress as a matter of privilege and because it was necessary to the organization of this House. Yesterday also, as a matter of privilege, we removed him because he was unfaithful to his trust. Now it is incumbent upon us to fill that office by the election of another person. It is necessary to the organization of the House. It is necessary that another Doorkeeper shall be elected before we can proceed with business.

The SPEAKER. Has not a successor pro tempore been appointed?

Mr. BANKS. Not at all, sir.

The SPEAKER. It has been done by a vote of the House.

Mr. BANKS. No Sergeant-at-Arms can fill the office of Doorkeeper.

Mr. BURCHARD. As the Speaker has indicated his intention to submit the question to the House for its decision, I wish to say a word. It seems to me it is important as a question of precedent that this should be settled upon the proper ground. It is much more necessary that should be done than action in reference to the Doorkeeper should be taken at the present time. The whole subject is within the control of a majority of the House. If they are opposed to action at this time they can vote down the motion to proceed to perfecting the organization of the House by electing a Doorkeeper, or they can vote for a postponement of that question until another time.

But, sir, as a question of parliamentary law the question to be submitted is what will be the decision of the House when an office established by your rules—established by the rules of this House, the same as the office of clerk or the office of postmaster—when that office is vacant shall it be filled at once as necessary to perfecting the organization of the House? The question presented for our decision is whether it is a question of privilege to call up the filling of that vacancy. It seems to me the House has now the power as a question of privilege to proceed to elect a Doorkeeper, and that it is a question of privilege and perfectly in order to move to fill the vacancy. Of course the majority of the House can dispose of it as they see fit. If they do not care to vote on it at this time they can postpone it, or they can vote it down.

The SPEAKER. There is wisdom in the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, who has just taken his seat. The Chair finds himself without any example to follow in the past. In this case, therefore, the House will establish a precedent for the future.

In the judgment of the Chair, under the resolution adopted yesterday, an officer was appointed to discharge temporarily the duties of Doorkeeper. It is stated in the Manual that when a proposition is submitted which relates to the privileges of the House, it is the duty of the Speaker to entertain it, at least to the extent of submitting the question to the House as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege. The Chair now proposes in this instance to allow the question to be determined by the House itself, and now submits the same to the House, so that in the future the question may be regarded as one the settlement of which has not been by the single voice or judgment of the Speaker, but by a majority vote of the House itself. The question, therefore, now before the House for its decision is whether the question here presented involves one of privilege or not.

Mr. CALKINS. Before the vote is taken, Mr. Speaker, I desire for a moment to call attention on page 221 of the Manual to a statement there found in parenthesis:

(Ordinarily it has been held that the election by the House of any of its officers is a question of privilege.)

The SPEAKER. The very language the gentleman reads shows the compiler, who inserted it as a statement of his own, was himself in doubt on the question.

Mr. CALKINS. Then there is a further parenthesis:

(See also President, Speaker, Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Printer, Public.)

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to inquire whether it would be in order—

Mr. CALKINS. I only desire to call attention to the fact that it seems to have been stated by the compiler of this Manual that it had been by common consent heretofore taken as a question of privilege.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to know whether it would not be in order to move to postpone the question of consideration of a question of privilege until Monday next. If in order I desire to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. That would be in order. And it would be equivalent to the House refusing now to consider the resolution on a preliminary question.

Mr. BEEBE. I move to postpone the question of privilege as submitted by the Chair until Monday next; and on that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is it in order for a member to move to postpone a question of consideration which is pending before the Speaker and which the Speaker has submitted to be determined by the House?

Mr. BEEBE. The motion to postpone just answers to that case. The Speaker has stated that it has become the duty of the Chair to submit the question to the House. Now it seems to me very proper that the House should take time to consider the question. It is not such a question that the House should be forced to its immediate consideration. This is a new point.

Mr. CALKINS. If the gentleman from New York has made a motion which is in order and has called the previous question on his motion, is it in order for him to go on and debate it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would make this suggestion: if the House desires time to examine into the question of privilege the Chair would suggest that the House can test the sense of its members by the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SPRINGER. On the question of consideration as to whether this is a privileged question or not.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a point of order. I understood I was recognized by the Speaker. I asked the Chair whether my motion was not in order, and the Speaker said it was. I then made the motion, and if in order it seems to me to be the present duty of the House to dispose of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to this: that if you can postpone the consideration of a question of privilege then it is no longer a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. It would come up again when the time arrived to which it was postponed as a question of privilege, just as election cases are allowed to be interrupted by other business.

Mr. BUTLER. But whether the House would again exercise its privilege after having postponed it for other business is another question.

The SPEAKER. The House always has to decide as to the priority of business.

Mr. BEEBE. I call the regular order. I made a motion which the Speaker recognized as in order, and I ask that the question be taken on that motion. I do not want as a member of this House to be compelled to vote on this proposition precipitately.

The SPEAKER. The very suggestion which the Chair made gives time; and the Chair would prefer to have the issue in the House made in that way.

Mr. BEEBE. With all deference to the Chair I want to avoid any point which might be implied by action with reference to this resolution.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know whether it is in order to move to postpone a question of consideration to a day certain.

The SPEAKER. It is, to postpone to a day certain any question. It is embraced in the very terms of the rule.

Mr. BEEBE. The reason why I do not desire to be forced to vote on the question of consideration is that I do not want to be before the country as taking a position that I will not consider this proposition. All I want is in reference to the question of privilege to consider that and to leave the question of the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts as a subsequent matter.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to ask the Chair this question: If the question of order which the Chair has proposed to submit to the House, whether or not this is a question of privilege, should be decided by the House in the affirmative—that is, if the House should decide that the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts is a question of privilege—would not the vote then have to be taken as between that question of privilege and the motion I have made?

The SPEAKER. If the House should declare this is a question of privilege then the further point could be raised whether the House would consider it at this time.

Mr. POTTER. Yes, Mr. Speaker, but, if the motion of my colleague from New York [Mr. BEEBE] should prevail, then the determination of the question whether the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts be a question of privilege would be deferred until Monday. So that we should thus have until Monday to consider that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood from several members what he supposed to be the disposition of the House—that is, not to be precipitated into a decision on the part of the House as to whether this is a question of privilege or not. And therefore the gentleman from New York made the motion that the consideration of the question of privilege be postponed until Monday next. The Chair entertained that motion because it was in order. When any question is up for consideration the rule declares exactly what shall be in order:

When any question is under debate no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lie on the table, for the previous question, to postpone to a day certain.

Now, it was competent, therefore, for the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] to make the motion to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. EDEN. The effect of the motion, if carried out, will be to carry the whole subject over until Monday.

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to make a suggestion. I think that the Chair, in entertaining the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BEEBE,] is not correct. If the motion of the gentleman from New York will be entertained, he can move to postpone until Monday, or until Christmas, with the same propriety.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to decide.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a question for the House if the original motion is pending and properly pending. I think that a motion to postpone until next Christmas the question of privilege proves its absurdity in my judgment.

Mr. CALKINS. If the Chair decides that it is a question of privilege, then a motion to postpone is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits the question to the House, and it is before the House from the Chair.

Mr. CALKINS. What question is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question whether this resolution is a question of privilege.

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly then the question of privilege is not before the House, and therefore a motion to postpone it cannot be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has directly submitted the question to the House to determine whether or not it be a question of privilege.

Mr. CALKINS. When the question is decided then the motion to postpone will be in order.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a question of order. Having made a motion which the Chair has entertained as in order, and upon that motion having called the previous question, it is now too late to discuss the question of order or the propriety of the motion.

Mr. BUTLER. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FOSTER. Before that question is put—

Mr. BEEBE. It is not in order to debate it.

Mr. FOSTER. Before that question is put I desire to have read the Journal in the case when Mr. Patterson was elected Doorkeeper. I maintain that the Journal will show that the election of Patterson was introduced as a motion of privilege.

Mr. BEEBE. That is in the nature of debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Journal ought to be read.

Mr. BEEBE. I do not want to antagonize the Chair.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire the judgment of the Chair upon my question of order, which is: that the motion of the gentleman from New York is premature; that it cannot be considered or entertained until the first question is decided, whether this is a question of privilege or not. The House having determined that question, then it will be in order to move to postpone.

The SPEAKER. Pending the determination of the House that it is a question of privilege, the gentleman has a right to make the motion to postpone, and that question is before the House.

Mr. BURCHARD. I understand that the motion which the gentleman from Indiana excepts to is the motion to postpone the consideration of the question of privilege.

Mr. CALKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURCHARD. Now, it seems to me, this is one of the questions that has risen incidentally that must be decided immediately. Here is a question that interrupts the order of business of the House. It is stated to be a question of privilege; it stops all other business. Now is it a question of privilege? The Speaker can decide the question, but he may submit it to the House and the House must decide it.

The motion of the gentleman from New York, therefore, is premature. He cannot postpone this question any more than the Speaker can postpone a question of order without the consent of the House. It appears to me, therefore, that the point of order on the immediate consideration of the question of postponement is well taken, but after the question of whether this is a question of privilege is disposed of by the House, then a motion to postpone the question of privilege will be in order.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not seem to have made myself understood, and I will repeat my point of order. It is: that the motion of the gentlemen from New York is to postpone the consideration of the question of privilege to a day certain. Now it has not yet been determined, either by the Chair or the House, whether the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is a question of privilege, and until that is determined there is nothing that can be postponed, and the question must be determined summarily.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, the rule says "question;" and the Chair having submitted to the House whether the House will determine that it is a "question" of privilege, it is a "question," and it can be postponed under the rule and practice and other business be proceeded with if postponed.

Mr. CALKINS. Does the Chair hold that when the Chair submits a motion of this kind to the House it is a question within the meaning of Rule 42?

The SPEAKER. It is a question just as much as any other motion under the rule.

Mr. CALKINS. Then suppose the Chair determined it and did not submit it to the House. I understand the Chair may determine it peremptorily or refer it to the House. Neither is a question within the meaning of the rule.

The SPEAKER. Where the question is whether a resolution is a privileged question to be offered at any time, and the Chair has submitted it to the House it is a question before the House, and it is competent for any member to move to postpone it to a day certain.

Mr. CALKINS. The question before the House, then, is the question submitted by the Chair.

Mr. BEEBE. By the force of the rule authorizing the Speaker to submit it.

Mr. COX, of New York. The House can postpone it or decide it forthwith.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] will hardly contend that when a motion is submitted by the Chair to the House as to the character of a resolution that it is not a question before the House, and, if a question, then it is competent for the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] to move to postpone it to a day certain.

Mr. CALKINS. Allow me another suggestion. Let us take another case to illustrate the matter. Suppose a gentleman raises the question of consideration between two bills and the Chair submits the question to the House, and then a gentleman moves to postpone the question of consideration to a day certain, and then somebody still moves to postpone that question to a day certain and so on, ad libitum—where would it stop?

The SPEAKER. The House has it within its power to decide questions of priority of business.

Mr. CALKINS. It seems to me a reductio ad absurdum.

Mr. COX, of New York. Could not the House adjourn now?

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask that the Journal of May 26, 1876, relating to the election of Mr. Patterson as Doorkeeper, be read.

Mr. CALKINS. Do I understand the Chair to overrule my point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman from Indiana made any point of order. That part of the Journal referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Teese, as a question of privilege, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to, namely:

Resolved, That John H. Patterson, a citizen of the State of New Jersey, be, and he is hereby, elected Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress, for the unexpired term thereof.

Mr. Teese moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The said John H. Patterson thereupon appeared, and, having taken the oath of office prescribed by section 1737 of the Revised Statutes, and Rule 10 of the House of Representatives, entered upon the discharge of the duties of said office.

The SPEAKER. It seems in that case to have been admitted as a question of privilege by consent, but in this case it is contested, and the Chair therefore submits the question to the House to determine, as provided for in the Manual of the House.

Mr. POTTER. And pending the question of consideration it is in order to move to postpone.

Mr. BEEBE. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I insist upon the regular order in the interest of private claimants against the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very anxious that the Private Calendar shall be reached.

Mr. FRANKLIN. If the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] prevails, then on next Monday the House will be called upon to consider whether this subject is a question of privilege or not, if I understand it correctly.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon determining the point of order as to whether the resolution is privileged, and not of the merits of the resolution.

Mr. BEEBE. Of course I contemplated that the question should come up promptly after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. FRANKLIN. There seems to be a disposition on this side of the House a little different from that which prevailed yesterday. There was no objection yesterday to the other side of the House participating in this Doorkeeper matter, but there seems to have been a change. I do not think that they have a right to select a Doorkeeper or turn one out.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House to be voted upon is the motion of the gentleman from New York to postpone the question submitted for the decision of the House by the Chair, whether under the circumstances existing at this time a motion to proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper, as proposed, is a question of privilege.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. LUTTRELL called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. To what hour on Monday is it proposed to postpone this matter?

Mr. BEEBE. Immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a parliamentary question, and it is, whether the matter will come up for a vote the first thing on Monday, after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that to be the motion of the gentleman from New York, as modified.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, according to that, it will come up immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday next.

Mr. BEEBE. Unless it is again postponed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he modify his motion so that this matter will come up immediately after the morning hour, and in that way we can have a morning hour on Monday.

Mr. BEEBE. I cannot agree to that now; it is too late.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; we want to attend to this Doorkeeper business as soon as possible.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 112, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—125.

Acklen,	Eden,	Jones, James T.	Scales,
Aiken,	Eickhoff,	Kenau,	Schleicher,
Banning,	Elam,	Kimmel,	Shelley,
Bell,	Ellis,	Knapp,	Singleton,
Benedict,	Evins, John H.	Knott,	Slemmons,
Bicknell,	Ewing,	Landers,	Smith, William E.
Blackburn,	Felton,	Ligon,	Southard,
Blount,	Finley,	Lockwood,	Sparks,
Boone,	Forney,	Lynde,	Springer,
Bouck,	Franklin,	Malah,	Stenger,
Bragg,	Garth,	Manning,	Throckmorton,
Bright,	Gause,	Martin,	Townsend, R. W.
Buckner,	Giddings,	McKenzie,	Turner,
Cabell,	Glover,	McMahon,	Turney,
Caldwell, J. W.	Goode,	Mills,	Vance,
Candler,	Gunter,	Money,	Waddell,
Carlisle,	Hardebergh,	Morgan,	Walker,
Clark, Alvah A.	Harris, Henry R.	Morrison,	Walsh,
Clark of Missouri,	Harris, John T.	Morse,	Whitthorne,
Clark of Kentucky,	Hartbridge,	Mulder,	Wigington,
Clymer,	Hartzell,	Muller,	Williams, A. S.
Cobb,	Hatcher,	Patterson, T. M.	Williams, James
Cook,	Henkle,	Pelphs,	Williams, Jere N.
Covett,	Henry,	Potter,	Willis, Albert S.
Cox, Samuel S.	Herbert,	Quinn,	Willis, Benj. A.
Cravens,	Hewitt, Abram S.	Rea,	Wilson,
Crittenden,	Hewitt, G. W.	Reagan,	Wood,
Culberson,	Hooker,	Riddle,	Wright,
Davidson,	House,	Robbins,	Yeates.
Dickey,	Huntton,	Roberts,
Durham,	Jones, Frank	Robertson,
		Ross,

NAYS—112.

Aldrich,	Crapo,	Keightley,	Robinson, G. D.
Bacon,	Cummings,	Ketcham,	Robinson, M. S.
Bagley,	Danford,	Killing,	Ryan,
Baker, John H.	Davis, Horace	Lathrop,	Sampson,
Baker, William H.	Deering,	Lindey,	Sapp,
Ballou,	Denison,	Loring,	Sexton,
Banks,	Dunnell,	Luttrell,	Shallenberger,
Bayne,	Eames,	Marsh,	Sinnickson,
Beebe,	Errett,	McCook,	Smalls,
Blair,	Evans, James L.	McGowan,	Stewart,
Brewer,	Fort,	McKinley,	Stone, John W.
Briggs,	Foster,	Mitchell,	Stone, Joseph C.
Brogden,	Frye,	Monroe,	Strait,
Bundy,	Hale,	Near,	Thompson,
Burchard,	Hanna,	Near,	Tipton,
Burlick,	Harris, Benj. W.	O'Neill,	Townsend, Amos
Butler,	Haskell,	Page,	Townsend, M. I.
Cain,	Hazelton,	Patterson, G. W.	Van Vorhes,
Calkins,	Hendee,	Peddie,	Wait,
Camp,	Henderson,	Phillips,	Ward,
Campbell,	Hiscock,	Pollard,	Welch,
Cannon,	Hungerford,	Pound,	White, Harry
Caswell,	Hunter,	Powers,	White, Michael D.
Chittenden,	Itiner,	Price,	Williams, Andrew
Clark, Rush	Jones,	Pugh,	Williams, C. G.
Cole,	Jones, John S.	Rainey,	Williams, Richard
Conger,	Joyce,	Randolph,	Willits,
Cox, Jacob D.	Keifer,	Reed,	Wren.

NOT VOTING—54.

Atkins,	Dibrell,	Hubbell,	Saylor,
Beebe,	Douglas,	Humphrey,	Smith, A. Herr
Blair,	Dwight,	Jorgensen,	Starin,
Bliss,	Ellsworth,	Kelley,	Steele,
Boyd,	Evans, I. Newton	Lapham,	Stephens,
Brentano,	Freeman,	Mackey,	Sward,
Bridges,	Fuller,	Mayham,	Thorburn,
Browne,	Gardner,	McKee,	Tucker,
Caldwell, W. P.	Garfield,	Oliver,	Veeder,
Chalmers,	Gibson,	Overton,	Warner,
Claffin,	Hamilton,	Pridemore,	Watson,
Collins,	Harmer,	Reilly,	Young.
Davis, Joseph J.	Hart,	Rice, Americus V.
Dean,	Hayes,	Rice, William W.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made: Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan. If he were here, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. LOCKWOOD. My colleague, Mr. MARSH, is confined to his room by sickness and is paired with Mr. OLIVER, of Iowa. If here, Mr. MARSH would vote "ay" and Mr. OLIVER would vote "no."

Mr. MACKEY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. EVANS. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. STEELE, is paired with Mr. HAYES, of Illinois.

Mr. DIBRELL. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. THORNBURGH. Mr. YOUNG. My colleague from Tennessee, Mr. CALDWELL, is absent by leave of the House and paired with Mr. FREEMAN, of Pennsylvania. I have no intimation how either of those gentlemen would vote if here.

Mr. BEEBE. I am paired with my colleague, Judge LAPHAM.

Mr. MAYHAM. I am paired with Mr. HUMPHREY, of Wisconsin. If he were here, I would vote "ay."

Mr. TUCKER. I am paired with Mr. GARFIELD, of Ohio. If he were here, I would vote "ay."

Mr. BRIDGES. I am still paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. If he were here, I presume he would vote "no;" I would vote "ay."

Mr. OVERTON. I am paired on this question with my colleague, Mr. REILLY. If he were present, I would vote "no," and I presume he would vote "ay."

Mr. BROWNE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HAMILTON.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Mr. DOUGLAS, is absent by leave of the House and paired with Mr. WATSON, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. ATKINS, of Tennessee, who, I understand, is absent on account of sickness. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague, Mr. HARMER, is paired with Mr. RICE, of Ohio. If they were here, Mr. HARMER would vote "no," and I presume Mr. RICE would vote "ay."

Mr. WATSON. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. DOUGLAS, of Virginia. If he were here, I would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. BEEBE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin at thirteen minutes before two o'clock. This being Friday, the first business in order is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

Mr. BRIGHT. Would it be in order for me now to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of business on the Private Calendar, and that the morning hour of to-day be dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be dispensed with.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I object.

The SPEAKER. The first business in the morning hour—

Mr. DICKEY. When the resolution was submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] as a question of privilege, upon which the point of order was made, I had the floor to introduce a bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked unanimous consent for that purpose. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at a later period.

Mr. DICKEY. And I understood that I had unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The unanimous consent was interrupted by what was claimed to be a question of privilege. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later in the day.

Mr. DICKEY. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twelve minutes before two o'clock, and the first business in order is the calling of committees for reports of a private nature; and the call rests with the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BOUCK, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back adversely House bill No. 1427 to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico, accompanied by a report in writing.

The bill was laid on the table and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOUCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNE M. CLARK.

Mr. MCGOWAN, from the same committee, reported back adversely the petition of Anne M. Clark, for relief, accompanied by a report in writing.

The petition was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCGOWAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the petition was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, Senate bill No. 691, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas," approved February 19, 1873.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill provides that the period within which the thirty-two Indians referred to in the act to which this is an amendment, or their heirs, are required to prove their identity in order to entitle them to the benefits of said act shall be extended for two years from February 19, 1878.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I ask that this bill be now considered. All that it proposes is to allow two or three Indians, who have some interest in the moneys now in the Treasury from the sale of certain lands in Kansas, two years more time in which to prove their claims. Some of the witnesses are residents of the Dominion of Canada, and their evidence has not yet been obtained. There were originally thirty-two of these Indians, and all of the claims have been proved except two or possibly three. This bill simply extends the time for two years in which to prove their claims.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATTARAUGUS INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. SCALES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3824) to authorize the survey of the Cattaraugus Indian reservation, in the State of New York.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to cause the Cattaraugus Indian reservation, in the State of New York, to be resurveyed in accordance with the original survey thereof and the exterior boundaries thereof to be marked by stone or iron monuments, the expense thereof not to exceed the sum of $2,000, and to be paid by the Seneca Nation of Indians, who are authorized to select a surveyor, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The second section provides that the surveyor shall make plats in triplicate of the reservation, showing the lines of its exterior boundaries, streams of water, and public highways on or running through the reservation, and that the plats and field-notes of the survey shall be submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for his examination and approval, and whose duty it shall be to furnish one copy thereof to the clerk of the county of Erie, in the State of New York, one copy to the Seneca Nation of Indians, and the third to be retained in the General Land Office.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add to section 1 the following:

And the said Secretary may pay the said sum of $2,000 to the person who makes the survey out of any moneys under his control belonging to said nation of Indians.

Mr. SCALES. I ask for the reading of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, giving the reasons why the bill should pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 22, 1878.

SIR: I have received, by your reference of 14th instant, letter of same date from Hon. A. M. SCALES, chairman of House Committee on Indian Affairs, submitting for the views of the Department House bill No. 3824, a bill to authorize the survey of the Cattaraugus Indian reservation, in the State of New York.

This bill simply contemplates a retracing of the original lines of the out-boundaries of said reservation. I understand that no survey of the reservation has been made since about 1796, that the monuments of that survey have been obliterated, and that encroachments on the reservation are charged upon contentious proprietors, while such proprietors allege trespass by the Indians.

I am therefore of opinion, as the Indians propose to pay the expense of the survey, that it is advisable, and accordingly recommend the passage of the bill. Said letter and bill are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

D. G. AND D. A. SANFORD.

Mr. MORGAN, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4241) for the relief of D. G. and D. A. Sanford; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOONE, by unanimous consent, presented in writing the views of a minority of the committee upon the bill just reported; which were ordered to be printed with the report.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 228) to authorize and enable the eastern band of the Cherokee Indians to institute and prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims against the Cherokee Nation, have directed me to report back the same, with a recommendation that it pass, and to ask its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That that portion of the Cherokee Indians residing east of the Mississippi River known as the eastern band of the Cherokee Indians, by that name and style be, and they are hereby authorized and empowered to institute, within one year from the passage of this act, and carry on a suit in the Court of Claims, and which court is hereby given jurisdiction of said subject-matter, against that portion of the Cherokee Indians residing west of the Mississippi River, by the name and style of the Cherokee Nation, for the adjudication and recovery of all claims, causes of action, or rights in law or equity, in relation either to lands, proceeds of lands, moneys, or other property, which said eastern band may now, or at any time before the said adjudication, have against the said Cherokee Nation, arising out of any treaty or treaties heretofore made between the United States and the said Cherokee people, or any portion of them, or under any law of the United States, or under any treaty or agreement between said eastern band and said Cherokee Nation; and in such suit the said court shall adjudicate the said matters so involved according to law and equity, any statute of limitations, State or national, to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That in such suit service shall be effected upon said Cherokee Nation by publication in one newspaper published in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and one to be designated by the chief justice of the said court which he may deem to have the largest circulation among the said Cherokee Nation, stating the penalty and objects of said suit; and such suit shall be governed by the practice and rules of procedure of said court so far as applicable; but such court shall have power to prescribe such rules for taking testimony and for other proceedings in the case as the court may find needful in the furtherance of justice.

SEC. 3. That the final judgments or decrees of such court in any such suit may be removed to the Supreme Court of the United States by appeal or writ of error; and in case of such removal, such cause shall have such precedence on the docket of the Supreme Court as is given to cases wherein the United States are a party in interest.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may be made a party to such suit; and it shall be his duty to execute and perform any interlocutory or other order, judgment, or decree of the said Court of Claims in the progress or upon the determination of said suit, touching or affecting the funds, securities, or other property which he holds, or which may hereafter come into his possession, as trustee, or custodian of the funds or property involved in such suit, or any portion thereof.

SEC. 5. That said eastern band of Cherokees are hereby empowered to employ, by written contract, one or more attorneys at law to prosecute said suit; which contract shall be subject to the approval of the chief justice of said Court of Claims.

SEC. 6. That in order to enable said eastern band of Cherokees to defray the incidental expenses of prosecuting any suit, as hereinbefore provided, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, from time to time, to pay to their attorney or attorneys, on the order of the said Court of Claims, for such incidental expenses as may be approved by said court, other than attorneys' fees, amounts aggregating not exceeding the sum of $10,000, out of any funds belonging to said eastern band of Cherokees.

SEC. 7. That the said eastern band of Cherokees, in commencing the suit authorized by this act, shall, in their petition, state and set forth the facts upon which they claim the right to recover, and shall verify the same by the oath or oaths of one or more of their chiefs, headmen, or members of their council; and no other fact or thing shall be necessary to be stated or verified in such petition.

Mr. CLYMER called for the reading of the report; and it was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 228) to enable the eastern band of the Cherokee Indians to institute and prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims against the Cherokee Nation, respectfully submit the following report:

It appears that this bill provides for a settlement of a long-standing controversy between what are known as the "eastern band of Cherokee Indians" being those now residing east of the Mississippi River—and the western Cherokees or Cherokee Nation; in which controversy the eastern band claim a pro rata share of moneys derived from sale of lands and other tribal or national property belonging to the whole Cherokee people.

This claim is based upon the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee tribe or nation of Indians, concluded December 29, 1835, and the agreement made and executed on the 26th of May, 1836, by and between the representatives of that portion of the Cherokees who decided to go west of the Mississippi River and that portion who decided to remain east of said river, and which agreement was for the purpose of explaining the true intent and meaning of the said treaty of 1835, as to the rights of those Cherokees who desired to remain east of the Mississippi, and also upon the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Nation, proclaimed May 23, 1846, supplemental and explanatory of the treaty of 1835, in reference to the subject-matter now in controversy between eastern and western Cherokees.

The question at issue between eastern and western Cherokees as to whether the eastern Cherokees are entitled to a pro rata share of all benefits accruing from the treaty of 1835 without removal to the West, being a condition precedent to sharing such benefits, has at different times been submitted to the proper officers of the Government for opinion. In 1845, Attorney-General John Y. Mason, and again in 1851, Attorney-General J. J. Crittenden, gave opinions upon this question, both of whom sustained the claim set up by the eastern Cherokees, that they were entitled to all the benefits accruing from the treaty of 1835 as other Cherokees without removal to the West. (The same opinion has been expressed by other officers of the Government to whom the subject has been referred for examination and report since the treaty of 1835.) The first opinion thereon being given by the Secretary of War in July, 1836, (the Indian Bureau then being under control of the War Department,) and the last by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, E. P. Smith, in December, 1875.

The eastern band of Cherokees have determined to remain where they now reside in North Carolina and other States east of the Mississippi, and the western Cherokees—Cherokee Nation—having sold a large quantity of the land west of the Mississippi which belonged, in the language of the treaty, to the "whole Cherokee people," they (the eastern Cherokees) now desire to avail themselves of their pro rata share of the money received from said sales, which claim is controverted by the western Cherokees or Cherokee Nation.

Without going into a minute examination of the subject-matter involved in this controversy, the committee are of the opinion that a definite and final settlement of the issue should be had at an early day, and which can better be done by a court of competent jurisdiction wherein a deliberate and searching investigation can be made in the case, such as cannot well be done by Congress in its hurry and pressure of business.

The claimants are authorized to employ by contract attorneys to prosecute said claim in the Court of Claims, which contract must be approved by the chief justice of said court. The Secretary of the Interior being the custodian of the funds of the Cherokee Nation, is to be made a party defendant in the case. It is also provided that the incidental expenses of said suit, other than attorney fees, not to exceed the sum of $10,000, shall be paid from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior out of any funds in his hands or under his control belonging to said eastern band of Cherokees.

The committee therefore report back the accompanying bill giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear and determine said case, and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDEN. This strikes me as a very extraordinary bill. The Court of Claims was instituted for the purpose of examining claims against the Government; but this bill proposes to refer to that court a question between two bands of a certain tribe of Indians. We might just as well refer to that court any question between two citizens. The bill is so extraordinary that I think it ought to go upon the Calendar. It is very lengthy and should be examined before it is acted upon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. As a member of the committee I did not join in the report of the majority; and though I have not felt called upon to make an adverse report, I wish to say in justice to myself that I am opposed to the bill, and I will explain the reasons for my opposition at some future time.

Mr. BUTLER. I raise the point of order that this is a public bill, and cannot under the rules be reported to-day. If I understand it correctly it proposes to allow one nation with whom we might make a treaty to sue another nation with whom we might make a treaty. That is evidently a public affair.

Mr. EDEN. And the whole question of recovery depends upon the construction of a treaty.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair understands the object of the bill, it is to allow a portion of a tribe of Indians to bring a suit against the entire tribe.

Mr. MORGAN. And against the nation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this bill is for the benefit of individuals as a class, and is therefore a private bill.

Mr. EDEN. If I understand the reading of the bill aright, it provides for determining a question that has sprung up between two separate bands of a single tribe of Indians, with whom the Government made a treaty in 1835, under which treaty the Government owes the tribe certain annuities. The question to be determined under that treaty is whether the Indians who remained on the east side of the Mississippi are to have any portion of the fund under that treaty.

The SPEAKER. If this were to recognize or ratify a treaty it would be beyond doubt a public bill.

Mr. EDEN. That is precisely what the bill provides.

Mr. VANCE. Under the treaty of 1835 certain annuities are held in trust by the Government. The eastern band of Cherokee Indians claim that they are entitled to a pro rata share under the treaty; and this bill proposes that the Court of Claims shall settle the dispute between the eastern and the western Cherokees.

Mr. SCALES. My understanding is—and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] is under a wrong impression—that this is a mere matter of the construction of a treaty; and the question is whether the Department shall construe it—

The SPEAKER. If that were so, the Chair would decide the bill to be a public one.

Mr. SCALES. I believe that to be the object of the bill—

Mr. MORGAN. It affects the rights of individuals, not of the whole tribe.

Mr. EDEN. It must necessarily affect the whole tribe, because the treaty is made with the tribe.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen agree that the bill affects the construction to be put upon a treaty, it is undoubtedly a public bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Undoubtedly it relates to the rights of various branches of the Cherokees under treaty stipulations with the United States.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I desire simply to say that this bill refers to the right of individuals under treaty and not to the question of compact between the parties to the treaty.

The SPEAKER. That was the Chair's construction.

Mr. HOOKER. It refers simply to individuals and the rights of individuals, and as such it does come as a private bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided, under the view stated by the gentleman from Mississippi, that it was a private bill. Subsequently, however, the gentleman from North Carolina stated differently.

Mr. SCALES. The Chair did not allow me to finish my statement. I stated it was a construction of the treaty. I still repeat that, but before I went further the Chair stopped me, and said under that construction it was a public bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SCALES. It is the construction of a treaty with regard to individual rights under that treaty.

The SPEAKER. Is this for the benefit of individuals under that treaty?

Mr. SCALES. It is, and nothing more.

Mr. EDEN. It is for the benefit of one band of these Indians.

Mr. SCALES. It does not affect the treaty as an independent measure.

Mr. EDEN. This tribe of Cherokees is divided into two bands. The question presented here is whether under the treaty one of these bands is entitled to this money. That is the question to be settled.

The SPEAKER. It is to give certain individuals embraced in one of these bands a mode of redress. As the Chair understands it is for the benefit of individual Indians.

Mr. SCALES. It does not affect the Government. The Government stands exactly where it did before, but it aids the Government in determining how this money is to be distributed, and to whom it is to be given. The Government does not pay one dollar more or one dollar less.

Mr. VANCE. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that in the Forty-fourth Congress this was regarded as a private bill, and was placed upon the Private Calendar. Such was the decision by one of your predecessors.

Mr. EDEN. Let it go to the Private Calendar or to the public Calendar and I will not make any further objection. I want it to go where the House can have an opportunity to examine it. Let the report be printed. It is a lengthy bill and ought to be considered carefully.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. Does not this bill enlarge the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims by allowing it to consider this matter which otherwise under the law would not be considered, and if that be so it must be considered as a public bill.

Mr. EDEN. It does give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in this case which it does not have now. The Court of Claims has jurisdiction of claims against the Government. This bill proposes to give that court jurisdiction to settle a claim between two bands of Indians.

The SPEAKER. It proposes to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims for the benefit of these individuals.

Mr. VANCE. This fund is held by the Government of the United States in trust for the benefit of these Indians under the treaty, and jurisdiction is proposed to be given to the Court of Claims in order that it may be determined by the Court of Claims how the fund shall be distributed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri accept the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. EDEN. If the gentleman from Missouri will let the bill go either to the Private Calendar or the public Calendar in Committee of the Whole, I will withdraw further objection. I only want the bill and report to be printed and time given for their consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. I must insist on the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. MORGAN. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HASKELL. I should like to inquire whether this bill changes any of the provisions of the treaty?

Mr. MORGAN. It does not. I will explain the purport of the bill in a moment. A controversy has grown up between individuals of this tribe of Indians, and all the bill proposes is to give to the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine that controversy. The fund is in possession of the United States, and it is necessary this determination should be made in regard to the distribution of that fund. It does not take one cent out of the Treasury of the United States, but as I have already stated, merely allows the Court of Claims to determine how this money shall be distributed under the treaty.

Mr. HASKELL. Does not the treaty provide how this money shall be paid?

Mr. MORGAN. It does not; for if that were the case there would be no necessity for this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to know whether or not this bill provides for a distribution of the fund of these Indians which will make it possible there shall be a distribution other than is provided for by the treaty itself between the United States and these Indians.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill merely provides for construction by the Court of Claims under the treaty as to how the fund shall be distributed.

Mr. HANNA. Do the Cherokees want this bill passed?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly they do.

Mr. MORGAN. I must insist, under my instructions from the Committee on Indian Affairs, on the present consideration of this bill. Therefore I move the previous question.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think this bill should be passed in that way, without any chance to consider it at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not press this. I certainly wish to be heard. This bill involves a grave question of public policy and I certainly feel as if we ought not to act upon it until we can act deliberately.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules this is a private bill, and this ruling is in accord with the past practice of the House in like cases.

Mr. EDEN. Then I make the further point of order that it requires an appropriation out of the Treasury for the purpose of paying attorneys' fees.

Mr. HANNA. Are they to be paid out of the Treasury or out of the fund?

Mr. SPARKS. The treaty gives these Indians a certain amount of money. This bill makes provision simply for a disposition of that money among themselves.

Mr. HANNA. And they want this act passed?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I wish to make a statement as to that, so that there may be no mistake about it. A portion of the tribe which resides in North Carolina wants the bill. The remainder of the tribe have never assented to it, directly or indirectly. Nineteen-twentieths of the Cherokees have never assented, directly or indirectly, to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. It is quite true that the Cherokee Nation proper have not assented to the bill. The bill is in the interest of course of the eastern Cherokees; and I contend it is for the benefit of both the eastern and western Cherokees that these controversies should be settled and the troubles ended. They go year after year before the Department. The Department has undertaken to settle the question. And now we propose to refer it to the court to settle it. How the question is likely to be settled I cannot say. I have not examined into the merits of the controversy. I only submit that it should be settled and the Court of Claims is the proper tribunal to settle it.

Mr. EDEN. As this is not a controversy to which the United States is a party at all, why should the question go to the Court of Claims?

Mr. VANCE. The Government is a party because it holds the funds.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri, to permit this bill to go to the Private Calendar. I am satisfied after it is explained, as it will be when we consider it on the Calendar, there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Upon consultation with the gentleman who introduced the bill and at the request of members of the committee I agree that it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

S. T. MARSHALL.

Mr. BOONE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1614) for the relief of S. T. Marshall, of Lee County, Iowa; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN KIERNAN.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1550) for the relief of John Kiernan; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM MILLS.

Mr. BRAGG also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2374) for the relief of William Mills; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

A. S. BLOOM.

Mr. BRAGG also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1226) for the relief of A. S. Bloom, late a major in the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADOLPHE VON HAACKE.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2627) for the relief of Adolphe Von Haacke; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JULIUS QUENTIN.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the petition of Julius Quentin, first lieutenant United States Army, for relief; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS POULTNEY.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1580) for the relief of Thomas Poultny, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. VANCE. What is the nature of the bill? I want to know whether it should properly go to the Committee on Patents.

The bill was read.

Mr. VANCE. I do not see any reason why that bill should go to the Committee on Patents. It has nothing to do with the extension of patents. It is a claim growing out of an alleged infringement of a patent. There is no extension asked in the case, and I do not know why it should go to our committee.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Military Affairs have reported it back with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware. That is the recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, was agreed to.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 1642, a bill (H. R. No. 4242) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain; which was read a first and second time.

The bill reported as a substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled: That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect George A. Armes; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said George A. Armes, late captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of captain held by him on June 7, 1870, in any vacancy occurring in the grade of captain in said regiment: Provided, however, That no pay, compensation, or allowance whatever shall ever be given to said Armes for the time between June 7, 1870, and the date of appointment hereunder: And provided further, That the acceptance of any benefit under this act by said George A. Armes shall be taken and construed to be by his election a bar to any claim for pay or allowances from the date of his discharge to his acceptance of a commission, if one be granted him, and under the provisions of this act.

Mr. MAISH. I ask for the passage of the bill, and move the previous question upon it.

Mr. STRAIT. I make a point of order upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reserve the point of order.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to have the report read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1642) for the restoration of George A. Armes to the Army with the rank of captain, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The records of the War Department show the following facts: That George A. Armes entered the military service of the United States as a private in Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, September 1, 1862; was appointed second lieutenant in the same regiment December 2, 1862; and was appointed captain in the Second Regiment New York Artillery October, 1864. On the 14th of December, 1864, he was mentioned in general orders for meritorious conduct, by General Miles, "for leading the charge and capturing the works at Hatcher's Run, Virginia, in the face of an entrenched enemy and over obstacles very difficult to surmount." Upon the recommendation of Generals Hancock, Auger, Griffin, Mott, Miles, and Thompson, he was appointed second lieutenant in the Second United States Cavalry. Soon after, he was appointed captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry, and his commission was dated back, upon the recommendation of General Philip St. George Cook, with the approval of General U. S. Grant, as a recognition of merit. March 2, 1867, he was brevetted major in the regular Army for gallant services, having been previously brevetted major of volunteers. On the 12th of November, 1866, the following general order was issued:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PLATTE,
Omaha, Nebraska, November 12, 1866.

[General Orders No. 20.]

The commanding general announces to the Department that Lieutenant George A. Armes, Second United States Cavalry, being sent with twenty-five men of his regiment from Fort Sedgewick, October 23, in pursuit of a war party of Sioux Indians, which had driven off the previous day several hundred head of stock, found and followed their trail—under the difficulties of crossing two wide rivers, forks of the Platte, and of darkness—ninety-eight miles, from five o'clock a. m. to eleven o'clock p. m.; then he surprised the party, instantly attacked, killed, and wounded nearly all their superior numbers, captured twenty-two Indian horses, burned their camp, and brought off safely most of their stolen stock. Thus this young officer has set a fine example to the Department of overcoming difficulties that would have discouraged and stopped many without loss of credit, of bold determination to succeed, and of striking without stopping to count his enemies, and has presented to the profession, perhaps, the greatest cavalry feat heretofore recorded.

By order of Brevet Major-General Cooke.

G. LITCHFIELD,
Brevet Major, United States Army,
Aid-de-Camp, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

On the 20th of August, 1867, he was recommended by Generals Sherman and Hancock for the brevet of lieutenant-colonel, for hard and heroic services against the Indians, by whom he was wounded during an engagement. This is only a portion of the very meritorious and gallant conduct of this young officer to this date in his military history, which seems to have challenged almost the universal respect and confidence of the officers under whom he served. The records of the War Department further show that in 1869 charges were preferred against Major Armes. They were four in number. The first charge and its specifications were abandoned on the trial. Upon the third and fourth he was found not guilty; and upon the second charge, "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," he was found guilty and sentenced "to be dismissed the service." These charges were preferred by Captain George W. Graham. The main witnesses were Lieutenant B. F. Bell and Captain Charles G. Cox. Bell had already been tried, convicted, and cashiered for bribery and embezzlement of public property. Cox was, when called, undergoing trial upon charges previously preferred by Major Armes, and he was subsequently convicted and sentenced to be dismissed, cashiered, fined, and imprisoned in a penitentiary for three years. Graham, who was also called as a witness, was at the time awaiting trial upon charges preferred by Major Armes, which resulted in his conviction, and he was fined $500 and sentenced to be confined two years in the penitentiary. He was afterward shot while attempting to rob and murder a United States paymaster, captured, brought to trial, and sentenced by the civil authorities to the penitentiary for a term of two years, and, upon serving out that sentence, was killed while attempting another daring robbery.

The testimony, viewed in the light of its own contradictions, and the character of the persons who testified, was all of the very worst quality. Many of the circumstances of his trial are remarkable. An officer who not only acknowledged that he entertained an opinion unfavorable to Major Armes, but had publicly proclaimed it, was allowed to sit as a member of the court, and of no objection or remonstrance on the part of Armes was of any avail. The trial of Cox was in progress when that of Armes was taken up, yet the trial of Cox was suspended, it would seem, that he could appear and testify before his inevitable conviction upon the charges preferred against him by Armes. The debased characters of these witnesses, Cox, Bell, and Graham, were no better before than after conviction, and if justice had been allowed to take its course and these two desperate villains had been tried before Major Armes was, as they should have been in the regular and due order of things, the trial of Armes and the terrible injustice that was done him would never have taken place. Here is a case of a brave and energetic young officer, with a most brilliant record, driven in disgrace from his profession upon the testimony of witnesses wholly unworthy of credit. Major Armes did nothing but his duty in bringing charges against Graham and Cox, and they connected the charges against Armes to save themselves. Two months after the charges preferred by him. He was moreover their senior in rank, showing that Armes was justified in bringing the charges and that he was actuated by proper motives. His conduct, therefore, entitles him to commendation. It has already been shown what characters Bell, Cox, and Graham sustained. The women who testified had been ordered off the reservation at Fort Harker by the commanding officer as persons of notoriously bad character. The testimony of the weak-minded boy who was a witness against Captain Armes was so inconsistent and contradictory as to be entirely worthless. It is believed that every committee either of the House or Senate which has examined this case has reported in favor of Captain Armes. And the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of both the Senate and House in June, 1874, recommended his restoration to the Army in the following complimentary terms.

To the President:

The undersigned members of the Military Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, earnestly recommend and request the reinstatement of George A. Armes, late captain United States Army, without loss of rank or pay. His case has had a thorough examination, and his innocence is proven; hence, his reinstatement, the least measure of justice, should be done at once.

POWELL CLAYTON.
GEORGE E. SPENCER.
JAMES K. KELLY.
P. M. B. YOUNG.
W. G. DONNAN.
J. M. THORNBURGH.
JOHN B. HAWLEY.
JOHN COBURN.

CHARLES ALBRIGHT.
B. WADLEIGH.
J. N. NESMITH.
EPPA HUNTON.
LEWIS B. GUNCKEL.
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY.
C. D. McDUGALL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 29, 1874.

Numerous testimonials from responsible and well-known citizens and officers of the Army and Navy, who have been associated with Major Armes from boyhood, show that he has always been upright and honorable. To any one who will examine the evidence and the subsequent character and history of the witnesses in the case, there can be no doubt that the charges against and conviction of Major Armes were the result of a conspiracy to disgrace and drive him from the Army, on the part of the desperate characters who figured in the trial. The record does not show that the proceedings in this case were reviewed and approved by the President as the law directs. The case was, therefore, not completed, and, in the opinion of your committee, this fact is sufficient to entitle the accused to a review and judgment on the record, which, on the evidence produced before your committee, would certainly be in his favor. But it appears that an act of Congress was passed in June, 1874, honorably discharging Major Armes from the service. This act had the effect to sever all connection Armes may have had with the Army. The action of your committee, therefore, is based entirely on the abstract merits of Major Armes's case. He was greatly wronged and the bill here recommended, should it become a law, will enable the President to restore him to the Army, and thus measurably repair the injuries he has suffered.

The committee report a substitute for bill H. R. No. 1642, and recommend the passage of the same.

Mr. STRAIT. I make the point of order that that bill contemplates an appropriation to pay money out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The first clause of the bill reads: "and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said George A. Armes," &c.

Subsequently it is provided "that no pay, compensation, or allowance whatever shall be given to said Armes for the time between June 7, 1870, and the date of appointment hereunder."

It provides further: "That the acceptance of any benefit under this act by said George A. Armes shall be taken and construed to be by his election a bar to any claim for pay or allowance from the date of his discharge to his acceptance of a commission."

It seems to the Chair that an appropriation would be a very remote contingency, requiring the President in his discretion to appoint and the Senate to confirm the appointment.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MAISH. I have demanded the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that there is no appropriation contained in this bill, and that the ruling has been the same in similar cases, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman who reported the bill to make the motion for the previous question; if it be voted down, then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] to move to refer the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to say something about the merits of this bill.

Mr. BANNING. The gentleman is too late.

The SPEAKER. The main question was ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and was exhausted with the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. Notwithstanding the courtesy of the chairman of the committee, his subordinate, who has charge of the bill, is willing to yield to him.

The SPEAKER. The main question was exhausted, the Chair repeats, on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I endeavored to be heard before the main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman is under a misapprehension. The main question was exhausted with the engrossment and third reading.

Mr. MAISH. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania who has charge of the bill now demands the previous question upon its passage, and it is competent for him to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HENDEE. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HENDEE. Then I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired and the bill goes over until the next morning hour for private business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 2287) to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation, submission, and opening of bids for contracts under the War Department.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BRIGHT. This being objection day, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, for the purpose of considering the business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, this being objection day, the Calendar will be resumed at the point where it was left off on the last objection day.

MRS. EMMA A. PORCH.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1551) for the relief of Mrs. Emma A. Porch, of Centretown, Missouri, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. OLIVER.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Emma A. Porch, of Centretown, Missouri, the sum of $700 for services rendered and losses sustained as a Union scout during the late war of the rebellion.

The report was read, as follows:

This claim was reported favorably in the Thirty-ninth Congress by the Committee of Claims, and passed the House; favorably in the Fortieth Congress, and passed the House; favorably in the Forty-first Congress; favorably in the Forty-second Congress, and passed the House, and was favorably reported to the Senate; favorably in the Forty-third Congress, and favorably in the Forty-fourth Congress. The Committee of Claims in the Thirty-ninth Congress made the following report of the facts:

"The petitioner was employed by order of General E. B. Brown as a scout and spy about the 7th of April, 1864, and during the 'Price raid.'

"The sworn statement of the petitioner, together with the affidavits of Martha Ostrander and Herman S. Bruns, and letters from General E. B. Brown and Governor Thomas C. Fletcher, all concur in proving that the petitioner rendered service as spy and scout; that such service was at great hazard to her life; that she thereby furnished the United States Government with valuable information, and that she was promised by the provost-marshal $500 for the same.

"It also appears that she was thus employed from about the 1st of October until some time in November, 1864, during which time she was taken prisoner by the enemy.

"The character of the petitioner is esteemed as above reproach."

The Committee of Claims in the Forty-second Congress adopted this statement of facts and added the following:

"In the report of the Committee of Claims above referred to, the item of two horses lost is not considered at all, and seems to have been entirely overlooked. The evidence submitted establishes such loss to the satisfaction of the committee, and that said horses were worth $150 each.

"In view of the fact (see Appendices A and B) that the services rendered by Mrs. Porch were of great value to the Union cause; that said services have seriously impaired her health; that she saved the life of a Union officer; that she has received no compensation for the horses so lost, to which your committee believe her to be entitled, and that nearly ten years have elapsed since the services were rendered, your committee are of opinion that Mrs. Porch is entitled to compensation for services rendered and losses incurred while acting as a Union scout, and also on account of her impaired health, and accordingly report the accompanying bill appropriating $1,000, and recommend its passage."

APPENDIX A.

STATE OF MISSOURI, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
City of Jefferson, May 24, 1866.

The claim of Mrs. Emma A. Porch, late Miss Kate Smith, for services as scout rendered Brigadier-General E. B. Brown, United States Volunteers, commanding Central District Missouri in 1864, has been examined by me, and I am well satisfied that it is a just and meritorious claim, and should be paid. The United States is clearly liable for the same.

No appropriation has been made by the Legislature for the payment of this class of claims, to my knowledge.

THOS. C. FLETCHER.

APPENDIX B.

OFFICE OF THE CLERK OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI,
City of Jefferson, April 1, 1871.

I have known Mrs. Emma Porch (whose maiden name Emma Smith) since the early part of the late rebellion; knew her in 1864, and remember that her movements, as they came under my observation, seemed erratic and mysterious; that before and during the time of Price's raid she was going from place to place in this vicinity for some purpose then unknown to me; that while Price's forces were passing here she sought to borrow of me a horse to go in the direction of the raiders. I did not then know why.

Subsequently I learned that she had been then acting as a Federal spy, and was informed that she had been very serviceable. Prior to that time she wore the appearance of robust health.

Since that time she has worn the appearance of enfeebled health, and seems now to be in very poor health. The cause alleged for the loss of her health is the exposure she endured as a spy.

She is a woman of excellent character—exemplary in the various relations of life.

Unquestionably she is entitled to liberal compensation for her services to the Government, and I think it strange that she has not long since received it.

ADAMS PEABODY,

Clerk of United States District Court, Western District of Missouri.

"From documentary evidence it appears that the petitioner was a school-teacher in California, Missouri, for several years, and in 1864, in consequence of the raid of General Price, her school was broken up. She was subsequently employed in the Union Army as a spy, and rendered very efficient service, and was taken prisoner by the rebels, narrowly escaped hanging, and in consequence of great hardships and exposures while a prisoner became broken down in health.

"There is every reason to regard her statements as the exact truth, when she says that on one occasion, while she was a prisoner, 'the "Feds" shelled the train, the shells passing over my head, not to exceed two feet from me. The "Feds" were only half a mile from us. I thought my time had come. I became insane and knew not what I was saying; I only knew that I was a prisoner, guarded day and night by rebels. Time passed that way, with little variation, for three days and nights, when we arrived in Kansas. I had seen every line of battle that was formed from the first to the last, had seen the dead and wounded, both friend and foe, lying on the battle field, had been obliged to ride from thirty-five to fifty miles a day under two sets of guards; was worn out and nearly starved and completely jaded down."

"She gives various details and says: 'The next time we stopped at Little Osage, Kansas. There I formed the acquaintance of a conscript Federal, at whose house we stopped. He pretended to be getting ready to go on with us, (the rebels,) while all the time he was going to try to get to the "Feds." I gave him what information I could concerning the "rebs." He succeeded in making his escape, and got to our friends in time to give them important news. That night, had they time to dig their ditches, the five hundred prisoners would have been shot and buried, and then I was to have been hanged; but, thanks to Almighty God and the Federals, our boys came upon them before they could carry out their designs. That morning we started south again; went fifty-five miles before we stopped; reached Carthage that night. Here General Price was determined to be rid of me, so he ordered the provost marshal-general to tell me I should be shot in the morning as a spy.' Further details are given, and after a while she was unconditionally released. She states that the last supper she ate with the rebels was only a raw turnip not one-half as big as her fist, and for several days before she left them she was so weak they had to assist her to walk."

Your committee regard this case as possessing special merit and, in view of the fact that the health of the claimant is broken down, impaired as it was by exposure as a guide and scout, believe she is entitled to consideration at the hands of the Government, and therefore report the accompanying bill, appropriating the sum of $700, that being the amount of $300 promised by the military authorities at the time, and $400 for the horses proven to have been lost, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN C. RAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1855) for the relief of John C. Ray, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. OLIVER.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John C. Ray, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,533.33, in full for services as pilot in the United States naval service during the late war, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, called for the reading of the report. The Clerk read as follows:

In April, 1864, said Ray was employed, at a salary of $400 per month, as pilot of the steamboat Champion No. 3, then employed in towing barges of coal for the army and navy of the Lower Mississippi. When the boat reached the mouth of Red River, about the 15th of April, she was ordered and compelled, against the protest of her officers and crew, to proceed up that river to Alexandria, about one hundred and twenty miles, and report to Commodore D. D. Porter with one barge of coal, and when she did so, she was then required and compelled, against the protest of officers and crew, to proceed about one hundred and twenty miles farther up the river to assist in raising the sunken United States vessel Eastport.

Commodore Porter accompanied the expedition in his flag-boat and commanded it. On the return they came to a confederate battery of nineteen guns, meantime erected near the mouth of Cain Creek, and in running the same, under the orders of Commodore Porter, the boiler of the Champion No. 3 was exploded by a shot, and only seven persons out of one hundred and seventy on board escaped with their lives. The Champion No. 3 was also totally destroyed and the survivors of both crews made prisoners of war and confined at Camp Ford, Texas, where they suffered privations and exposures scarcely paralleled in the history of the war. The claimant asks to be paid his wages during the time he was a prisoner.

This claim was presented to the accounting officers of the Navy for payment and rejected for want of authority to allow it, as appears by the following extract from a letter of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, in reply to a request on behalf of your committee for information.

"I entered upon the examination with reluctance, for I had already become impressed that the claimant, as a survivor of the terrible disaster referred to and the dangers of the long and irksome incarceration, deserved substantial recognition at the hands of the Government, and I knew of no law that authorized the adjustment of his claim by the accounting officers of the Treasury. After examination of the case it was with regret that I came to the conclusion that his case is casus omissus."

Congress has directly provided (Revised Statutes, section 3483) that one who sustains damage by the destruction by an enemy of a vessel, while such property is in the military service, shall be paid the value of the vessel. And section 4693, Revised Statutes, has been construed to authorize the payment of a pension in a case where the terms of employment were the same as that under which claimant was engaged at the time of the disaster. I have examined carefully the regulations of the Army and of the Navy and the acts of Congress, together with the authorities cited by the claimant's attorney, and I am unable to find any like provision that would authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to sustain this claim without further legislation.

I am, very respectfully,

W. W. UPTON,
Second Comptroller.

Your committee fully concur with the Second Comptroller as to the justice and merit of this claim.

Under the laws above referred to the owner of the vessel has been paid its value and the widows of the killed have been pensioned. No good reason exists why the survivors should not be paid wages during the time of their captivity. If their comrades who lost their lives were in the service of the United States so as to entitle their widows to pension, surely the survivors were in the service and entitled to pay. If the owner of the vessel, who risked his property in the service of the United States, was entitled to compensation for its loss, then a fortiori (as life and liberty are dearer than property) he who risked his life and lost his liberty in the service of the United States should at least have pay for the time lost in captivity. And such is the ruling and practice in auditing accounts for services in the Quartermaster's Department of the Army in precisely similar cases, as appears by the following letter received by your committee in reply to an inquiry addressed to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, who has charge of that duty in Army accounts:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1878.

In response to your letter of the 22d instant, asking as to the practice of this office in reference to claims filed by employees of the Quartermaster's Department for compensation as such employees while held as prisoners of war, you are informed that it has not been the custom of this office to make any allowance to such persons merely as damages for detention while in captivity. The action of the office has been founded on the theory that persons hired by the Quartermaster's Department and carried on the rolls of that department continue to be the servants thereof during captivity, and are entitled to be paid at the rate of hiring until discharged from the service.

The favorable action of this office has not, however, been confined to persons in the service of the Quartermaster's Department under express contract, but has been extended to the crews of boats which have been impressed into the military service, which crews have been subsequently captured, upon the theory that by the impressment of the boat the Government make the employees of the owners its servants.

There is no special statute authorizing these allowances, but the act of 1817 (section 277, Revised Statutes), imposing upon the Third Auditor the duty of examining all accounts of the Quartermaster's Department, has been deemed to confer ample authority for the action taken.

In reference to compensation, the rule has been to continue to an employee the pay he was receiving from his employer at the time of the capture and to continue the same while he is actually held as a prisoner of war—that is to say, up to the time of his parole—allowing, in addition, a reasonable time for his return to the port of shipment.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HORACE AUSTIN, Auditor.

It would thus seem that in precisely similar cases pay is allowed in the Army and disallowed in the Navy. Your committee do not question the correctness of the ruling in either case. It is probable casus omissus in the case of the Navy, as the Second Comptroller suggests; but it is evident that the Government should be prompt to mete out the same justice to the gallant men who do the same services in time of danger, whether done in the Army or the Navy. Whether an act be performed under the orders of a general or of a commodore can make no possible difference either in its merit or its worth.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN W. SKILES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1371) for the relief of John W. Skiles, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. ROBINSON, of Indiana.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,938.30 to John W. Skiles, being the amount expended and paid by him for the services of civilian clerks in the discharge of his duties as commandant of the draft and recruiting rendezvous for the State of Ohio, at Tod Barracks, Columbus, Ohio, during the years of 1864 and 1865, in the recruiting of the Army of the United States.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That John W. Skiles was major of the Eighty-eighth Ohio Volunteers during the late war. Having lost an arm in battle, he was assigned to duty as provost-marshal and commandant of the draft rendezvous at Tod Barracks, Columbus, Ohio, during a part of the years 1864 and 1865. That the duties performed by said Skiles were extensive, onerous, and responsible, and included, in addition to the duties of preserving order and discipline in and around the city of Columbus, and especially the barracks which he commanded, the duties also of receiving enlisted men, recruits, and deserters, properly providing for them, and forwarding them to their proper commands and to the armies in the field. That, among other duties imposed upon him, he was required to keep a descriptive list of all men passing into and out of said camp, to take from recruits and substitutes all sums of money in excess of $20 to each man, to note upon the pay and descriptive roll the amount of money taken from each soldier or recruit, to forward the same with the rolls to the command to which the men were sent, and finally to make to the proper Department accurate and detailed accounts of all such transactions. That there passed through the barracks commanded by Major Skiles more than eighty thousand men, who were by him transferred to active duty in the field. That about $1,400,000 were received and disbursed by him, by virtue of his position, into the numerous channels prescribed by the War Department. That he took $71,647 from deserters and "bounty-jumpers," and, in accordance with orders, turned it into the public Treasury.

To properly discharge the onerous and many duties he was required to discharge, Major Skiles was compelled to employ the assistance of competent and skilled civilian clerks, from time to time, during the time he was in discharge of and assigned to the duties at said barracks, as aforesaid. That about two months after entering upon duty he informed the Provost-Marshal-General at Washington of such employment of civilians, and asked for authority to continue the clerks thus employed on duty. The Provost-Marshal-General informed him that the Department did not contemplate the employment of civilians in such positions, and that no payment could therefore be made to them. Being very greatly embarrassed, Major Skiles consulted with General Heintzelman, an officer of great experience, then in command of the Department of the Ohio, and with other officers of judgment and experience, as to his duty and as to the course he should pursue under the surrounding circumstances. The officers thus consulted fully comprehended the situation; the Army was in need of men, the demand was urgent from commanding officers in the field for more troops, thousands of reinforcements to the Army were being forwarded from Tod Barracks, and thousands of dollars went into the hands and were disbursed by and under the authority of Major Skiles. In the accomplishment of so many duties of such great responsibility none but competent and experienced clerks could make up the complicated and revised accounts and disburse the large amounts of moneys that went into the hands of the commandant. These officers, well understanding that the attention of the chief officers of the Government was absorbed in the events of the pending war, advised Major Skiles to continue the employment of his civilian clerks, and trust to a faithful and efficient performance of his duties for indorsement by the Government and for reimbursement for moneys expended by him necessarily in an earnest endeavor to forward his cause. From these considerations, and from the fact that expert civilian clerks were absolutely essential to a true and faithful performance of his duties, Major Skiles continued such of the civilian clerks in his service as could not be dispensed with for a number of months, until he had expended in their payment, of his private funds, the sum of $1,938.30. This expenditure is clearly and conclusively proven by the receipts of the parties to whom the payments were made, and by the testimony of officers who were on duty at Tod Barracks at the time. The propriety of such payments is shown by the testimony of officers and citizens who were conversant with the facts, aware of the circumstances, and who knew and understood the difficulties and duties imposed upon Major Skiles. In addition to the testimony filed in this case, it is shown by the report of the Committee on War Claims in the Forty-fourth Congress, to whom this claim was referred, that General Heintzelman and Major Skiles were orally examined before that committee, and that the facts hereinbefore stated were generally substantiated by them. That committee made a favorable report on said claim.

Major Skiles, whose "empty sleeve" testifies to his devotion and sacrifices as a soldier, and whose superiors and comrades testify to his high character as a man, was honorably mustered out of service in 1865. Soon after his discharge Major Skiles closed his accounts with the Government, and has filed with his claim certificates from the several bureaus of the War Department showing that he owes the Government nothing, and that his accounts have been closed to its satisfaction. He has at all times claimed from the Government the sum of $1,938.30 paid out and disbursed by him, as stated, from his private means, and has used proper diligence and resorted to every honorable effort to have the proper Department reimburse him. All efforts to that end have proved unsuccessful, because it has been claimed that the employment of the civilian clerks was without right and voluntarily on his part; especially was it so after the Provost-Marshal General refused to sanction or authorize such employment. While your committee concede, as a matter of strict construction, technically the Department may have been right, yet, as a matter of justice, we think that Major Skiles should be repaid and reimbursed the amount expended by him in such evident good faith, in obedience to the exigencies of the service and in the honest discharge of the onerous and responsible duties imposed by virtue of his position upon him.

That Major Skiles would have hazarded a great deal in attempting to detail from the raw recruits, "bounty-jumpers," and deserters passing through his camp, men to have discharged the various complicated and responsible duties performed by the expert and reliable clerks employed by him, is apparent from the facts, and about which there can be no doubt. He discharged his duties faithfully and well, forwarded thousands of men to the armies in the field, disbursed nearly a million and a half of money to the satisfaction of the Government and all others interested, and saved and turned over to the Government near $72,000 in money forfeited by deserters and others. True, it may be that he took upon himself in the employment of civilian clerks a responsibility not authorized by the strict letter of the law, but it was a responsibility dictated by a worthy desire to serve the Government in the most efficient manner. The Government received the beneficial results and ought now to bear the burden.

The committee therefore report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM J. ALEXANDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3289) for the relief of William J. Alexander, of Bloomington, Monroe County, Indiana, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. ROBINSON, of Indiana.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William J. Alexander, of Bloomington, Monroe County, Indiana, the sum of $27.50, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for all services rendered by said William J. Alexander in the secret service of the United States in the State of Indiana during the year 1863, for which he was never paid.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ALDERSON T. KEENE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 330) for the benefit of Alderson T. Keene, late first lieutenant of Company E, First Kentucky Cavalry, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. KEIFER.

The bill appropriates the sum of $325 to Alderson T. Keene, late first lieutenant of Company E, First Kentucky Cavalry, in the late war, the same being for forage and rations furnished by him in 1862 for a detachment of soldiers under his command while in the service of the United States.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN ZUMSTEIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3290) for the relief of John Zumstein, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. KEIFER.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to that bill. I never knew a sutler who upon the next load did not make all the profit that had been lost upon the one stolen before.

There being objection, the bill was passed over.

HIRAM JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3291) to refund to Hiram Johnson and certain other citizens of Tennessee taxes illegally collected from them by military orders, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky.

Mr. BREWER. I object to that bill.

The bill being objected to, it was passed over.

ROSA VERTNER JEFFREY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3292) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffrey, of the State of Kentucky, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky.

Mr. BREWER. I object to that bill.

The bill being objected to, it was passed over.

MRS. ELIZA E. HERBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3293) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Herbert, of the State of Louisiana, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky.

Mr. BROWNE. I object to that bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection to this bill as it has been reported on favorably in two Congresses.

Mr. BREWER. Let the report be read.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I object to the bill.

There being objection, the bill was passed over.

A. L. H. CRENSHAW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3294) for the relief of A. L. H. Crenshaw, of Jackson County, Missouri, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. REILLY.

Mr. KEIFER. I object to that bill.

There being objection, the bill was passed over.

DABNEY WALKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1140) for the relief of Dabney Walker, which was reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. REILLY.

Mr. BREWER. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope not.

The motion of Mr. ROBERTSON was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I object to the bill now under consideration.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

SEWELL B. CORBETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3295) for the relief of Sewell B. Corbett, which was reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. THOMPSON.

Objection being made by Mr. BRAGG, the bill was passed over.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2334) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson, which was reported with amendments from the Committee on Private Land Claims by Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois.

The bill, as proposed to be amended, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to issue to Joseph F. Wilson, or his legal representatives, a number of warrants equal to two hundred acres, in tracts not less than the subdivisions provided for in the United States land laws, to be located by the said Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, on any of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States, subject to pre-emption or homestead entry, in lieu of the southwest quarter of section 29, in township 25 north, of range 4 west, situate in White County, Indiana, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 35, in township 38 north, of range 4 east, situate in Elkhart County, Indiana; which said tracts of land were entered by and patented to William Voight, Josiah Smith, and John H. Smith, under and by virtue of the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 8, 1872, and March 3, 1873, relating to additional homesteads, and by the said William Voight, Josiah Smith, and John H. Smith, after their said entry, sold and conveyed to the said Wilson, and of which the said Wilson was divested and dispossessed by the judgments and decrees of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, at the November term, A. D. 1876, thereof, by reason, as the said court held and decided, of a prior disposal of said lands by the United States to persons other than the said William Voight, Josiah Smith, and John H. Smith; and the said Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, after the location of the said warrants on such lands as he or they may select, shall be allowed patents for the lands so located.

And the lands taken, selected, and located, as authorized and provided by this act, shall be in full satisfaction of any claim, right, or benefit which the said William Voight, Josiah Smith, and John H. Smith may have, or may have had, under and by virtue of the said acts of Congress, as well as in full satisfaction of any claim which the said Wilson, as assignee, or grantee of the said William Voight, Josiah Smith, and John H. Smith, may have, or may have had, against the United States.

SEC. 2. And the patent for the southwest quarter of section 29, in township 25 north, of range 5 west, issued to James S. Chilton on his location of military bounty-land warrant No. 664, under the act of February 11, 1847, may be surrendered and duly relinquished to the United States, whereupon a patent shall be issued in the name of said James S. Chilton for the southwest quarter of section 29 in township 25 north, of range 4 west, being the tract intended to be located by him, and the entry of said tract in said range 5 by said Chilton be canceled. But nothing contained in this section shall be construed to limit or qualify the rights of said Wilson under this act, except that before the warrants herein authorized and provided for in his favor shall issue, he shall relinquish and reconvey to the United States the lands of which he was so divested and dispossessed.

There being no objection, the amendments were agreed to, and the bill, as amended, laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

BENJAMIN E. EDWARDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico, which was reported with an amendment from the Committee on Private Land Claims by Mr. STARRIN.

The bill, as proposed to be amended, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, be, and are hereby, confirmed in the title to six hundred and forty acres of land, situate in the Territory of New Mexico, being the tract of land located by virtue of a certificate numbered 444, of the second class, issued by the board of land commissioners for the county of Bexar, and State of Texas, to one Andrew Flores, and dated the 16th day of August, A. D. 1847, and the same tract of land for which a patent was authorized to be issued by the act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, entitled "An act to require the commissioner of the general land office to issue patents for lands therein named," approved December 2, 1850, and which is more particularly described in the plat and field-notes accompanying the survey thereof, executed by R. S. Howard, deputy surveyor, and approved by the district surveyor for the district of Bexar, on the 30th day of November, 1849, which said survey is numbered 39 in section numbered 15, in what was then known as the Bexar land district for the State of Texas, and which is now on record in the office of the commissioner of the general land office in the State of Texas.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the receipt of the proper plat and survey, shall cause a patent to be issued to said Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, for the lands hereby confirmed: Provided, however, That such patent shall only be construed as a relinquishment only of title on the part of the United States, and shall not affect the right of any third person.

Mr. GUNTER called for the reading of the report; and it was read, as follows:

The first section of the bill recites that a tract of land of six hundred and forty acres, situate in the Territory of New Mexico, was located by virtue of a certificate, numbered 444, issued August 16, 1847, to one Andres Flores, by the board of land commissioners for the county of Bexar, Texas, which land is more particularly described in the plat and field-notes accompanying the survey thereof, executed by R. S. Howard, deputy surveyor, and approved by the district surveyor for the district of Bexar, 30th November, 1849, said survey being numbered 38, in section 15, in what was then known as the Bexar land district for the State of Texas, and now of record in the office of the commissioner of the general land office in the State of Texas.

The second section provides for the issue of a patent by the Commissioner of the Land Office of the United States, upon the receipt of a proper plat and survey, to Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, such patent to be construed as relinquishing only the title of the United States, and not to affect the right of any third person.

The papers presented have satisfied the committee that on the 16th of August, 1847, the land commissioners for the county of Bexar, State of Texas, did issue to one Andres Flores a certificate numbered 444, for six hundred and forty acres of land as a head-right; that on the 17th day of August, 1847, said Andres Flores conveyed all his rights and title to said certificate 444 to Benjamin E. Edwards; that said Benjamin E. Edwards caused the said certificate to be located, and such location to be certified to by R. S. Howard, deputy surveyor, approved by I. S. McDonald, district surveyor of Bexar district.

The history of the Territory in which this tract of land is situate, as reported by the committee of the Senate on Private Land Claims in 1856, is as follows: "By the act of congress of the Republic of Texas, approved December 19, 1836, the western boundary of Texas was declared to extend to the Rio Grande River. By a map prepared under the direction of the War Office, from the most reliable authorities, in 1844, the Rio Grande also is laid down as the western boundary of Texas. After the annexation of Texas to the United States, this Government recognized and maintained the boundaries of Texas as defined by the said act of Congress of the Republic of Texas, of December 19, 1836. Under and by virtue of the act of Congress approved September 9, 1850, the district of country in which this land is situate was acquired by the General Government from the State of Texas." The conclusion of said committee, which this committee adopt, was that the action of this Government subsequent to the annexation of Texas has conceded that the jurisdiction of Texas included the territory in question prior to the relinquishment of the same to the United States; so that, from the date of the certificate from the board of commissioners to a period beyond the location and survey of this tract of land, this part of the territory of the State of Texas was subject to location and settlement under authority from said State. Therefore, the committee find that the State of Texas having jurisdiction did, by its proper officers, issue a certificate of location to Andres Flores; that the same having been located and surveyed prior to the relinquishment of title by the State of Texas to the General Government, said Flores or his assignee only required a patent from the State of Texas to form a complete and perfect title to said tract of land.

It satisfactorily appears to the committee that the land embraced within the plat and survey of the claimant now lies within the Territory of New Mexico; also that at the time of the relinquishment of said Territory by Texas to the United States the claimant had an equitable title to the same under the United States, which under the well-settled principles of international law the General Government was bound to recognize and respect.

The provisions of the second section of the bill are proper and right. The tract of land referred to in the bill is described with reference to the public surveys of the State of Texas. The Commissioner of the Land Office states that no portion of the records of said State relating to titles or surveys of land embraced within the original Texas annexation have ever been transferred to this Government, and that office without a proper plat and survey would be unable to identify the particular tract referred to.

The committee are further of the opinion that while the United States Government is bound to recognize and respect the equitable title of the claimant to the land covered by the certificate, it is not bound to guarantee the title thereto, it can only be expected to relinquish its title thereto; and that fact should be expressed in the bill and in the patent to be issued.

The committee therefore report back the bill without amendment, other than a slight change of phraseology as noted on the bill, and respectfully recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES M'GREGOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 888) for the relief of James McGregor; which was reported with an amendment from the Committee on Indian Affairs by Mr. GUNTER.

The bill, as proposed to be amended, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to James McGregor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $693.11, in full for services rendered by him at the Malheur Indian agency, in the State of Oregon, during the fiscal year 1874.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

HENRY WARREN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 689) for the relief of Henry Warren, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs by Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. EDEN. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. EDEN. The gentleman refers to another report made in a former Congress. I would like to hear that other report read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not here.

Mr. LATHROP. I object to the bill.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

F. B. CULVER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1476) for the relief of F. B. Culver, which was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs by Mr. BOONE.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, called for the reading of the report; and it was read:

Objection being made, (by Mr. KEIGHTLEY,) the bill was passed over.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to; there being, upon a division—ayes 57, noes 35.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker resuming the chair, Mr. THOMPSON reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House, some with and some without amendments.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1551) for the relief of Mrs. Emma A. Porch, of Centretown, Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 1855) for the relief of John C. Ray;

A bill (H. R. No. 1371) for the relief of John W. Skiles;

A bill (H. R. No. 3289) for the relief of William J. Alexander, of Bloomington, Monroe County, Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 330) for the benefit of Alderson T. Keene, late first lieutenant of Company E, First Kentucky Cavalry; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, were then taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bills, as amended, ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2334) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson; and

A bill (H. R. No. 888) for the relief of James McGregor.

Mr. LUTTRELL moved to reconsider the various votes by which the above bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the order of the House for a session to-morrow for debate only may be rescinded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would entertain a motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 102, noes not counted.

Mr. LUTTRELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

Mr. BLACKBURN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4243) relative to the Washington Market Company; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee for the District of Columbia, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

VIRGINIA MILITARY DISTRICT, OHIO.

Mr. DICKEY. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there are doubts and differences as to the true intent and meaning of an act to cede to the State of Ohio the unsold lands in the Virginia military district in said State, approved February 18, 1871; and

Whereas these doubts create an unsettled and disturbed condition of the titles to many farms which have been appropriated many years since by survey or entry founded upon military warrants and warrants upon continental establishment: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the accompanying bill, to wit, a bill to construe and define the act to cede to the State of Ohio the unsold lands in the Virginia military district in said State, approved February 18, 1871, and to further extend the time for selecting surveys on entries in said district, be and the same is hereby referred to a select committee of five to be composed of those members of Congress whose congressional districts, or parts thereof, lie within the said Virginia military district in said State, with leave to report at any time, not to interfere with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. Has this been before a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is proposed to create a special committee composed of those Ohio members representing the section of the State directly interested in the lands specified in the resolution.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. It should go to a standing committee.

Mr. DICKEY. If the resolution is properly understood, I think there will be no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. If any other State than Ohio were interested, I have no doubt that I ought to object. But I object anyhow.

Mr. DICKEY. This resolution is simply to refer the bill to a select committee of members whose districts lie within the Virginia military district, and who understand the condition of titles to those lands and the difficulty between the agricultural college and the citizens. The bill is to construe an act passed by the Congress of the United States ceding to the State of Ohio those lands.

Mr. CONGER. As I understand it is to construe a law of the United States in regard to rights granted by law.

Mr. DICKEY. This committee is to report a bill on the subject.
The SPEAKER. And the bill when reported will be entirely within the control of the House.

Mr. CONGER. The object seems to be to give to the Representatives of those districts where the land lies the power to frame a bill to get the lands from the United States to the State. But I will not object.

Mr. DICKEY. The object is not to get the land from the United States; it is already ceded to the States.

Mr. CONGER. I am willing to give those Representatives a fair chance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Mr. FINLEY. I move that the House now adjourn.

ELIZA K. ASHLEY.

Mr. MCKENZIE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the relief of Eliza K. Ashley, widow of John P. Ashley, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. CLAFIN, for one week, on account of important business;

To Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, for two weeks, on account of important business;

To Mr. GARDNER, for one week, on account of important business;

To Mr. AIKEN, for fourteen days from Monday next;

To Mr. MAYHAM, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family;

To Mr. HENRY, for three days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. BURDICK, for two weeks, on account of important business.

SCHOONER FLIGHT.

On motion of Mr. KIMMEL, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 814) to refer the record of the proceedings of the naval court of inquiry as evidence in the case of the collision of the schooner Flight with the United States steamer Tallapoosa before the Court of Claims was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

BOUNTY, ETC., OF COLORED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Paymaster-General, forwarding an estimate for the collection and payment of bounty, prize-money, and other claims of colored soldiers and sailors for the period from January 1, 1879, to June 30, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WILLIAM S. HANSELL & SONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting information in regard to the claim of William S. Hansell & Sons, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication of the Quartermaster-General relative to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

POWELL'S REPORT ON ARID REGION OF UNITED STATES.

Mr. HENDERSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein.) That there be printed 5,000 copies of the report on the lands of the arid region of the United States by G. W. Powell; 1,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I call for the regular order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. FINLEY that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CHALMERS: Memorial of the Cotton Exchange of Vicksburg, Mississippi, as to the improvement of the Mississippi River—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. DENISON: Memorial of the Vermont Copper-Mining Company, of Vershire, Vermont, opposing any reduction of the duty on copper ore—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. FELTON: The petition of Daniel Dietz, for compensation for stores and supplies taken by the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HARTZELL: The petition of Colonel R. R. Townes and 38 other citizens of Union County, Illinois, for the passage of the bill recently introduced by Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND, restraining the removal of causes from the State to the Federal courts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUNTON: Papers relating to the pension claim of Mary W. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: The petition of H. Meigs and others, for the refunding of certain taxes, as provided in House bill 3406—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JANDERS: The petition of the publishers of the Hartford (Connecticut) Times, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of John P. Haines and others, relative to the rights of settlers on the public lands on the Klamath River, California—to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petitions of Elizabeth T. Schenck, Sarah J. Wallis, and Clarinda J. Howard Nichols, of California, for the removal of their political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petitions of Silas Tate, Sallie Tate, and other citizens of Princeton, California, and of Philip Cowen, Mrs. R. M. Works, and other citizens of Petaluma, California, for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the several States from disfranchising United States citizens on account of sex—to the same committee.

By Mr. MANNING: The petitions of Asa R. Chilton, William A. French, and 27 other citizens of Mississippi, and of John Robertson, of De Soto County, Mississippi, for the reference of their claims for stores, &c., taken by the United States Army to the southern claims commission—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MULBROW: The petitions of A. A. Garner and James W. Mitchell, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army—to the same committee.

By Mr. QUINN: The petition of citizens of Albany, New York, against the reduction of the tariff and the imposition of a tax on tea and coffee—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEVENS, of Arizona: Two petitions of citizens of Arizona, for the improvement of the Colorado River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama: The petition of citizens of Dale County, Alabama, for the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands among the States for educational purposes—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Also, a paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Elba, Alabama, to Uchee Anna, Florida—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware: The petition of citizens of Smyrna, Delaware, for a survey of Duck Creek, Delaware, with a view to the improvement of the same—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WILLIS, of New York: The petition of merchants and business men of New York, against the passage of the tariff bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILLITS: The petition of Catharine A. F. Stebbins, of Detroit, Michigan, for the removal of her political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, April 8, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.
The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3824) to authorize the survey of the Cattaraugus Indian reservation, in the State of New York, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of George H. Pendleton, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Ohio a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1879; which were read and ordered to be filed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation of $20,000 for the purpose of purchasing records of the late so-called Confederate States of America; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KERNAN presented the memorial of W. J. Mooney and others, business men of the city of New York, remonstrating against the passage of any act imposing a tax on incomes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the common council of the city of Brooklyn, New York, in favor of the passage of a law authorizing the erection in that city of a building for the use of the post-office and other Government purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KERNAN. I present the preamble and resolutions of the Board of Trade of Oswego, New York, remonstrating against the imposition of duties on raw material and letting the product in free. They refer to the proposed tariff law as imposing a tax on wheat and letting flour in free, a tax on malt much less than on barley, and they remonstrate against such legislation. I move the reference of these resolutions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MATTHEWS presented the memorial of R. C. Clark and others, citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of any act imposing a tax on incomes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McPHERSON presented the memorial of W. H. Curtis and others, citizens of New Jersey, remonstrating against the passage of any act imposing a tax on incomes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of Maria Hart, widow of James Hart, late of Company I, One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John Folkmann, praying Congress to legislate for the benefit of the working classes of the United States, and suggesting certain ways in which the large cities may be freed from "trampers;" which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of John T. Caine, of Salt Lake City, Utah, praying for the establishment of a mint, assay, and refining office in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of General W. W. Loring, of Florida, praying for the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Ethan A. Sawyer, of Jefferson County, East Tennessee, praying compensation for services as scout, guide, and recruiting officer, and for property taken by the United States forces and appropriated to their use during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. I present a memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, in reference to the improvement of the Mississippi River, in which they express their opinion that it is of the utmost importance to the whole country that the Mississippi River from its sources at the north to its mouth, at the earliest possible day, be so improved by the General Government as to insure the utilization of its navigation to its utmost capacity, thereby giving to all citizens in perpetuity an open highway to the ocean unfettered by tolls, and freed from railway combinations. They heartily indorse the plans of the Government engineers for providing reservoirs at the headwaters of the river, and also respectfully and earnestly urge their delegation in Congress to use all proper efforts to secure the passage of a bill making an appropriation necessary for those purposes. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOOTH presented the petition of E. M. Ross and others, citizens of Los Angeles, California, praying the passage of a law authorizing the holding of at least one term a year of the United States courts for the district of California at that place; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of James Rose, late private in the Ninth Light Battery Wisconsin Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of John T. Tucker, of Virginia, praying for the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, remonstrating against a change of the life-saving service from the Treasury to the Navy Department; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also the petition of citizens of New York, representing the business interests, praying for the passage of a law promoting American steamship lines to foreign countries. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented the memorial of James T. Allen & Co., and others, furniture dealers of New York City, remonstrating against the repeal of the bankrupt law and in favor of its amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 532) to incorporate the Suburban Railway Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 933) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund a certain tax erroneously collected, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a paper indorsed by the Secretary of the Senate "Petition of Guerry & Sons, praying for the repeal of joint resolution of March 2, 1867, requiring oath of loyalty before receiving bounty land," have directed me to report it back. On examining it we find that it is nothing but a private letter from Guerry & Sons to a Senator and not a petition in any sense of the term and does not come even within the most liberal rule that the Senate has ever adopted in receiving papers as petitions. The Committee on the Judiciary therefore instruct me to report the paper back and suggest that it be taken from the files and referred to the Senator to whom the letter was addressed. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be entered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1050) to amend sections 177 and 178 of the Revised Statutes relating to the temporary filling of vacancies in the offices of the several Executive Departments; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying letter from the Postmaster-General, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1051) for the relief of Hardie Hogan Helper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1052) to remove the political disabilities of William W. Loring; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1053) providing for a survey of the mouth of the Columbia River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHAFFEE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1054) to authorize the United States to secure a title to certain military and timber reservations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1055) for the relief of the sureties of J. W. Smith, late additional paymaster in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1056) relating to the rank of certain retired Army officers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1057) in relation to the promotion of officers in the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RELATIONS WITH COREA.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 24) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commissioner to the King of Corea to arrange a treaty of amity and commerce between the United States and the King of Corea, and to appropriate the necessary expenses in making such treaty; which was read the first time at length, as follows:

Whereas the Kingdom of Corea is recognized as completely independent by the treaty of 1856, between Japan and Corea; and

Whereas the King of Corea has shown a disposition to enroll his great country among the family of nations, and to allow it to enjoy the reciprocal advantages of peace and commerce with other nations; and

Whereas the United States desires to remain in relations of peace with all peoples: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized to appoint a commissioner to represent this country in an effort to arrange by peaceful means, and with the aid of the friendly offices of Japan, a treaty of peace and commerce between the United States and the Kingdom of Corea, and the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to defray the expenses of said commission.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table, subject to the call of the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir. I wish merely to remark that the population of that country is variously estimated at from twelve million to twenty million, and that, as this is a very important question, I want to present some considerations to the Senate before the joint resolution is referred.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3740) to provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 802) establishing post-roads in the several States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I desire to give notice of my intention to offer an amendment, by way of substitute, to the bill (S. No. 35) to repeal the bankrupt law, introduced by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY.] I ask that the amendment be now received and laid upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT TOPEKA.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 180) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office, the United States circuit and district courts, and other Government offices at Topeka, Kansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 7 of section 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

At a cost not exceeding $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12 of section 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Beyond the said sum of $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section 1 the words:

And until the State of Kansas shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil processes therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENLISTMENTS OF COLORED CITIZENS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 178) to remove all restrictions now existing in regard to enlistments of the colored citizen in any arm of the United States Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was to strike out the first section of the bill in the following words:

That hereafter the word color shall not be used to designate any soldier of the United States Army; that the colored citizen shall be entitled to all privileges and rights of any citizen to enlist in any arm of the United States Army, and no distinction shall hereafter be made in the assignment of the soldier on account of color or previous descent; that all arms of the service, engineers, artillery, cavalry, infantry, signal corps, irrespective of color, shall be open to him.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That sections 1104 and 1108 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out lines 1 to 7, inclusive, of section 2, in the following words:

That the President is authorized to fill the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry, with enlisted men without reference or distinction of color; that he shall use his discretion in keeping these regiments above the minimum strength required by law, assigning men from the general recruiting and general mounted service as they are required by the regiments, without regard to color.

The next amendment was in line 8, of section 2, to strike out the first word "and" and insert "that," and to add at the end the words "and hereafter colored men shall have full right to enlist in all the arms of the service;" so as to read:

That nothing in the above act shall be so construed that the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry, are not part of the United States Army. And hereafter colored men shall have full right to enlist in all the arms of the service.

Mr. INGALLS. What became of the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] to this bill when it was up on a previous day?

Mr. BURNSIDE. That is the last amendment reported from the committee, the amendment to the last clause of the second section.

Mr. INGALLS. Was that amendment accepted by the committee?

Mr. BURNSIDE. It was accepted by the committee and embraced in the bill as re-reported.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether this bill makes it compulsory upon the part of any recruiting-officer or person in charge of a recruiting station to accept and dispose of a recruit in any branch of the military service that the recruit may indicate; in other words, whether when recruits offer themselves the officers in charge of the stations or the officers in charge of the department where the soldier is to be employed are deprived of control over the branch of the service in which the recruits are to be employed. I should like to know whether the bill takes from the officers in charge of the Army the discretion as to the branch in which the recruit shall be employed.

Mr. BURNSIDE. No more than the law takes the discretion away from the officers now. The bill leaves the recruiting officer just as he is at this time. A recruiting officer can reject a man if he feels disposed and there is no reviewing or revising authority that I know of. A man can go before a court and claim his right as a citizen to enlist in the Army of the United States the same as a man can claim his right to enter into any voluntary public employment, or just as he could claim his right to vote.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask whether this proposed amendment of existing law has been recommended by the General of the Army or by the War Office?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir; it has been recommended by the General of the Army. The General of the Army is in perfect accord with this bill. I have his indorsement of the measure not only in black and white, but I have had his approval verbally half a dozen times. He is in perfect accord with the bill; and although I do not have it directly from the officers in command of the departments where these regiments serve, I am satisfied from what the General of the Army has told me that they are in accord with the bill also. I can see no reason why this bill should prove embarrassing to anybody. It simply removes from the statute-books sections which create four regiments entirely of colored people, and assures them the right to enlist in all corps of the United States Army.

They have that right now under the law. They can offer to enlist in the artillery regiments to-day, and they will have the right to do so if the bill becomes a law. This measure will in no sense change the law in that respect. There is nothing in the statutes that prevents a colored man from going to a recruiting station and demanding to be enlisted as an engineer soldier, or as an artillery soldier, or as an infantry soldier.

Mr. BAYARD. Is there anything in the existing law now that prevents that?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Not a thing. There is nothing in the law now that prevents that. Any colored man can go this day and enlist in any of these corps if the recruiting officer will let him.

Mr. BAYARD. That is precisely the question. I have no doubt at all that every government has a right to utilize every means in its power for self-defense and aggression, and I have no question that every element of power in a country should be utilized wisely for the purpose of defense. If, therefore, the military arm or the naval arm shall be strengthened by the infusion of negroes, or men of negro descent, in it, by all means let it be done; but I think there is nothing in the existing law that makes this proposed amendment of it necessary. I know nothing under our law or nothing under the Constitution as it is amended that prevents the freest entry of service to a colored man as much as to a white man. I know of no disability, I know of no discrimination, I know of no right to discriminate. Therefore I ask why is it that this present amendment of the law is proposed to be put into the statutes giving to colored men a full right to enlist in all arms of the service? Why, have they it not now? Have they it not now quite as much as the white men of the country?

Mr. President, I say respectfully to my friend from Rhode Island that I think these things had better run as they are. All that you can hope to make justly under the laws is an equal opportunity of enlistment. You cannot by further discrimination aid deficiencies that may exist, and you have no right to give advantages which are not open to all. If the present laws of this country do not make a discrimination against one class of citizens over another, then I submit the amendment now proposed is not necessary; and I think that the Senator has gone rather further in this proposition than any previous law of the United States has done by insisting that one description of citizens shall have a fuller right to enlist in all arms of the service. I am under the impression that there is no law on the statute-book to-day, and that no just construction can be given to any law upon the statute-book to-day, that discriminates against any citizen by reason of race, color, or previous condition; so that I think this measure is really unnecessary.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Delaware that the bill before the amendment was attached to it by the Senator from Maine simply did away with the two sections which require that two regiments of infantry and two regiments of cavalry shall be composed of colored men. Now, in order to be perfectly consistent, the Senator from Delaware should say that he desires to give white men all their rights, and that there shall be no section of the statutes depriving white men of their rights. Now, the sections which I propose to repeal by this bill deprive white men of the right to enter the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry and the Twenty-Fourth and Twenty-Fifth Regiments of Infantry. No white man in the United States can enter those regiments as a private soldier. The law deprives him of that privilege. If the Senator from Delaware desires to be consistent, let him vote for the repeal of those two sections and then every white man who desires to enlist can go to the recruiting officer and make known his wishes, and every colored man can do the same thing, and the statutes will be homogeneous in that respect. As it is now, they are not.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the honorable Senator whether any white men have made complaint that they were not allowed to enlist in the colored regiments?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do complain myself.

Mr. BAYARD. Have they complained?

Mr. BURNSIDE. The law is distinct that these regiments shall be composed of colored men.

Mr. BAYARD. Has there been any complaint that that privilege has not been allowed to white men?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I complain myself that they are not allowed to enlist in these regiments, and my complaint is that the regiments are less efficient for the reason that white men are not allowed to enlist in them. The General of the Army complains of it; the generals in command of departments complain of it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Rhode Island said a moment ago that the General of the Army was in complete accord with the purposes of this bill.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. From which I judge that he is acquainted with his sentiments upon the question of the enlistment of Africans in the Army. Will the Senator inform the Senate whether the General of the Army favors the enlistment or the exclusion of persons of African descent from the regular Army?

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Yes, sir; I will with great pleasure.

Mr. INGALLS. The reason why I ask that question is this: whatever may be the objects of this bill, I have no doubt that the results of it will be, if it is passed into a law, that within five years there will not be a colored man in the United States Army.

Mr. BLAINE. Within two years.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Maine says "two years." I accept the amendment. As the law and Constitution now stand, there is an absolute right on the part of colored as well as white men to enlist in the Army; but, as was developed in the debate the other day, there is, from some cause or other, a prejudice on the part of the officers of the Army, those who have charge of the recruiting service, so that colored men are excluded when they offer themselves; and now, if you abolish and abrogate this portion of the law that sets apart four regiments where they can be received, the result will be that this prejudice, this hostility to the enlistment of colored men, will be so great that they will have no place whatever in this branch of the public service. That, I believe, will be the actual result of this bill, whatever may be its purposes and its objects.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Well—

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Rhode Island will pardon me now—

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to know whether the General of the Army favors the enlistment of colored men or is opposed to it.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. I will yield to the Senator from Maine. If he desires to speak, I will not interpose.

Mr. BLAINE. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. I am in no hurry.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Delaware certainly is one of the Senators who object to any possible admixture under the civil-rights bill of white and colored children in the schools in the South. That sentiment is very general throughout the South, that there cannot be and shall not be an admixture. There has been before Congress for the last ten years a petition, with which I have had some sympathy, for the up-building by appropriations from Congress of the old College of William and Mary which was destroyed as one of the results of the peninsular campaign. There has never been a time when the friends of that institution would take the aid from Congress, no matter how munificent, upon the simple condition that colored citizens should be admitted; never. Now, we are bound to look, not at what may be the mere abstract reading of the law, but the positive and palpable effect of repealing these sections will be that thenceforward the colored man is just as much excluded from service in the Army as he is from the halls of William and Mary College. The prejudice in the Army is strong against him. There is not a recruiting officer that would be sent out, unless he should be picked exactly for the purpose, who would enlist one. Possibly the admixture in the regiment would not conduce to their efficiency. I do not believe that a regiment made up of half white and half black would be half as efficient as a wholly colored regiment. It is better for the interest and efficiency of the service that the law be left as it now is, in my judgment, and in so far as the colored man has any right to enter the service of the military arm of the nation, it is secured to him alone in these sections, and if you repeal them and leave it to this grand right that he is an American citizen and everybody has got the same right under a general gush, he will be absolutely left out, just as much as if he was on the extreme end of the north pole; you will never hear of one in the service again. The question then is, shall it be considered a fair policy at this day to exclude him from the military service of the country? That is the whole of it.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. The Senator from Maine is entitled to his views on this subject. I differ with him very much. I am not so reliant, though, upon my own wisdom in making predictions as the Senator from Maine, and therefore I shall not make any such positive prediction as he has made. I believe in the principle of doing right and letting results follow.

Now this bill is in the right direction, and the sections as they stand on the statute-book are wrong. I beg to predict that there will be within a very short time a strong sprinkling of colored troops in the United States Army, a full representation I may say per capita; certainly within ten years; and I think within four or five years there will be a great many. The General of the Army I believe agrees with me. At any rate he says "let colored troops come along; let them be enlisted; we will take care of them; they are good for the service and will be well taken care of, and we shall be glad to receive them." That is what the General of the Army says.

As these four regiments stand now they are inefficient, and I say it is our duty to repeal those sections and make four efficient regiments of those colored regiments. As they are now they are inefficient. I believe in being consistent. Let us do right though the heavens fall. To say that two regiments of infantry and two regiments of cavalry shall be made up of colored men is not right; you might as well say they shall be made up of Germans, or of Chinese, or of Spaniards.

Mr. BLAINE. When the Senator from Rhode Island was himself at the head of the United States Army, it was not very inconsistent to have one hundred thousand colored troops made up in their own regiments.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. It was not.

Mr. BLAINE. We did not a bit see the inconsistency of it when two hundred thousand of them came to the relief of the Union Army in regiments of their own color solely.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. We were very glad to have them; but the necessity for a thing of that kind has passed. It was not inconsistent to have German regiments, it was not inconsistent to have the Irish brigade; but how inconsistent to-day would it be to have a regiment in the United States service made up of Irishmen altogether. We had German brigades and divisions, and Irish brigades and divisions, and we resorted to everything then to get troops in the field, and a great many means were resorted to then that would not be fair means now. We are now on a peace footing; we should try to get our country into a condition that prejudices will be allayed, that people will cease to think of the war more than is necessary to do justice to those who fought gallantly in it. There is no occasion for bringing these things up constantly. My object is to make the statutes on the subject homogeneous and right.

Mr. BAYARD. I am heartily in favor of the destruction of prejudice of every sort, especially when we come to deliberate upon public interest; but I cannot understand how the best way to allay a prejudice is to legislate violently for its suppression. Now, it is plain, as the honorable Senator from Rhode Island says, that there are several regiments already known as colored regiments, the rank and file of which are composed solely of men of that race, and yet their ranks cannot be kept full. By what species of reasoning is it that if a few regiments cannot be maintained to their proper numerical standard, you are to presume that by opening still other regiments for the admission of the same class of persons, and doing that by compulsory legislation that does not apply to the Army at large, you are to have them full. Now, as I say, taking the very theme of the Senator from Rhode Island, I desire to see the Army of the United States, the Navy of the United States, and any other branch of service of the United States filled with those men who are most competent for the duties in question. If any class of men shall prove themselves fitter for a place than others, I wish to see them have the advantage which their powers, natural or educated, shall permit them to take. It would be the blindest and most short-sighted policy for us to deny the merits or capacities of a man who seeks to exert both in the defense and in the service of the country. I should be ashamed to subscribe to a doctrine of that sort; but it is plain to me that the anxiety of the honorable Senator to do away with what he calls prejudice is really doing something to create it and he is stepping beyond the fair measure of right as laid down by law and is discriminating in favor of one class and against others.

The Army as it now stands is open for enlistment to any one, as I understand, not simply to American citizens, but others may enlist who can pass the standard morally, physically, and intellectually that may be set up for them. That I wish to see continued, and I wish to see no rigidity of legislation interposed to control the high and wise discretion of the officers in charge of the American Army over the selection of recruits for various service. I think if we undertake to interpose our discretion instead of theirs, we shall do what will be detrimental rather than serviceable, and there will be nothing gained by simply producing this attrition which the Senator seems to fear of prejudice in the various branches of the public service. I do believe the law as it stands gives equal opportunity, and I do not think that any laws in a nation professing to be governed by equal laws should do more.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Will the Senator from Delaware tell me how the law regulating the enlistment of private soldiers will be changed in the least degree by the repeal of these two sections; how the right of enlistment, in other words, will be changed in the least or affected in any way whatever by the passage of this bill?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think especially it would be, and therefore I think these amendments are unnecessary.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. The bill as originally presented does not refer to that.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask, if the bill does not change the law, what is the use of this legislation?

Mr. BURNSTIDE. The use of this legislation is to do away with the four colored regiments as colored regiments, and give white men the right to enlist in them. I am for the rights of the white men, if the Senator will allow me to say so, as well as for the rights of the colored men.

Mr. BLAINE. How many regiments of white men exclusively have we now?

Mr. BURNSTIDE. All the regiments are composed of white men except these four.

Mr. BLAINE. And yet the Senator thinks it is necessary for the rights of white men that they should have a right to enlist in the others?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir. I think if a white man wants to enlist in the Ninth Cavalry he should have the right to do it, and I am willing to stand on that ground. I can say to the Senator from Maine that that is very substantial ground to stand upon.

This bill, it seems to me, occupies a very unfortunate position, and I suppose it will be defeated because some of our friends here are very much afraid it will let colored troops into the white regiments, and others are afraid it will do away with the right of the colored men to enlist. I am not frightened about anything of that kind. Colored sailors enlist constantly, are shipped constantly, and have been for years, and hardly a ship goes out of port that has not colored sailors on board, some of them a great many. That right has existed for a long time. Now, I wish to put the Army on the same footing that the Navy is upon, and has been for years, and I see no reason why it should not be so.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not rise to make a speech for or against this bill, but to try to get some information that will enable me to vote understandingly and I shall endeavor to be as brief as I can.

As I understand the law as it now exists, there is no distinction whatever made on account of color in regard to enlistments in the Army of the United States. The Army is just as open to colored men as to white men; and if it should so happen, if such a thing were possible, that all the enlistments were of colored men, that no white men would enlist, the consequence would be that the whole Army would in time become an Army of colored men under the law as it now stands.

The sections of the statute in regard to enlistments are very brief, and I will read them:

SEC. 1115. There shall not be in the Army at one time more than thirty thousand enlisted men.

That has been reduced since.

SEC. 1116. Recruits enlisting in the Army must be effective and able-bodied men, and between the ages of sixteen and thirty-five years at the time of their enlistment. This limitation as to age shall not apply to soldiers re-enlisting.

SEC. 1117. No person under the age of twenty-one years shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of his parents or guardians: Provided, That such minor has such parents or guardians entitled to his custody and control.

SEC. 1118. No minor under the age of sixteen years, no insane or intoxicated person, no deserter from the military service of the United States, and no person who has been convicted of any criminal offense shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service.

SEC. 1119. All enlistments in the Army shall be for the term of five years.

These are the sections, and I believe all of them, that relate to enlistments. They make no distinction on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, so that enlistments in the Army now are as free to the colored citizen as to anybody else, and nobody doubts that the colored citizen ought to be allowed to enlist. The Government owes protection to all its citizens, and they owe the correlative duty of military service if they are of suitable age and possess the necessary physical and mental qualifications. No one, therefore, could be opposed to the military service of any class of our citizens. In old Rome nobody, in the best days of the republic, was allowed to serve in the army unless he was a citizen; aliens and slaves were not allowed to enter the army at all; but in this country the colored men are citizens, and even according to the system introduced in the old Roman republic they would be entitled to enlist in the Army of the United States. Nobody disputes the legality of that or its propriety.

That being the case, let us see what is this bill. In the first place I want to call the attention of my friend from Rhode Island to a part of this bill where it seems to me there must be a misprint. The first amendment is, after striking out nearly all of the original bill:

That sections 1104 and 1108 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Section 1104 is:

The enlisted men of two regiments of cavalry shall be colored men.

Section 1108 is:

The enlisted men of two regiments of infantry shall be colored men.

The object of the repeal of those sections is perfectly plain; for, as the law now stands, it is mandatory that four regiments, two of them of cavalry and two of them of infantry, shall be composed exclusively of colored men. The object of this bill is to repeal that mandatory provision of the law. And suppose it were repealed, Mr. President, what then would be the case? I suppose the Senator from Rhode Island knows far better than I do that the brigading and regimenting, to use such a word, and assigning to companies and so on of the recruits is within the control of the President of the United States under such rules and regulations as he may see fit to prescribe where there is no positive provision of law on the subject. If I am right in this, you might repeal those two sections and then it would be a question within the discretion of the President of the United States whether the colored recruits should be put by themselves in companies or regiments or brigades by themselves, or whether they should be mixed up with white troops. I suppose that would be a matter for executive regulation if those two sections were repealed. The objection of the Senator from Rhode Island to those two sections, as I understand it, is that they make it obligatory upon the President to do that which the President in his discretion might think it was unwise to do. They take away his discretion, and therefore he proposes that those two sections shall be repealed, and then, if I am right in saying that the President may by rules and regulations prescribe the assignment of recruits, that would leave it to the President to assign them according to his own best judgment, according to the peculiar circumstances of the case. Whether that be wise or not, I do not know. I am strongly inclined myself, however, to believe that it is not a wise provision to keep up these distinct negro or colored regiments. I am rather inclined to think it is not. At the same time it might well be that the President in his discretion would see fit to assign colored recruits to particular companies or regiments or brigades of the Army. I do not know how that might be.

But now I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to what follows in his bill. The provision I have read, "that sections 1104 and 1108 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, repealed," is perfectly plain. Then comes:

That nothing in the above act shall be so construed that the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry, are not part of the United States Army.

These are the colored regiments.

"Nothing in the above act." What is meant by the "above act?" I do not know. The only words to which that could apply would be "the Revised Statutes," and I do not see that anything in those statutes could be so construed that the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry and the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry "are not part of the United States Army," for those statutes expressly make them part of the United States Army. I do not therefore see what the meaning of this is. I think it is a mistake. It must have been intended to read, "nothing in this act."

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that that is the fact. It should be "nothing in this act." This must be a misprint.

Mr. THURMAN. Then comes the last clause, to which, I think, some exception may well be taken:

And hereafter colored men shall have full right to enlist in all the arms of the service.

They have that right now generally. That is to say a man may enlist in the artillery, or the infantry, or the cavalry, as the law now stands. But—and when you amend a law you are presumed to mean something different from the existing law—if it is meant that a colored man enlisting can choose the company in which he is to serve, or the regiment in which he is to serve, and can thus of his own volition, and without regard to the will of the President of the United States in assigning recruits, force himself in a white company of infantry, or of cavalry, or the like, then it is worthy of consideration whether you are not taking a step that may be very troublesome in the future.

I mention these considerations only as showing my own ignorance of the subject and my doubts upon it, and I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will allow this bill to go over until to-morrow that it may be further reflected upon.

Mr. BURNSIDE. This bill has been lying on the table for some time. I do not choose to press it or anything else on the Senate. I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio that the amendment on which he has commented here was not in the original bill and was not originated by me. It was originated by the honorable Senator from Maine. I have no objection to voting for this amendment. I think it is simply declaratory; it amounts to nothing more than a declaration. That is my opinion; but still it ought not to affect the original bill. If we as Senators feel that those sections of the Revised Statutes should be repealed, that the efficiency of the service and justice both require that they should be repealed, then we should act upon them. If the Senate choose to vote down the amendment, I think no harm will be done, but I can vote for it; I am free to say that; but the Senator from Maine is big enough to take care of himself and he can defend the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope the Senator from Ohio will be good enough to give me his attention, as I am always glad to catch him on a point of law. I wrote the amendment. It reads:

And hereafter colored men shall have full right to enlist in all arms of the service.

The Senator asks does that mean that a man shall choose his regiment or company. By no means. It means, however, that a man has the right, when he enlists, to say whether he enlists for the cavalry service, or the infantry service, or the artillery service.

Mr. THURMAN. He has that now.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator was criticising that language as meaning that the man who was enlisting might have the right to say "I am going to enlist for such a regiment and such a company." It does not mean so. It means simply what it says, that the right to enlist in "all the arms of the service" shall be open to the colored citizen. It does not mean that the colored citizen shall have the right to choose the regiment and company he will serve in, but it means to say that if there were recruits being received for the engineer service he should have the right to enlist in that service; if there were recruits being received for the artillery, he should have the right to enlist in the artillery; if for cavalry, the right to enlist in the cavalry; if for the infantry, in the infantry. It applies to all arms of the service.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there? He certainly did not think carefully on what I was saying.

Mr. BLAINE. I tried to.

Mr. THURMAN. There is no conflict now between what he is saying and what I said. I said that, if this meant simply that a colored man had a right to enlist in the cavalry, or the infantry, or the artillery, at his own volition, that was nothing more than the existing law, and that when you propose to amend or change a law you are presumed to have made some change in it, and it would then be a question whether this did not mean something more than the existing law, whether it did not mean that he might choose the company in which he might enlist.

Mr. BLAINE. It is quite interesting to watch the gradations of this bill. My excellent friend from Rhode Island, whose kind-heartedness we all know, and who, I am sure, meant no injustice to any colored or white citizen, wrote it thus:

That hereafter the word "color" shall not be used to designate any soldier of the United States Army; that the colored citizen shall be entitled to all privileges and rights of any citizen to enlist in any arm of the United States Army, and no distinction shall hereafter be made in the assignment of the soldier on account of color or previous descent; that all arms of the service, engineers, artillery, cavalry, infantry, signal corps, irrespective of color, shall be open to him.

He meant evidently to widen the sphere in which the colored man should have the right, by affirmative declaration of Congress, and that posted up in the recruiting rooms of all the men who were sent out to recruit would have been a specific direction that they were not at liberty to refuse a colored man when he offered. That bill went to the Committee on Military Affairs; I do not know what took place in that committee, but—

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to say one word? This bill just as it stands now, without his amendment, was what I reported to the Committee on Military Affairs and not one word was spoken to any member of the committee on the subject. The bill was referred to me and I made the amendment myself without consultation with a single member of the committee, and it was not whittled down in any way in the world. I just saw by an examination of the statutes that the whole thing could be accomplished by repealing those two sections, and I thought that was the sensible way to do it, and therefore took it.

Mr. BLAINE. I said that I knew nothing of what took place in committee; I only knew that those broad, generous, extensive words to enfranchise and extend the rights of the colored and proscribed class came out of the committee in these words:

That sections 1104 and 1108 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

It did not leave a recognition anywhere in the laws of the United States that the colored man could enlist anywhere. Now the constitution of the two cavalry regiments and the two infantry regiments mentioned in those sections was a concession to the prejudice of color in the Army. I know very well that I was a member of the committee that reported the bill to put it in. I happened to be a member of the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, and with the chairman, General Schenck, I had something to do with framing the bill. We heard a vast amount of testimony on that question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. BLAINE. One minute longer, and I shall be through. We had a very great amount of testimony on that question, and the testimony of the leading officers of the Army uniformly was to the good conduct of the colored troops in their own regiments; and they suggested that it might not be so well for the efficiency of the Army to have them mixed up. That provision of law was the result of a compromise, to give the colored man the right to enlist in the Army of the United States, and not to raise unnecessarily the question of caste, and color, and prejudice in the Army. A great number of creditable and honorable colored soldiers came before the committee and testified to the same thing. They wanted it, and the white soldiers wanted it; and it has stood for the last twelve years. The act was passed on the 28th of July, 1866.

If it were still within the hour I should like to have a test of the Senate by moving that the bill be indefinitely postponed, although I will withdraw the motion in deference to the Senator from Rhode Island, if he desires to speak.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have no objection to the question being put in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, on which the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senator from California will allow the vote to be taken on this bill. I am willing to allow a vote on the motion to postpone indefinitely.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no idea that it can be taken within an hour.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1551) for the relief of Mrs. Emma A. Porch, of Centretown, Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 1855) for the relief of John C. Ray;

A bill (H. R. No. 1371) for the relief of John W. Skiles;

A bill (H. R. No. 3289) for the relief of William J. Alexander, of Bloomington, Monroe County, Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 330) for the benefit of Alderson T. Keene, late first lieutenant of Company E, First Kentucky Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. No. 2334) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson; and

A bill (H. R. No. 888) for the relief of James McGregor.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by O. L. PREDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 3d instant, approved and signed an act (S. No. 648) to constitute a commission to consider and report a plan for providing enlarged accommodations for the Library of Congress and the act (S. No. 349) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund a certain tax erroneously collected.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 888) for the relief of James McGregor; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3289) for the relief of William J. Alexander, of Bloomington, Monroe County, Indiana.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 330) for the benefit of Alderson T. Keene, late first lieutenant of Company E, First Kentucky Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1371) for the relief of John W. Skiles; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1551) for the relief of Mrs. Emma A. Porch, of Centretown, Missouri.

The bill (H. R. No. 2334) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 1855) for the relief of John C. Ray, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and

The bill (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 15) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. CHAFFEE.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned on Friday last I was discussing the question of the great annual saving to the Treasury that had been caused by the construction of the Pacific railroads, and showed it by the report of the Senate Committee on Railroads made in 1871. It was a principal object of the legislation of 1862 and 1864 to gain that advantage to the Treasury, and I contended that we ought not to overlook the fact that that object was secured and millions less annual expense have ever since been incurred, in deciding upon the treatment to be meted out to the companies. The Railroad Committee estimated that saving as at least $3,000,000 per year on the scale of expense when the roads were commenced, but as the expenses annually became greater as the country became settled up, the Indians became more troublesome, mails heavier, &c., the annual saving became still more and probably reached nearly $6,000,000 annually. In 1867 a single contract to carry that part of the Pacific mails not carried by the Isthmus was made for the space between the advancing termini of the roads, which it was supposed had years to run, at the rate of $1,750,000 per annum. Forty or fifty times that weight of mails is now carried over the same distance for $140,000 per annum. From the facts I have cited in this connection it may be safely asserted that the Treasury will be better off in 1900 from the savings to the Government even if the debt is never paid. It is better off to-day. The speedy completion of the road added greatly to its cost to the companies, but it more quickly relieved the Treasury of enormous drains for transportation. The men in Congress who favored the passage of the Pacific Railroad bills, and argued in favor of the "inducements to capital and enterprise" to embark in the enterprise, looked upon the Government investment as a good one even if the bonds or interest were never paid.

No fact is more apparent from a perusal of the debates in 1862 than that it was not contemplated that either the bonds or interest should be paid until the maturity of the bonds.

And I am led to this remark by the position taken by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] in the remarks which he recently addressed to the Senate. Referring to a quotation from Justice Butler, used in the case of the United States vs. The Pacific Railroad, in 1 Otto, 53, he expressed the opinion that the failure in the former legislation to provide for the payment of the interest by the companies to the Government as it was paid by the Government was a casus omisus. The quotation which he read as I recollect—I am sorry I am not able to verify my recollection by his remarks, which are not yet in the RECORD—was as follows:

"We are bound," said Justice Buller in an early case in the King's Bench, "to take the act of Parliament as they have made it: a casus omisus can in no case be supplied by a court of law, for that would be to make laws; nor can I conceive that it is our province to consider whether such a law that has been passed be tyrannical or not."

I do not understand that the object of the court in making the citation was to express even an opinion that there was a casus omisus in that case. Perhaps they were not at liberty, as we are, to refer to the debates at the time of the passage of the act in order to understand whether such omission was made or not; but there is nothing clearer to any one who will refer to these debates than that Congress intelligently left out any provision for the payment of the interest by the companies as it was paid by the General Government. This was so necessarily as a matter of principle; for what assistance would it have been to the companies for the Government to lend them its bonds to be paid by the companies at maturity and the companies each year to pay all the interest that accrued on these bonds? It would be no advantage whatever that anybody can see. The companies could just as well borrow, if they could borrow it at all, from somebody else on those terms. It was a loan of its bonds by the Government and not an indorsement of the bonds of the company. I desire to call attention to an amendment offered by Mr. White, of Indiana, in the House of Representatives in 1862 upon the opposite theory which he prefaced by saying:

It will be observed by reference to the section that there is no provision in reference to the payment of the current interest. I therefore move to amend by adding to the section the following:

And then comes the section which he offered:

It is declared to be the true intent and meaning of this section that the current interest on said bonds shall be chargeable to said company, to be by them reimbursed to the United States within one month after each semi-annual payment thereof by the United States; and a default therein shall subject the said company to the same liability and forfeiture above provided for in case of the non-redemption of the bonds at their maturity.

It will be observed that this amendment was aptly drawn for the purpose of supplying the omission if there was a casus omisus in the bill up to that time, and he gives his reasons further for offering this amendment:

The section as it now stands does not make any provision for the payment of the current interest as it accrues semi-annually. It may or may not have been the intention of the committee that the interest should be paid by the company. Probably it was; but if not, then this amendment, of course, will involve a principle which the committee have not sanctioned. If it was the intention of the committee, and it is the intention of the Committee of the Whole, that the railroad company shall pay the current interest, then, to avoid the difficulty and uncertainty which creditors will have, and to insure its prompt payment by the United States, this amendment provides that the Government shall first pay it, and the company reimburse it to the United States within one month. Of course, it will be a little gain of the company, to the extent of the interest upon the interest.

A wonderfully small gain that would have been! I am tempted to use the favorite Latin maxim of my friend from Ohio, de minimis non curat lex.

This is the only way the interest can be promptly secured to the creditors.

To this Mr. Campbell, of Pennsylvania, who was chairman of the Pacific Railroad Committee in the House, replied:

I suppose, of course, that the gentleman from Indiana is acting in perfect good faith, but I am clearly of opinion that the gentleman has not studied faithfully the provisions of this bill. It has been demonstrated to this House that the cost to the Government of transportation to our forts in the Territories is more than double the amount of the entire interest upon all the bonds proposed to be issued, and the bill is based upon the supposition that the transportation of Government supplies over the road will be equal to, if not greatly exceed, the annual interest upon the bonds issued from year to year. It is not the intention of the bill that the interest shall be paid semi-annually to the Government. It is not supposed that, in the first instance, the company will reimburse the interest to the Government. It will reimburse it in transportation, but if the transportation does not meet the interest, then the Government is to have a mortgage on the entire road for the full amount of principal and interest. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not pass.

Mr. WHITE's amendment was rejected, and thus there was an intelligent vote by the House of Representatives, after argument pro and con, that this was not a casus omisus, that they would not supply a provision requiring the interest on these bonds to be paid before maturity. I could quote still further from these debates remarks made by Judge KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, and other remarks by Mr. CAMPBELL, and some submitted by myself at that time, all explaining this same feature of the legislation, showing that the House of Representatives clearly understood that the provision was that the Government should pay the interest, but the companies should repay the interest only at the maturity of the obligations and at the same time that they paid the principal.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] and others have dwelt upon the enormous amount of the debt of these companies to the Government. Taking the decision of the Supreme Court as correct, as we must, the interest is not payable, and neither is the principal, until the maturity of the bonds. That was, as I have shown, a boon to the companies, intelligently and purposely given. It is therefore necessary, in estimating the present real amount of the debt, to ascertain its present value. I have had this done by an able statistician in the Treasury Department. By his showing the present value (July 1, 1878) of the net interest (or interest less estimated 5 per cent. of net earnings and the half transportation) for thirty years, (from January 1, 1868, to January 1, 1898,) such net interest being considered as due at maturity of principal, (January 1, 1898,) or the sum, which reinvested semi-annually at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from July 1, 1878, to January 1, 1898, will amount to such net interest, is, in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, $11,842,000; Central Pacific Railroad Company, $15,128,000.

If at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum such present value is, in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, $9,794,700; Central Pacific Railroad Company, $12,503,000, the present value of the principal and such net interest together, under the above conditions, when the annual rate of interest for the semi-annual reinvestments is 5 per cent. per annum, in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, is $22,228,000; Central Pacific Railroad Company, is $25,761,000.

If the annual rate is 6 per cent., such present value is, in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, $18,394,000; Central Pacific Railroad Company, $21,308,000.

These figures, which, as I say, were prepared for me by an able statistician in the Treasury Department, removed from any motive for misrepresentation, and I have no doubt with actual verity, show the small present value of this debt compared with the exaggerated statements which are made in regard to it. The companies would have a right to pay it off under proper legislation by Congress, giving the full value of it at the rate which I have just stated.

When the Pacific Railroad bill passed the House of Representatives, after a discussion that ran over several weeks under the five-minute debate and a discussion under the hour rule of several weeks, as it came to the Senate it did not provide that these companies should pay either principal or interest except by the whole of the transportation and the 5 per cent. of their net earnings, and the words were inserted in the Senate on the motion of the then Senator from Vermont, Mr. Collamer, that they should "pay said bonds at maturity." The theory of the House of Representatives really was that a substantial boon was to be given to these companies in order to induce them to overcome what were admitted to be enormous difficulties in the way of their undertaking and to overcome the lethargy of capitalists; but the Senate took a more stringent view of the matter and required that the bonds should be paid at maturity. Upon that head I should like, to show the theory upon which the House went, to read a short extract from a speech made by Mr. White, of Indiana, from whom I quoted a few moments ago. The proposition pending was that the Government should have representation upon the board of directors, an amendment moved by him. Upon that he says:

I now submit the second amendment indicated by me in respect to the Government being represented in the board of directors. I will take this opportunity to say that it is very true that this bill does provide for the repayment of these advances by the Government.

The method of that repayment was, as I have stated, by means of the transportation and the 5 per cent. of net earnings until after the bill had been considered in the Senate, where it was made more stringent.

The gentleman from California lays stress on his objection, especially upon that fact, and for that reason he objects to providing for Government directors. Now, sir, I contend that although this bill provides for the repayment of the money advanced by the Government, it is not expected that a cent of money will ever be repaid. If the committee intended that it should be repaid, they would have required it to be paid out of the gross earnings of the road, as is done with the roads in Missouri, Iowa, and other States, and not the net earnings. There is not perhaps one company in a hundred where the roads are most prosperous that has any net at all. I undertake to say that not a cent of these advances will ever be repaid, nor do I think it desirable that they should be repaid. This road is to be the highway of the nation, and we ought to take care that the rates provided shall be moderate. I think, therefore, that this will turn out a mere bonus to the Pacific Railroad, as it ought to be. The Government, then, ought to be considered as having an interest in the road, and it should have a voice in the management of its affairs.

That shows the temper of Congress at that time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator what book he is reading from, and what page, so that I can look at it?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or will the Senator just give me the book?

Mr. SARGENT. It is the Congressional Globe, part 2, 1861-62. I will hand the Senator the book containing the extracts from the Globe.

Congress, however, did not assent to the idea that this should be a mere gratuity. Anxious as I was at that time for the passage of legislation that would build the Pacific railroad, enthusiastically anxious as I was, bringing to bear upon it whatever of strength and courage under great difficulties which I possessed, still I did not think it should be a gratuity. I believed that the time would come when there would be a dozen States intervening between the Pacific border and the Missouri River; that the Territories would be rapidly developed by means of this very road; that an immense business would grow up which would be very prosperous; that the net earnings provided for in the bill would amount to a very large sum; and that the transportation for the Government, which at that very time amounted to about $5,000,000, would still amount to a very large sum, and that the Government would have wisdom enough, instead of sending its goods by Panama and paying all cash, as it has done since that time, because it might get transportation a cent or two a ton cheaper, although it would consume much more time and run greater risks; I believed that these resources would keep down the debt, and that when it became due it would be within such compass that the roads thus prosperous, doing such business, would be able to repay it; and therefore I was in favor of the 5 per cent. clause, and of applying all the transportation. And I desire to say here and now that it was my judgment in 1864, when I noticed the debates in the House of Representatives, of which I was not then a member, having gone out of my own volition at the close of the previous Congress, that I did not then think, and do not now think, that I ever would have voted to double the land grant or take off half the transportation from present application to the interests on these bonds. However, it was done. The Court of Claims said a bargain was made. It was "an improvident bargain," but you must stand by it; and such I take to be the spirit of the Supreme Court in that matter.

The only conclusion I draw from the saving to the Treasury by the aid that has been extended to these roads is that it should not now legislate as if it had been mere gratuity, and not mutually advantageous, though there has been profit in both the construction and operating the roads. I do not aver that a sinking fund of an adequate character should not be secured. I think it should be, and I believe the prospect of congressional hostility and endless, expensive litigation will induce the companies to assent to whatever comports with the wants of the Government, which require not only the repayment of principal and interest, but the maintenance of a first-class road. I believe the companies have made large gains in building the roads and now find the operating of them profitable. Out of these profits they should pay a proper annual sum, besides that reserved by the original legislation, to put their debt in the process of ultimate extinction. This is to the benefit of the credit of the companies and just to the Government. It could not reasonably be asked, if there were no profit to them in their enterprise, and it ought not to be pressed to such point as to take away all prospect of future profit. If that is done the owners of the roads will be apt to get out from under the burden of maintenance and let the Government do its will with the roads; and for many reasons that is undesirable. The attention of Congress has been repeatedly called to all the features of the Credit Mobilier of the Union Pacific and to the Contract and Finance Company of the Central Pacific, although the latter was very different in its characteristics and never gave or sold its stock to Congressmen. I called the attention of the Senate some years ago to the latter and offered in the House of Representatives the resolutions of censure which were passed upon the former. But Congress has seen fit to condone whatever was wrong in either, and in consequence of that condonation other parties have invested in both the stock and bonds of the company. It is not now just to either the old or new parties to make matters so condoned the excuse for measures that may imperil the proper maintenance of the roads, take away all object to attend diligently to their affairs, or make them too heavy a burden on transportation.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him a moment to understand his remark? What does he say Congress has done?

Mr. SARGENT. Congress investigated at very great length all the matters in connection with the Credit Mobilier, the result of which was certain resolutions of censure on parties now dead. It never took any steps upon that matter in any way or shape for the benefit of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It passed a bill to institute a suit.

Mr. THURMAN. And the suit is pending now.

Mr. SARGENT. I say Congress never took any action toward the forfeiture of the rights of these companies, as was provided for by the original legislation in case of the violation of their faith with the Government; and not having done so, they ought not to make these things now an excuse for varying a bargain to the injury of these parties and upon the strength or assertion of legislative will.

Mr. THURMAN. Because Congress did not exercise its extreme right of repealing the charter, which it might have done according to the report of the committee, and I think a very correct report, but saw fit to take a more mild course, the institution of a suit to compel these people to disgorge what the committee reported were ill-gotten and illegal gains, and that suit is now pending, my friend ought not to say that Congress has ever condoned those offenses.

Mr. SARGENT. My recollection of that suit is that the money is to be paid back, not to the Treasury of the United States, but into the treasury of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. So far as itself was concerned, the Government condoned these offenses, if they were offenses, and upon exactly the same principle that offenses are considered condoned in every divorce court in the land, and wherever the principle of condonation is applied. Subsequent dealings with the companies, subsequent association, cohabitation with the companies, if you see fit, worked the condonation to which I referred.

By as plain a stipulation as any in the contract Congress provided that it would not reduce the rates of travel and transportation unless the profits of the corporations exceeded 10 per cent. annually. In view of that provision Pacific commerce is likely to be beyond the relief of Congress when to the present demands on the company are added several millions of annual payments to the Treasury, which must soon exhaust any previous accumulation of profits, and become a serious charge on the transportation of freight and passengers. On behalf of the people of the Pacific, and of the Territories traversed by this road, I protest that under the claim of protecting the Government you do not impose too heavy burdens on their commerce. That which is exacted beyond a reasonable limit comes solely from the people of those States and Territories. If the rates are too heavy through business will take the route by the isthmus, a gain perhaps to New York, which will have the benefits derived from the flush days of Panama and Pacific-Mail steamer traffic, but the Iowa roads and Chicago will suffer proportionably. But local business cannot help itself, and will be crushed down; the shipment of low-grade ores, the running of slightly productive mines and general prospecting will be stopped from the enhanced cost of transporting machinery and supplies. So far as this legislation affects California I claim the right to speak freely and to be heard. All the States get the benefit of reduced cost of Government transportation of mails and Government troops and supplies, this reduction exceeding by two millions annually the whole amount of yearly interest, with security against costly Indian wars, and the benefit of peace in the center of the continent. In case of foreign war the benefit to the nation of the Pacific Railroad in facilitating the defense and preservation of its Pacific possessions will be incalculable. In this view it is equitable that the entire nation, and not California alone, should bear the load until the development of the interior, the creation of new States along the line of the road, and the increase of business consequent thereon enable the Pacific roads to carry out the original intention of Congress, and discharge their obligations "at maturity;" and if further arrangements are to be made by which the burden is to be localized, and put upon a State principally that has but about one-seventieth of the population and 2½ per cent. of the property of the United States, the measure should look rather to gradual reduction of the debt and its ultimate security, than to rapid payment from a mere desire to punish the companies. It is better to give a longer time to pay the great debt rather than arrest development of the Western States and Territories, destroy the roads, or make them a burden rather than a blessing to the people of the Territories and the Pacific.

But while I ask this forbearance toward the Pacific States and intervening Territories I am willing to exact justice from these railroad companies to the Government. It was plainly named in the original contract that 5 per cent. of the net earnings and the whole amount for transportation for the Government, subsequently reduced to one-half, should be applied as fast as earned upon the interest and principal of the bonds. I do not believe in any funding scheme that will eliminate that feature from the contract. That money belongs to the Government as much as any other that can be paid into the Treasury, as the proceeds of taxation or otherwise, and should be employed to extinguish this Pacific Railroad debt so far as it will go, and not be put into a sinking fund, which would compel the Government to pay interest upon its own money. I have all along considered this as a serious defect of the Railroad Committee's bill. But the other half of the transportation should go into the sinking fund and draw a reasonable rate of interest, compounded at reasonable intervals, because neither the debt nor the interest upon it is now due or payable or collectible by the United States. And to this should be added such a sum, to be paid regularly by the companies, as will bring their debt to the Government within moderate control in 1900. I do not think that we should exact 10 per cent., or 25 per cent., or 50 per cent. of their net earnings, refusing to allow them any profit for running the road unless they can derive it from the percentage left of the net earnings. There is, however, much in the criticism of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] that with a possible increase of the amount of transportation done by the companies, &c., the amount of money over and above that might decrease the sum which the companies would be required to pay from other sources to almost nothing. In the amendment which I have submitted to section 4, I propose that the amount to be credited and paid into the sinking fund each year shall not be less than $600,000 for each company, and it may be as high as the highest amount of money named in the Judiciary Committee's bill, if the 5 per cent. and half transportation do not make it up to that sum.

I object to the first section of the Judiciary Committee bill for reasons which I have heretofore given, and have moved an amendment to strike out that section. I think it is unjust and harsh, needlessly so. I further cannot see the propriety of submitting to the Supreme Court the question "what are net earnings?" to ascertain this judicially, as they will soon do, and then lay down a congressional rule which may be a departure from that decision and from the contract with the companies originally made and against their will.

I think section 3 should be amended by striking out lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 and inserting in lieu thereof the words "interest on all sums placed to the credit of the sinking fund shall be credited and added thereto semi-annually at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum," and I have moved such an amendment. It is true the Government can now borrow money at a less rate than 6 per cent., but money is worth more than 6 per cent. to these companies and to business men. The Government gets money low because its bonds are exempt from State and national taxation. But the obligations of private parties have no such privilege, and the value of money to them is not to be fairly measured by its value to the Government. I insist in this connection as in others, that the rights and interests of the companies are to be considered as well as those of the Government; for they are parties to a contract with the Government, binding in law and conscience. If the legislative will can set that aside it can set aside any other contract, and the national debt can be lawfully repudiated, especially such portions of it as are held by national banks, or other corporations created or contracted with by the Government. At such doctrines "reason stands aghast and faith herself is half confounded."

One feature of this discussion is remarkable. The members of the Judiciary Committee have so much apparent pride of authorship or opinion and bring so much heat and zeal into the advocacy of their bill that anything like accord or consultation seems impossible. Propositions of amendment or dissent seem to be resented as personal aggression. In fact it is whispered that no amendments of any character, not emanating from the sponsors of the measure, are to be allowed, but are to be voted down, no matter by whom else proposed and independently of the merits. This is not the temper in which legislation should be conducted, and is not likely to secure accuracy or justice. The purpose will not succeed unless the Senate is ready to admit the omnipotency of the Judiciary Committee, and that the omnipotency claimed by that committee for Congress resides wholly in that worthy and industrious committee. While according to them all the purity of motives that they can claim and admitting their great ability, I cannot and will not blindly follow them where the good faith of the Government, in my judgment, is concerned, as well as the interests of the people of California and the Territories.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I gave notice last week of an amendment which I intended to offer, and I now formally move the following: In section 12 of the bill of the Judiciary Committee strike out all after the word "mentioned," in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof:

But so long as said Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railroad Companies shall faithfully comply with the provisions of the said acts of 1862 and 1864 and of this act, relating to payments to the United States on account of the bonds advanced, and of the sinking funds to be established as aforesaid, such compliance shall be deemed and taken as sufficient to meet the obligations of said companies on account of such bonds prior to the maturity thereof.

I do not know, Mr. President, that there is any particular choice where this provision should come in. I happened to put it in just at that point, because it seemed to come in connectedly. I do not know that I have any particular preference, however, to having it here rather than putting it in at the end of the section. If it should commend itself to any person more by having it put at the end of the section than at the point where I have moved it, I shall be very glad to make the change. I do not think it really interferes with the point I desire to cover by my amendment as to which particular place it comes in.

I had a little conversational interchange with the honorable Senator from Ohio who has charge of this bill [Mr. THURMAN] on Thursday last in the Senate, in which the following took place:

Mr. BLAINE. Well, the Senator voted in 1871 to make it—

The other half transportation—payable to the railroad companies, and in 1873 the question came up and then he voted to let them have it decided in the courts.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know whether I voted for that at all. I do not remember whether I was in the Senate when the act of 1873 was passed.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator spoke in favor of it anyway.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think I said a word about it.

I thought as I had recently read the debate over I could not possibly be mistaken. I have since looked up the matter and I find that there was a debate covering some thirty-eight columns of the Globe and that my honorable friend from Ohio appeared in that debate I think thirty-two times, covering about seven or eight columns of the Globe in what he said. The Senator from Ohio speaks so well and so easily that I can well conceive that, as the man who would overlook a million-dollar check, so vast was his fortune, he might well forget a very important utterance that was five years old; but it was fresh from the reading of that debate that I ventured to offer the amendment which I have now formally moved to the twelfth section of the bill, and it was after all the instruction which I derived from what the honorable Senator from Ohio had said that I framed that amendment.

I had conceived, as I ventured to remark, that whatever settlement might be made by Congress with these railroad companies, whatever in the judgment of Congress was a fair and a right thing to do, it ought to have somewhat the element of permanency in it. And I ventured to point out that in my judgment if we pass this bill of the Judiciary Committee just as it is, reserving in it the strongest possible right to alter, amend, and repeal immediately, or in eight months if you choose, or in a year if you choose, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] admitted might be done, it was impossible to have $90,000,000 of a speculative stock under a still larger amount of bonds of various descriptions and denominations, subject at all times to whatever action Congress might choose to take in regard to it, with Congress threatening to take action at any time—it was impossible, I said, to prevent Congress being used or attempted to be used by Wall street and by speculators and by stock-gamblers to influence the value of stock and bonds either favorably or unfavorably, and I believe that to be the most serious evil of this bill.

I do not claim any originality for that conception, because I read from the honorable Senator from Ohio in 1873 in this debate in which he forgot that he had taken any part whatever. It is said in the Arabic proverb the speaker is one, and the hearer is another, and the reader a third, and he that most easily forgets is the speaker. The Senator says on page 874 of the Congressional Globe, part 2, third session Forty-second Congress:

Now it is admitted on all hands that there ought to be some judicial decision of this question, and I agree that there ought to be. The interest of the Government requires that there should be, and the interest of these companies requires that there should be, for this matter ought not to be at loose ends in this way. What was the effect of its being at loose ends before?

Mr. ALLISON. Who said that?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. ALLISON. On what question?

Mr. BLAINE. It was on the question of referring to a court the matter of half transportation. I have stated that the honorable Senator in 1871 concurred in a report from the Judiciary Committee affirming that it belonged to the companies, and then that the honorable Senator took the ground in 1873 that it should go to the courts for decision, and in urging the passage of that bill the Senator from Ohio said what I was reading. I resume the quotation from his remarks:

The interest of the Government requires that there should be, and the interest of these companies requires that there should be, for this matter ought not to be at loose ends in this way. What was the effect of its being at loose ends before? I saw a statement the other day, and I believe it is correct, that when this decision was made by the Secretary of the Treasury not to pay the one-half transportation, the stock of the Union Pacific Railroad went down to 9 per cent—nine cents on the dollar. After the decision by Congress that it should be paid, that same stock went up to thirty cents on the dollar. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Stewart] nods his head. He is more familiar with the facts than I am. I saw that statement the other day in what appeared to be an authentic form. Thus it will be seen that the stock-gamblers were enabled to speculate in that stock to the amount of twenty-one cents' profit on an investment of nine cents; on an investment of nine cents to make twenty-one cents profit. It seems that there is nothing that concerns this company that is not the subject of immense stock-gambling and stock speculation and unlawful profit. That was the effect of tampering with the thing before? Now, I do not wish to have any more tampering with it, if I can help it. What I want is what the Senator from Vermont wants, a speedy decision, both for the public interest and for the interest of everybody who is concerned; and the question is, how is that speedy decision to be arrived at?

It was directly after reading that, taking my instruction, as I am always glad to do on matters that are not partisan, from the honorable Senator from Ohio, that the amendment which I have offered suggested itself to me. He pointed out the evils of having stock-gambling in this matter; he pointed out that you could not have any legislation going on about this, but it was immediately the subject of "immense stock-gambling" and "unlawful profit." He said it should not be left "at loose ends;" he said that he was opposed to "tampering" with it, and that there should not be "any more tampering with it if he could help it." He wanted to close the whole door on matters of that kind. I derived my amendment from that position and from those remarks of the Senator and I was immensely surprised when the honorable Senator himself—I know it was from a total forgetfulness of what he said in 1873—came forward and opposed my amendment, and I believe intimated that he would rather lose the bill than to have incorporated into it the exact doctrine which he so forcibly put five years ago.

Mr. THURMAN. Which the Senator thinks I put, but which I did not.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not interpolated nor changed a solitary word the Senator said. The Senator spoke of the evils of having this matter "at loose ends;" he spoke of the evils of leaving it open to "stock-gamblers" and to "stock speculation," and that we could not do anything about this road that was not immediately the subject of vast "stock-gambling operations;" he spoke of the great evils of "tampering" with it, using that very word, a most significant and emphatic word. Now if the Senator himself sees any difference in that meaning from that which I quote, I should be glad to hear him explain it. If there be any other possible meaning, I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. THURMAN. I have not one word that I then said to take back; I stand to-day by every word that I then said; but it has no more application to this bill in my humble judgment, though it has in the superior intellect of my friend from Maine, than the eastern question has.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think the Senator could have heard me when I read it.

Mr. THURMAN. I did.

Mr. BLAINE. I think the Senator's forgetfulness of what he said in 1873, when he said he did not take part in the debate at all, must pursue him even at this moment, because the very arguments that I presented, every one that I offered, every one on which my amendment can possibly rest are included in the short, pithy, pointed, and forcible paragraph which I read from the Senator in his debate of 1873. In that debate the Senator from Ohio and all others engaged in it maintained—and I could read passage after passage in support of my assertion—that the object was to reach a decision, that the object, according to the Senator from Ohio, was to get it where it was not to be made the basis or the ground or in any wise the occasion of stock-gambling operations. Now, if there is a different meaning, if there is something so hidden and occult, I think the Senator has rather placed himself in the position of not being so impartial a judge of that possibly as the reader, because he did not remember that he had even made a remark, he did not remember that he had made a solitary allusion to the bill, and yet I find him thirty-two times on his feet during the debate and of his remarks the most significant was the one which I have read.

Now, Mr. President, I maintain that great as was the danger at that time, pointed and large as were the inducements for stock-gamblers to use the power of Congress to keep this thing "at loose ends" and to keep "tampering with it," they are all infinitely greater now. At that time the Senator from Ohio had never taken the ground that Congress could alter, amend, or repeal these contracts at pleasure. At no time during the debate in which he rose so often did he intimate by the remotest possible hint that this power existed, and even with that restriction and speaking from that restricted stand-point of no power to interfere with the contract the Senator found these great dangers lurking. With Congress having a power so narrow and so limited and so restrained as the honorable Senator then seemed to infer it possessed he saw these great evils of stock-gambling and stock operations and everything of that evil character besetting legislation. Now I ask him to reflect what will be the character of that when it goes forth that on every feature of this legislation, on every single section, paragraph, and line and period of the acts of 1862 and 1864, the power of Congress is ample to step in at any moment and change, alter, amend, repeal, or destroy as they please. Why you have given a thousand inducements for interference from outside to where one existed before. You have given a thousand temptations to stock-gamblers. The Senator then found that the stock-gamblers could make a profit of twenty-one cents on an investment of nine cents.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. THURMAN. Is not the power to amend, alter, or repeal now in the charters?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it put any more in the charters by the Judiciary Committee bill than it is now in the charters?

Mr. BLAINE. I am talking of how the Senator then construed it.

Mr. THURMAN. No matter about that. The Senator is speaking about some better foundation for his amendment than what a Senator said, I think.

Mr. BLAINE. There could not be a stronger one than is found in what the Senator said. I could not possibly have a stronger one than the Senator gave me.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator is putting it on the ground of the danger of stock gambling and the like, and that arises from the fact that the charter is subject to amendment or repeal. I ask him if it is not now subject to amendment or repeal?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator probably does not understand me aright. Let me make myself intelligible.

Mr. THURMAN. Is not the power to alter and repeal in the law now?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly; but allow me to make myself intelligible. At that time the Senator from Ohio had not taken the cross-cut and the near track of outrunning any possible judicial decision by simply substituting an act of Congress.

Mr. THURMAN. Because there was no such question before Congress.

Mr. BLAINE. Nor did he ever intimate in that debate that such a question could come before Congress; never. In that whole discussion, participated in by the Senator now chairman of the Judiciary Committee, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] by Senators remarkable for their legal ability and legal experience on both sides of the Chamber, including on the opposite side the honorable Senator from Ohio himself, primus inter pares, there was never an intimation of the power which the Senator says now is so plain and palpable that no person disputes it; and at that time, I want to ask the honorable Senator what in the world was the sense of asking the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest judicial tribunal we have, to decide whether the half transportation should be retained or paid out; what was the sense of waiting eighteen months or two years for a judicial investigation and decision, if at a single bound of the legislative will you could settle the whole thing?

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator want an answer now?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, I will take it now.

Mr. THURMAN. Because if the Supreme Court had sustained the opinion of the Attorney-General, that the Government had a right to set off the interest which the Government pays against the half transportation which by the act of 1864 we agreed to pay to the companies, then no legislation could have been necessary upon the subject of the half the transportation at all, for the right of set-off would have settled that whole matter. Therefore it was perfectly right that we should ascertain what was the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the law as it then stood. That being ascertained, we could prepare such appropriate legislation as might be necessary.

Mr. BLAINE. Ah! but the Senator already had the opinion of the Attorney-General, and by a single statute he could have secured to the United States the money to which it was just as much entitled then as it is to-day.

Mr. DAWES. The committee differed with the Attorney-General.

Mr. BLAINE. The Attorney-General's opinion, to be sure, differed, and the Senator from Ohio overrode the Attorney-General's opinion. There was the opinion of the law officer of the Government that we were entitled to half the transportation; the Secretary of the Treasury was retaining it, and the Senator from Ohio lent his powerful name and powerful aid to the overthrow of that decision, and to the order that that money should be paid back to the companies. Two years later he changed his ground, and said upon the whole he would refer that to the court. Then he referred it to the court, but two years after he said, "We will not abide by the decision of the court." In the first place the Attorney-General said that the companies were not entitled to it, and the Senator from Ohio said they were. Then he agreed to submit it to the court, and the court said they were entitled to it, and now he says they are not entitled to it.

Mr. THURMAN. Do I say they are not entitled to it?

Mr. BLAINE. In this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. There is nothing in this bill which says they are not entitled to it, unless you alter the law.

Mr. BLAINE. Ah, unless you alter the law! That brings me back to the original question. If this power was then, in the mind of the Senator from Ohio, so ample and conclusive and absolute that all you had to do was to write and it was done, why all this delay? Why did the Senator speak with such gravity and with such seriousness as to the effect of a judicial decision if the judicial decision was not to be worth anything more than the paper on which it was printed? Where was the point? The point of my amendment was to relieve the Congress of the United States, and the Government and the companies of just the evils which this change has wrought, as the Senator from Ohio himself stands as the most illustrious example. In seven years the Senator from Ohio has occupied four different positions on this question. Four different positions as to the legislation necessary, the Senator has held in seven years! I am very sure that, if this bill passes as he supports it, with the power to alter, amend, and repeal, with every invitation for everybody to come in and demand it, you will find some person, not probably so eminent as the Senator from Ohio, but even more changeable, I think, who will change seven times in four years, and we shall have the thing repeated indefinitely. It will be shuttlecock and battledore between the two Houses, between Wall street and Congress. It will be a perpetual and never-ending agitation upon the question. Now, what is the necessity of this? The bill of the Judiciary Committee, as I intimated, does not in my judgment ask of the railroad companies more than they are able to pay. I do not think it asks any more than we have the right to demand of them. I do not think that the bill would be in its amount an oppressive one upon the railroad companies, and it is so adapted that it forms a sliding scale. They have adopted a sliding scale of 25 per cent., so that the more of net earnings the companies make the more the Government will get. The Senator from Ohio has spoken I believe publicly, he has very freely in conversation, to the effect that the operation of the bill would leave about $20,000,000 due from each company at the maturity of the bonds. If that be true, what is the need of our saying that we reserve the power to interfere every year?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We do not say it.

Mr. BLAINE. Then why keep the power all the time?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because the power is requisite always in such a case.

Mr. BLAINE. That is stating that the world is round because it is round.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that is the very reason why the world is round.

Mr. BLAINE. I want now to go into a little calculation, and I do this for the benefit of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] who sits next to me. If the Senator from Ohio (and I have taken his figures implicitly) is correct, there will, under the operation of this bill, be $20,000,000 remaining of Government mortgage and $27,000,000 of the first-mortgage bonds on the Union Pacific Railroad when the bonds mature. I take the two railroads apart, and am speaking of the Union Pacific. I believe the Central is regarded as a still stronger corporation. There will be at the end of the mortgage $47,000,000 due on the Union Pacific. Does my friend who sits near me have any doubt that they will be able to pay that amount?

Mr. HOWE. I doubt whether they will.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator doubts whether they will pay it. Now let me give just one little calculation. The Union Pacific Railroad Company is to-day paying more than 6 per cent. on $90,000,000 and there are ahead of you twenty years of increase and development of business, and a road to-day which, with all its obligations of first-mortgage bonds, of sinking-fund bonds, of land-grant bonds, and of stock, is absolutely showing net earnings enough for a dividend on $90,000,000—cannot that road be trusted to pay $47,000,000 with twenty more years added of development and increase of business and enlarged connections in all directions? If this bill does not give the absolute security to the Government for every solitary dollar that it ever laid out upon it, then it is entirely impossible for the wit of man to devise absolute security. By the time the bonds mature, according to the ordinary development of the country and especially of the new country, with its varied and various interests, through which that road runs, the fair presumption would be that its intrinsic value would at least be double what it is to-day. The fair presumption I say is that it would be double. There is not a banker in London or New York, there is not a financier on either continent who would not accept that as absolute security and come under any amount of obligation to anticipate its bonds for a proper consideration.

Therefore I say that the Judiciary Committee, having provided according to their own claim for the absolute repayment and security to the Treasury of every dollar that the Government has advanced, are yet unwilling to trust their own work, but want it to be open to repeal, amendment, and modification, and agitation, and petition, and memorial, and investigation every year for the next fifteen years, as it has been for the last fifteen. I am opposed to that, and I cannot conceive how any one can be in favor of it.

One of the great reasons that I have heard from Senators for keeping open this power to legislate is that there is such a startling peril from corporations in this country that the United States is in great danger of being literally overriden by corporations. I should like any lawyer of experience on this floor to tell me how many corporations exist to-day by charter from the Government of the United States. I do not count the national banks, which were organized under a general law and about which there is no question as to the right of repeal, but I refer to corporations that exercise any of this power that you dread. I should like my honorable friend from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is a walking dictionary on all the statutes from Rome and Greece down to Vermont and Maine, to tell me how many there are of these gigantic corporations which threaten and imperil the safety of the Government of the United States. Can any Senator tell me enough of them to cover the fingers of two hands? Congress has been always sparing in its acts of incorporation. Even in this little District of Columbia, where the congressional legislation is as exclusive as the legislation of a State is within its own limits, we have not averaged one act of incorporation per annum since the foundation of the Federal Government, and I include fire companies, and banks, and Sisters of Charity, and benevolent societies, and Dorcas societies, and steamboats to run from Alexandria to Georgetown. Putting them all together they have not averaged one a year of the little private corporations for the District of Columbia. Does any gentleman on this floor know of any railroad company that was ever organized by the United States with the exception of the Union Pacific? I pause for answer and for correction if I am wrong. I do not assert it as a fact but can any gentleman tell me that Congress ever at any time in the past organized by charter a railroad company, with the solitary exception of the Union Pacific? Yet that is the corporation that is in danger of swallowing all the liberties of this people, and which must be open to the watchful eye of everybody who wants to get an amendment in for every year of its existence. Although you have got legislation under which they would repay every dollar to you, you must keep the question open and well stirred up, keep the company where they can be punched and reminded that the Government of the United States is in great peril from the corporation if we do not continue to assure our safety by perpetual agitation.

In connection with that I will say that this question is scarcely ever debated, there is scarcely ever a reference made to the gigantic corporation and to the danger to the United States from its operation, that there is not some open or covert censure of the Congress and of the men who composed the Congress that gave the charter to this company. Well, I was one of the offenders. I voted to subordinate the mortgage of the United States to the mortgage of the company. My honorable friend from Vermont furthest from me [Mr. MORRILL] voted with me, and so did every Senator on this floor who was at that time a member of the House of Representatives with the single exception of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] who voted, I believe, against that provision and against the whole bill, and possibly my friend from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHIES,] of whose record I do not at this moment have a specific recollection. I was about to say that every Senator voted for that. I do not think in the Senate of the United States there was a solitary negative vote from New England on that provision. The immediate predecessor of my honorable friend, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, certainly voted for it, [Mr. Foot,] My recollection is not precise as to the affirmative vote; but I do assert that not one New England Senator voted against it; and New England then had William Pitt Fessenden, and Charles Sumner, and Jacob Collamer; and the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] who is here still, was then a member of the Senate. They voted for every provision of the bill, or at least did not vote in the negative. Nor was it a party measure. It was a measure of patriotism. Very prominent democrats voted for it. The gentleman who is at the present time Speaker of the House of Representatives, prominent in the councils of the democratic party, voted, I am very sure, with me to subordinate the Government bonds. It was regarded at that time as a measure for the safety of the Union; and all the exaggerated notions that have since been put forward that there was an immense lobby and a tremendous pressure brought to bear, and that members were besought and besieged and crowded into a vote of this kind, is purely a work of the imagination. There is nothing of it. The vote was given at that time without the slightest confidence that these roads would be built under the act, without the confidence that the legislation would produce their construction. If, as I have often said, and I will say it here, any person had come forward of responsibility enough to make his guarantee reliable and said to the United States (and I should like my honorable friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to contradict me if he disagrees with me; he was then in the House with me) "We will build this road from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, the whole two thousand miles, without one dollar from you until we put a locomotive over it and it is accepted by the Government commissioners, and then we ask you to give us $50,000,000 in gold coin as a free gift," it would have been voted, in my judgment, unanimously, so eager was the desire for the road, so slight was the faith in the power to get it through at that time. It would itself in with all the patriotic impulses of that day. It would itself in with the warm desire to fasten the Pacific coast to the Union with hooks of iron, if not of steel. The vote was not given to benefit a company or even for great commercial purposes. It was a large, patriotic, Union-saving, outstretching arm of the Government of the United States to hold together in strong political union the great communities that bordered the two oceans.

That was the spirit of that day, and it has turned out well. It has turned out far better than we expected, and we are going to receive back every dollar that we ever put in it. As the matter stands to-day, I for one would not vote here to give to these companies a single privilege that I would not give were I a private owner of what the Government holds. I would govern my vote as representing the Government, as the circumstances now are, precisely by what I would regard my duty as a wise administration of a private trust.

We are going to receive all the money back; but if the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I will state that I think there has been a great deal of exaggeration made about the enormous aid that the roads received. It was great; it was very great; it was probably greater than will ever be given again to a road, because you would have to repeat the extraordinary circumstances that induced that grant to have it repeated. But it is always stated as though the roads had received hundreds of millions. The two roads received $19,000,000 apiece in gold. They were building on a gold basis, and they received just what would have been equivalent to this sum if the Government of the United States had handed them out $19,000,000 in gold coin. Yet the Senator from Ohio states this question before the Judiciary Committee, as reported in the pamphlet which I hold in my hand and which I presume is authentic—it was circulated among all the members, placed on the desks, and I read from it—the Senator from Ohio states that the Government is out of pocket on account of these roads $500,000,000. Do I state the Senator's language correctly?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What paper is it the Senator reads from?

Mr. BLAINE. Here is a report put upon all the desks of members purporting to give a verbatim account of the hearings before the Judiciary Committee, and during the address of Judge Trumbull, formerly of this body, who appeared there as counsel for one of the companies, this occurs—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just tell us what that book is.

Mr. BLAINE. I know nothing about it except from its title: "Arguments before the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, on Senate bill No. 15." I presume the Senator received a copy. I saw them lying around on the desks of Senators. It has been commonly circulated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, it is one of the railroad publications, I imagine.

Mr. BLAINE. I read from it as follows:

Senator THURMAN. Thirty years' interest on that would be 180 per cent., which would be $117,000,000 to be paid by these roads at the end of the thirty years, which would liquidate principal and interest. Now the Government pays the interest semi-annually, and therefore, so far as Government is concerned, it is like compounding interest, and that will make over $500,000,000 that the Government pays. The Government is out of pocket, I mean, $500,000,000.

Is that a correct account of what the Senator said?

Mr. THURMAN. I cannot say whether it is or not. But, if the Senator wants to know exactly how much I was speaking about, I can find the figures.

Mr. BLAINE. That is, the Senator substantially, I believe, admits it.

Mr. THURMAN. It would be big enough to swamp three or four such railroads.

Mr. BLAINE. Undoubtedly. Now, what I observe to the Senator is that this is hardly a fair way of reckoning. If the Senator should happen himself, in the generosity of his heart, to make a present to two young men and to hand one of them $10,000 which he happened to have in bank, and to the other $10,000 that was raised on a note, and at the end of eleven years he meets them and says, "I gave one $10,000, but I gave $20,000 to the other because I count it up with compound interest." That would be the spirit of the calculation indulged in by the Senator, and I beg to say that it utterly befogs and confuses the whole subject. The Capitol under whose Dome we sit to-day cost a thousand million dollars according to that mode of calculation at the very least; and if you will compound the interest of the small sum which Queen Isabella realized for her jewels the discovery of America was the most miserable speculation that ever any European went into in the world. If you take the feather that was on Columbus's hat, worth a gold florin, and compound it at what Western farmers pay on their mortgages, the whole real estate of North and South America to-day would not be sufficient to pay it. So, when the Senator says the Government advanced $500,000,000 to these companies, he is dealing in mere figures of speech, and not in figures of arithmetic. What we paid them was this amount of bonds, and they are obligated in their mortgage to pay back that amount of bonds with all the interest at the maturity of the bonds. I believe the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont both admit that that is the law of the case to-day, and that is what we are providing for.

I have not seen the report of the speech of the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] but I think he stated that there was nothing in the debates to show that there was not a casus omissus in regard to the interest, that there was no such expression to be found. Did I understand the Senator to say that there was no expression by which the intent and meaning of the act could be inferred?

Mr. BAYARD. No; I made no such statement that I remember.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator spoke of its being a casus omnisus, I think. I have not seen his speech, as it has not appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. BAYARD. It was sent to the RECORD office on Saturday morning but I find it will not be published until to-morrow. The words "casus omnisus" were found by me in an opinion cited in 1 Otto by the court in which Mr. Justice Buller, in speaking of the duty of the court to take a law as they found it, said that even a casus omnisus or a tyrannical law would still be executed by the courts. What took place in the debate in reference to a provision for paying the interest by the companies pari passu to the payment by the Government, I did not refer to. I believe the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] did refer to that.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not listen to the honorable Senator on that point; but certainly it was plainly apparent in the debates of Congress—

Mr. BAYARD. I will say this to the Senator: I did say that when by the judgment of the Supreme Court the American people discovered that this vast amount of interest, double the amount of the principal of the debt, could not be paid until the debt itself matured, it created universal astonishment except with those, and those few, who knew that the law had been so drafted. I did not consider it a casus omnisus. I considered that the law which postponed a debt for thirty years and made none of the ordinary provisions that the interest should be payable semi-annually or annually in the progress of time between the contraction of the debt and its payment, was something extraordinary, and that had it occurred at the hand of a private agent he would have been suspected of infidelity to his client or of great incapacity.

Mr. BLAINE. Then if I understand the Senator he means that it was not the understanding of Congress that the law meant that the payment of the interest should be deferred?

Mr. BAYARD. I did not pretend to say what was the understanding of Congress, because I had not the debate before me. Those laws were passed when I was not in Congress, in 1862 and 1864, and I had not referred to the debate to know how it was that such language was arranged; but I spoke of the effect of the language, which would be to postpone the payment of a hundred million of dollars until $55,000,000 became due, and to say that $100,000,000 of interest should not be paid until $55,000,000 became due was very startling.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, the Senator will hear that during the pendency of the bill a very careful gentleman from Indiana, Mr. White, well known to Senators on this floor, since deceased, moved an amendment pending the bill; and if the attention of the Senator has not been called to it before I will be glad to have him give attention to it now. Mr. White says:

It will be observed, by reference to the section, that there is no provision in reference to the payment of the current interest. I therefore move to amend by adding to the section the following:

"It is declared to be the true intent and meaning of this section that the current interest on said bonds shall be chargeable to said company, to be by them reimbursed to the United States within one month after each semi-annual payment thereof by the United States; and a default therein shall subject the said company to the same liability and forfeiture above provided for in the case of the non-redemption of the bonds at their maturity."

That amendment was rejected. That amendment was offered by Mr. White and explained by him, and he was answered by Mr. Campbell, of Pennsylvania, then of the House of Representatives, who reported the bill, and it was rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. I have not examined the debate. I ask the Senator was it there proposed that the interest should be postponed until the principal became due?

Mr. BLAINE. No, it was rejected on the assumption that the 5 per cent. and the half transportation would pay it. It was rejected on the ground that they had put enough into the bill to secure the Government.

Mr. BAYARD. To secure the payment of the interest?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes. Now the significance is this: that amendment was offered when the act of 1862 was pending, which was a much more stringent law than the measure of 1864, because under the act of 1862 the companies gave up and could not build the road. It makes it all the more significant, as the Senator will observe, that the amendment was rejected on that bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I fully admit the intentment of the Senator's suggestion, but it seems to me that at the time this amendment of Mr. White was offered, perhaps from excessive caution, if you please, from greater caution, it was considered that the repayment of the interest by the company pari passu to the Government was sufficiently protected by the language already in the measure, and they voted it down. I will say further that when the case came before the Supreme Court, in 1 Otto, and was there argued, it was very strenuously and forcibly held that it never could have been the intent to postpone the payment of the interest until the principal became due, not simply because it was out of the ordinary line of transaction, but because by the very act the Government lien and the Government bonds were to give way to a prior lien of the company similar in tenor and amount. The similarity in tenor and amount was shown by their issuing bonds for the same amount, or within a very small proportion less, of a tenor that prescribed for the semi-annual payment of the interest as the time passed on. Therefore it was a matter, as I say it is now, of very great surprise to me, as merely one of the great body of the American people, that the provision for the repayment of interest paid out of the public Treasury for the use of a company should not have been protected by a provision to repay to it at the time the interest was due from the company.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] who was then on the supreme bench and delivered the opinion, took, I think, the very sensible view, both as a lawyer and a business man, that it never could have been conceived by Congress that the road at the very instant of its completion could pay the interest on the Government bonds. It was not a practicable thing as a business arrangement, and the Senator from Delaware will observe that there would have been no boon in the grant, there would practically have been no advantage in the grant had that been the construction. There would have been no beneficence on the part of the Government if they had been held instantly to pay that interest, because the Government would have been just as hard a creditor as the first-mortgage bondholder was. There would have been no beneficence on the part of the Government whatever in that case, and the Supreme Court so decided.

Mr. BAYARD. They did so decide, undoubtedly. I am not finding fault with their decision as a matter of reasoning upon the law they found before them, but I submit to the honorable Senator from Maine that nowhere in this opinion that I have been able to see is there anything suggesting the idea that the court were not deciding upon the litera scripta of the statute as they found it, but there is in this opinion a suggestion that if the law had provided otherwise that expression would have been found on the face of the law, and the court would certainly have executed it; but as to the reasonableness, or the unreasonableness of a provision for the payment of the interest as the interest fell due, there is nothing in this opinion that I have been able to discover whatever. Here is the opinion; I have looked it over and read it carefully.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not read it lately, but it seems to me the honorable Senator from Illinois, (then on the Supreme Bench,) whom I regret is not in his seat, proceeded at length to show the great character of the enterprise, and what the Government was intending to do in regard to it and what the motive of the Government was.

Mr. BAYARD. He did, no doubt.

Mr. BLAINE. I think the Senator from Illinois delivered what would be a most extraordinarily good speech in the Senate on that point, and which was much clearer to my mind than the one which he delivered afterward in the Senate on the subject.

Mr. BAYARD. I said merely what they claimed to decide was the language used by the Legislature, but as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of it, as to the improvidence or providence of it, the court said nothing.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not the decision here and of course cannot refer to it.

Mr. BAYARD. I have it here, and I think that the Senator will not find anything in it in the shape of an opinion that any legislation to have provided for the payment of interest would have been wise or otherwise.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not see that that is material at all.

Mr. MATTHEWS. If the Senator from Maine will allow me a moment, I think he is entirely correct in this fact at least, that the Supreme Court went into the question of the history and utility of the enterprise to fortify the reasonableness of their construction of the law.

Mr. BAYARD. As they found it. They said they had nothing to do with the wisdom of it or otherwise; that they simply decided it according to their duty, (I forget the precise phrase); that they interpreted the language of the Legislature as they found it and after that they had no duty to perform.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not 1 Otto here, but if I had I should like to read the opinion of the court, because I think if my memory is not at fault it travels very far outside of the literal and exact point that the Senator from Delaware would rein it down to.

Mr. BAYARD. I think the Senator will find stronger words than I have used there.

Mr. BLAINE. That may be. I now have the opinion. Now I will read briefly from it:

Many of the provisions in the original act of 1862 are outside of the usual course of legislative action concerning grants to railroads, and cannot be properly construed without reference to the circumstances which existed when it passed. The war of the rebellion was in progress; and owing to the complications with England, the country had become alarmed for the safety of our Pacific possessions—

I am reading from the opinion of the Supreme Court—

The loss of them was feared in case those complications should result in an open rupture; but, even if this fear were groundless, it was quite apparent that we were unable to furnish that degree of protection to the people occupying them which every government owes to its citizens—

That is setting forth more tersely and eloquently than I did the exact position under which I gave my vote for that act—

It is true the threatened danger was happily averted; but wisdom pointed out the necessity of making suitable provisions for the future. This could be done in no better way than by the construction of a railroad across the continent. Such a road would bind together the widely separated parts of our common country, and furnish a cheap and expeditious mode for the transportation of troops and supplies—

I am surprised to see how accurately and even literally I interpreted Judge DAVIS—

If it did nothing more than afford the required protection to the Pacific States, it was felt that the Government, in the performance of an imperative duty, could not justly withhold the aid necessary to build it; and so strong and pervading was this opinion that it is by no means certain that the people would not have justified Congress if it had departed from the then settled policy of the country regarding works of internal improvement, and charged the Government itself with the direct execution of the enterprise.

Mr. BAYARD. At page 81 the Senator will find the language to which I referred.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh! that may be. I did not at all deny that what the Senator quoted was correct, but I stated that the whole opinion was based on precisely the argument I submitted that justified Congress in the passage of the act, the whole of it.

Mr. BAYARD. And when the court came to construe this statute they used language such as I stated.

Mr. BLAINE. The court construed the language taking in all the circumstances which surrounded the act as wise courts always will, of course. We are not to-day disputing practically about the payment of the interest. The Senate is pretty well agreed that these companies can repay it. I think the companies are quite willing to pay it. At all events Congress is quite resolved that they shall pay it. But I return simply to the point I set out upon. After you have laid down your own terms, after you have written upon a white sheet of paper the precise exactions that you demand of these companies, while you stand in the full possession of a power which you will not permit even to be questioned, why do you not accompany it with at least the assurance that the exercise of that power shall be with a fair and honorable understanding that if the companies faithfully comply with your conditions, they shall be allowed to go forward to do their own work, to build up their own great enterprise, and pay off their entire obligations to the Government without fear of interference, without being threatened or menaced or disturbed or hurried or worried. It seems to me that that is the wise course for Congress to take, and it is wholly in that spirit that I have offered the amendment which is now pending.

Mr. SARGENT. I understood the Senator from Delaware to state that at this decision of the Supreme Court everybody was surprised.

Mr. BAYARD. I did not say everybody. I said that I believed it took the great body of the American people by surprise.

Mr. SARGENT. I am surprised at that statement when the fact is apparent by the records of the Senate that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate as early as 1871 took exactly the same position that the Supreme Court did in this decision.

Mr. BAYARD. I know the Judiciary Committee of the Senate or a portion of it came in here with a report, which astounded me at the time, to the effect that this interest-money, paid out semi-annually from the Treasury, could not be recovered from the railroad companies for thirty years. Although that opinion was given, yet it was not for some time afterward that an amendment to an appropriation bill, which I think was prepared by the Senator from Vermont, provided that these companies should come into the Court of Claims and prove their right to receive one-half of the transportation-money which had been withheld.

Mr. THURMAN. Two years afterward.

Mr. BAYARD. I voted for that because I could not believe that when they came before the court such a decision would be reached. My ignorance was probably owing to my want of familiarity with the terms of these statutes, passed long before I came into Congress. When the Supreme Court, affirming the decision of the Court of Claims, came to the conclusion they did I was one of the very many people of this country who were amazed and sorrowed to find that while $3,000,000 annually and upward were passing away from the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the stockholders of these corporations, there was to be no means of repayment upon that vast sum until thirty years had elapsed. Yet I believe the Supreme Court, following the statute as they found it, construing it strictly as they did, were unable, as the power to "alter, amend, and repeal" had not been exercised by Congress, to come to any other conclusion. That is what I meant, by saying that I was surprised at the result.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who reports this bill, concurred with that report of the Judiciary Committee in 1871. So far as I can find out, only one member dissented from it, and that was the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] But in his altercation or discussion the other day with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] the Senator from Vermont seemed to object to the construction which the Senator from Massachusetts put upon that opinion of the Judiciary Committee of 1871. Any one who looks at the running debate that took place at that time will find himself somewhat puzzled to know whether the Senator from Vermont believed in the report of the committee or did not believe in it. But where the law committee of this body report that the view which the Supreme Court subsequently took was the correct one I do not see the ground of surprise of Senators that the Supreme Court should subsequently take a position which agreed with that of the law committee of the body. The legislation which subsequently took place was entirely in accordance with the opinion of that committee, because it did not legislate, as has been asserted here over and over again, that this money should be paid, but simply submitted the question to the Supreme Court whether or not it should be paid until the maturity of the debt.

One single remark further. It has been said over and over again, and the Senator from Delaware now repeats it, that the United States is out $3,000,000 annually and that there is no way to get this money back before the maturity of the bonds, &c., and he looks upon that as a great hardship. Without the railroad the Government would be out $8,000,000 annually, with no power ever to get it back, because the amount of transportation has been done so much more cheaply to the Government on account of the security against Indian wars, on account of the cheap and rapid transmission of the mails, to say nothing of the new States and Territories. The Senator from Delaware talks about enhancing the resources of the Government. The great amount which was saved by the Government would have been otherwise paid in transportation of various kinds, necessary to be carried on upon an immense scale, and not a dollar of it ever would have come back to the Government except in the incidental advantage derived from the transportation. Therefore I say, when the finger is continually pointed to the fact that the Government, under the terms of this contract, is paying some $3,000,000 or more interest annually, which is not to be repaid until the maturity of the bonds, its consideration for doing that was that the companies would render to it the great benefits which have been realized from the road, and which are named in the decision of the Supreme Court as the exciting motive of Congress in granting the aid.

Mr. BAYARD. With due respect to the honorable Senator from California, who has followed out to-day very much the same train and track of his remarks of Friday last, he seems to consider that these companies have created, and generously given to the people of the United States, the enormous advantages of transportation for their mails and their war supplies, to which he has referred. Whose property was this road built by? Whose land did it pass through? Whose bonds paid for it? The people of America were the owners of all that property, and if they have gained advantage it has been by the use of their own estate. These roads were not chartered for the benefit of individuals; they were chartered for the development of national resources and for national ends. Therefore just as well might we thank the man who would pay over to another a small portion of his honest debt, and say how generous it was without pausing to say whose money and whose estate was the object of all this liberality. Of course the Government has availed itself of these roads. Of course the great agency of steam, and the intercommunication, has enabled it to transport mails, and troops, and supplies for those troops, at great advantage; but is that due to these corporations whom it has employed to develop its own resources? You might as well credit them with the invention of steam itself, as to give them credit for this money so saved. Whatever they have done and done faithfully, I am disposed sincerely to admit and acknowledge and thank them for; but it does seem to me that the great underlying idea, in aid of which the companies were incorporated and these national grants made, is constantly overlooked. It was the use of the people's money for the sake of the people. So far as the agent, the trustee, shall faithfully execute his trust, let him be thanked by the people, rewarded by their gratitude and their confidence given him, or if already given, continued; but let it not be forgotten, that we are dealing from first to last with the property of the people of the United States, put in trust for their use. If this investment shall redound to the benefit of the United States as a Government, as well as to its citizens as individuals, then it has been amply successful. If those persons employed in the agency shall receive large profits from it, I shall be exceedingly pleased. I am not disposed to begrudge them any advantage, any honor, any thanks that may be due them; but from the first to the last, I shall endeavor to keep in my mind in voting in regard to this bill and the great subject to which it relates, the fact that it is a public measure, the great object of which is public welfare, and that everything else is subordinate and purely incidental.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not rise to make anything like a set speech, and I should not rise at all but for some remarks that were made by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] I shall dispose of them, and then I shall take my seat.

I found myself duly notified in the morning papers that my scalp was to be taken to-day and hung at the belt of the Senator from Maine; but feeling my head now it feels very sound indeed, I think, both inside and out; and I think, Mr. President, that it will be a good while before the Senator from Maine can get what little hair there is on my head by mousing around among the Congressional Globes and CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS to try and find something inconsistent between what I may have once said and what I say to-day. I submit to that Senator that such an occupation is totally beneath his great powers. I am a very Lilliputian man to him now; but yet with what little brains God has granted to me, I should feel infinitely humiliated if I went searching around among the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and Congressional Globes to try and convict a Senator of some inconsistency of speech or thought in the haste of language in debate as a means of defeating a great measure that ought to stand or fall on its own merits and not on the personal consistency of an individual. I do think there is something else that was a little remarkable in the observations of the Senator from Maine. Last Thursday, at the close of the day, when more than half the Senators had started home, and when I was about to start too, and the farthest thing in the world from my thoughts was that I should enter into any discussion, the Senator from Maine and two or three others got around me and stood up and put questions to me as if I were subject to a cross-examination by the whole Senate upon what was the law of the land, and what were ethics, and what was history, and what was everything else, until at last I had to tell the Senator that we were not in the Middle Ages when a man went to a city and published a defiance to everybody to come and debate with him and put questions to him, he affirming that he would answer them all. I was compelled to tell the Senator that I was no Admirable Crichton to be catechised in that way. In the heat of that discussion I confess that for a moment I lost my temper, so much so that I was perhaps guilty of a little rudeness to my most estimable friend who sits on my right [Mr. EATON] and which I have regretted ever since. Because at that very moment I did not recollect that I had taken any part in the debate of 1873, the Senator now comes forward to convict me of what? Of a failure of memory under such circumstances as that, and, to make the failure the more significant, he says that I spoke thirty-one times on that act of 1873. How does he count up his thirty-one times? I will give the Senate a specimen of how he makes out thirty-one speeches.

Mr. BLAINE. "Appeared" was the word I used.

Mr. THURMAN. Oh, well, "appeared." I appeared all the time; I was here all the while.

Mr. BLAINE. Not in the Globe.

Mr. THURMAN. I appeared here in my own person. But here is the kind of speeches that the Senator from Ohio made which served to make up the thirty-one times:

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The amendment was moved by the Senator from Nevada in the Senate. I am speaking of the amendment of 1871.

That was an observation to correct my friend, Mr. Stevenson, and that is one of "Mr. THURMAN's" speeches. Again further on, after Mr. Stevenson had spoken again, "Mr. THURMAN" said:

Not at all. It was moved by the Senator from Nevada on my right, [Mr. STEWART.] It was very largely debated.

That is speech No. 2. Then going along further, Mr. Stevenson still speaking, "Mr. THURMAN" said:

If my friend will allow me to get through he will find that he is jumping before he gets to the stile. If the House did not agree to this amendment, how in the name of sense did it become a law?

That is speech No. 3. Then further along, Mr. Stevenson still speaking, "Mr. THURMAN" said:

No, I do not.

That is speech No. 4. Then further "Mr. THURMAN" said:

I have not given up the floor yet.

That is speech No. 5; and so on. There are several other of these speeches which perhaps I ought to read. Here is one where I said:

Where is that?

And another:

On what page of the Globe?

This is the way in which the Senator from Maine attempts to defeat the Judiciary Committee's bill by using more arithmetic in a count of the number of times my name appeared in the Globe than he does in answering the Judiciary Committee's bill.

So much, Mr. President, for that. I have regretted to see in this debate from the beginning that scarcely any one has opposed the bill of the Judiciary Committee without in some way or other seeming to cast reflections upon that committee. I alluded to it once, and it was intimated that certainly I did not claim that Senators were not to exercise their own judgment. Certainly I never did claim any such thing. I said then that I claim no infallibility for the Judiciary Committee. Every Senator has a perfect right to disagree with it, and it is his duty to express his opinions if he does disagree with it. Neither that committee nor any member of the committee has assumed any superiority in this body, if I know it. I certainly have not observed it; but yet there was in the tone in which the committee was spoken of and in which the measure was spoken of, and of late, I am sorry to say, in which its personnel is spoken of, something that is a little unusual in this body. This morning, not content with an attack upon the committee generally, the Senator from Maine has seen fit to come in and single out the Senator from Ohio and to some extent the Senator from Vermont, and he has said in his peculiarly forcible and dramatic style that the Senator from Ohio has occupied four positions on this subject within the last seven years, and then by way of witticism he intimates that if this bill passes the Senator from Ohio may occupy seven different positions in the next four years.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no, I said that some other Senator may.

Mr. THURMAN. "Some other Senator." Well, he might just as well have said "the Senator from Ohio," for if the Senator from Ohio has shown such a facility for changing, and can change four times in seven years, the probability is that he would be the man who would change seven times in the next four years.

Mr. BLAINE. But I did not say that.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I defy any man in the world who reasons fairly to point out the slightest inconsistency between my course to-day and that on any previous occasion. There is none whatever. It is all in the imagination of the Senator from Maine. About what were we talking when I spoke the words that he read to the Senate to-day? We were talking about the right of the Government to withhold the half-transportation account then due to these companies. We were not in the slightest degree talking about any amendment to the charter. Not a word about that were we talking of. Mr. Akerman had given his opinion as Attorney-General that the Government had a right to set off the interest which it paid against the half-transportation account, which by the act of 1864 was to be paid to the companies. The companies denied that that was the law. They petitioned Congress on the subject. The matter was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. That committee, by a vote of 6 to 1, decided that Mr. Akerman was wrong, that there was no such right of set-off on the part of the Government, and accordingly they reported a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury, who had withheld the half-transportation account to pay it to the companies to whom it belonged under the then existing law. The Senator says that I agreed to that report. So I did; and I stand by it to-day, and say that it was good law. It has been affirmed by the Judiciary Committee of the House, by both Houses of Congress, by the unanimous decision of the Court of Claims and the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I think that is sufficient to establish that it was good law. I stand by that.

But then he said I was inconsistent with that because afterward I was in favor of submitting the question to a judicial determination. I was in favor of submitting it to a judicial determination from the first. When the resolution was under consideration, reported by the Judiciary Committee in 1871, I drew up an amendment to submit the question to the Court of Claims, so that it might not rest upon any legislative interpretation of the law but upon a judicial determination.

In 1873 I did nothing more than what I attempted to do in 1871, to have a judicial determination not of the question whether Congress could alter, amend, or repeal—I should have as soon thought of denying the Decalogue as to deny that—but a judicial determination of what were the rights of the companies as the law then stood to the money which was in the Treasury of the United States, and which was claimed by the companies, but refused to be paid over by the Secretary of the Treasury; that was all. That resolution passed. It gave great dissatisfaction; it gave such dissatisfaction that in 1873 some Senator, and I think it was the Senator from Vermont or my late colleague, Mr. Sherman, for they were both very much opposed to that opinion of the Judiciary Committee, proposed that that thing should be litigated, and consequently introduced a bill to repeal that direction of the act of 1871, the money still not having been paid over, and to make a case for the courts to decide. Of course I was in favor of that. Of course as I was in favor of it in 1871 so I was in favor of it then. So that instead of there being any inconsistency whatever I was perfectly consistent throughout the whole consideration, both in 1871 and in 1873.

Then, where is there any inconsistency now? There is not one word in the bill of the Judiciary Committee that is inconsistent with the resolution of 1871 or with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Those who are opposed to this bill have been challenged again and again to show one line, one letter in the decision of the Supreme Court in the interest case in 1 Otto that conflicts in the slightest degree with the bill which is now before the Senate, and nobody has ever shown any such thing.

I am not accustomed to waste the time of the Senate with talks about myself, and much less about my own consistency. The only complaint that ever has been made against me, so far as I know, connected with political life, is that I have been too consistent, that I have been too hard-headed, well-baked an old democrat and not given to change. That is the only thing complained of, that I am too obstinate an old fellow in that respect and not given to change according as the current may flow or the wind may blow.

But if I were disposed to be a little personal, which I am not, if I were disposed to drag personalities into this discussion, I should like the Senator from Maine to explain this little record which I hold in my hand. Two years ago, on the 7th day of July, 1876, the House of Representatives passed a sinking-fund bill known as the Lawrence bill and sent it to the Senate. It was a bill upon which that committee had worked very long, very long indeed, and made a most elaborate report as early as April 25, 1876. That bill finally came to a vote three months afterward. That committee had reported a bill far more severe than the bill now before the Senate, far more severe than the bill subsequently reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate—Senate bill No. 15, which I introduced last October, and had again referred to that committee. They reported that bill far more severe, I say, though it asserted as fully as it could possibly assert the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this charter, and imposing on these companies conditions far more onerous than any bill that ever has been reported to the Senate. That bill passed the House of Representatives on the 7th day of July, 1876, by a vote of yeas 159, nays 9. But, Mr. President, where was the eloquence of the Senator from Maine then? Why was it not exercised, he who exercised such great power in that body over which he had presided so long? Why did he not thunder then? If that bill, which asserted so strongly the right of alteration, amendment, or repeal, and preserved it, was wrong, why did he not then tell the House, "You will make this a foot-ball of stock-gamblers of all sorts and descriptions for all time to come if you pass this bill?" Why did he not warn them of these dangers which he has so eloquently depicted to-day? No, Mr. President, he was mute as the lamb before the shearer. Not one word do I find that he ever uttered against that bill, and when it came to the voting he was like Job's friends. He said that his friends were like the waters of the brook: "What time they wax warm they vanish; when it is hot they are consumed out of their place." He did not vote at all, and I should not be—no, I will not say that—but it may possibly happen that when the vote comes on this bill the Senator from Maine may have business elsewhere, or, which God forbid, may not be in a good state of health!

Mr. President, if we were to go into personalities, which I eschew, I do not want to go into, I might refer to my friend from California. I am sorry he is not here. He has been a little warm on the subject of this Judiciary Committee bill, and he seems to think that we are a very exacting set of fellows, and that we are going a good deal too far. Why, Mr. President, how did the Judiciary Committee of this body ever get jurisdiction of this subject? Who first gave it jurisdiction? Who gave it jurisdiction before that Lawrence bill came from the House? Months before that bill came from the House, who gave it jurisdiction? I will read and show you. On the 6th day of January, 1876—

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, it was Resolved by the Senate—

Now, I beg the attention of Senators to what was the resolution—
That the Committee on the Judiciary—

Not the Railroad Committee. He did not want them to have anything to do with it—

That the Committee on the Judiciary are instructed to inquire what legislation, if any, is necessary to secure indemnity to the United States for advances of interest paid and to be paid by the Government on account of subsidy bonds issued to the several Pacific Railroad Companies, and to secure indemnity against liability to pay the principal of such bonds—

By what? Now, mark you, by what—by requiring the creation of sinking funds, or otherwise. Also, whether the issues of the companies' mortgage bonds under the act of 1864 were in excess of the amount necessary for the completion of said roads; and, if so, whether such issues are a first lien upon the roads. Also, whether any of the bonds of the United States issued in aid of said roads are a first lien on the same. And that the committee report by bill or otherwise.

He set us to work to find out what was necessary to indemnify the Government of the United States for the interest paid and to be paid, and also to secure it against loss. And not only that, but he started an investigation or attempted to start it, to see whether or not these first-mortgage bonds, instead of being used as necessary for the construction of the road, had not been actually put into the pockets of the shareholders, and therefore were not in equity or morale, or perhaps in law, a first lien on the road at all, and whether we ought not to assert that the Government debt was the first lien. But now, now forsooth, when we talk about getting indemnity; now when we talk about a repayment of the principal and interest of the subsidy bonds, we are told that Mr. White or some other pale-colored individual in the House of Representatives in 1862 or 1864 thought in his wisdom that the Government might as well make these roads and lend this money and never ask repayment. What if Mr. White or Mr. Black or Mr. Brown or Mr. Yellow or Mr. Red did think so? The answer to that and to all talk about how much the Government has saved by the construction of this railroad in its transportation account is that Congress took that into consideration. But that was not all. Congress took these patriotic motives into consideration, to which the Senator from Maine has alluded. But that was not enough. Congress was not willing to be paid in patriotism. It is not legal tender or current coin in the transaction of business. Congress was not willing to be paid in savings on its transportation account. It gave enough for patriotism, and in that respect did wisely; it gave enough bonus in land and in the advantages of this loan with no rests in the calculation of interest for all the benefit that the roads could be to the Government in saving transportation, and having given enough it said to these companies, "You are to repay this money which we loan to you, both principal and interest." So it is said in the law, and there is the end of the whole matter.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Maine says that we have written down here in this Judiciary Committee bill on a white sheet of paper what we demand; why not make it a fixed finality at least until the maturity of the bonds? I tell him the bill is framed upon no such idea. If it were the terms of this bill would be very different from what they are. What would he have? Does he know what is to be the operation of this bill if it should pass, say, for instance, upon the Union Pacific? Taking its business for the last six years and supposing its business in the future to be the same, how much will it have to pay into the sinking fund? Only a little over a half million dollars. The half-transportation account on the past average will amount to $421,000, and it will have but $100,000 in cash to pay. Now the Senator, upon such a payment as that into the sinking fund, the payment of half a million dollars a year, proposes that Congress should tie up its hands for twenty years and make a bargain with this company that shall be irrevocable. If such an amendment as that of the Senator from Maine should be inserted in this bill, it would be the best bargain this company ever made. The idea will not do at all.

But, Mr. President, away down below that lies the principle of the thing. I affirm, as I have affirmed before, that this Government had better lose every dollar due and all that is to become due to it by these companies than to give up that right which it has to alter, amend, or repeal the charter. The amendment of the Senator from Maine is the worst attack upon this bill that could be made. He knows very well that with that provision fastened on to this bill the bill would not only not be worth the paper on which it is written, but it would be far worse than nothing; he knows that that would be a fatal death-blow given to this bill.

Mr. President, let no one deceive himself about this; let no one imagine he can be a friend of the Judiciary Committee bill and at the same time a friend to the amendment of the Senator from Maine. The amendment of the Senator from Maine is prussic acid to this bill. It cannot survive a day, not an hour perhaps, after that amendment is adopted. It is a stab at the very heart of the bill; it is as fatal as any stab could possibly be. I hope, therefore, the friends of this bill, those who mean to make these companies live up to their obligation, do what they assumed to do; those who mean that these companies shall know that the Government is their master and they are not the masters of the Government, will see that no such poison is taken into this bill as the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, when I rose this morning I intended only to correct by the Senator's own record what he so positively, of course through lack of memory, denied on Thursday last. I had hoped to do it on Friday, and seeing the Senator on Friday afternoon about to leave the Chamber as I thought, I said to him that I was intending to make a remark personal to himself. He had been busily engaged polling the Senate on the Judiciary bill with a list of the yeas and nays in his hand. I notified him that I was going to make the allusion and he took notice and said that he would be in his seat. The Senator nods remembrance of that. The next thing I heard of it, it appeared in the democratic paper this morning that I was going to take his scalp, which I supposed was a modest way of the Senator advertising through his own party organ that he was going to take mine.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator forgets—

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly he does not suppose I was on such terms with the Washington Post as to secure that favorable notice. It must have grown out of the intimacy he has with that paper.

Mr. THURMAN. That is very clever; but the Senator must remember that on this question the Post is on his side and against me.

Mr. BLAINE. That may be; but the Senator will see that the Post is not on my side politically. As I happen to read that lively sheet every morning, I discover a great many adulatory comments on the Senator from Ohio; but the keenest eye has thus far failed to disclose any of that kind of references to myself; so that I think the judgment of the Senate will be that that notice did not get into the Post through me.

The Senator talks about this mousing around in the records! What do we have records for? What do we preserve the Globe for? The Senator went elaborately over all the little speeches he delivered in that debate. He says one speech was merely calling the attention of Mr. Stevenson to this, and another speech was calling the attention of the Senator from Vermont to that. Why, the speeches of the Senator from Ohio, recalled with some humor, show that, in addition to his long speeches which he did not quote, he was wide-awake during the whole debate, and that he was interpolating a remark here and there in everybody's speech. But not only did he fail to remember his long speeches which he did not refer to during the whole of his remarks just delivered, but he was putting a finger in everybody's pie, correcting Mr. Stevenson on one point, suggesting another point to my friend from Vermont, prompting the Senator from Delaware in another place, and generally, if I might use a coarse phrase, bossing the debate; and five years afterward, when I ventured modestly to remind the Senator of his declarations, he says: "I never said a word at all in that debate." Then when he attempts to put me down in the Senate by his absolute denial, and I bring the Globe in, he says he would not go mousing around; and, finally, he puts in my personal record by showing what I did or failed to do on Mr. William Lawrence's bill in the House of Representatives on the 7th of July, 1876. I think the Senator did leave a little wicket of escape open for himself on that personal charge, but he did it in so indirect and blind a manner that the Senate would not exactly comprehend it, but did it, I think, enough to suggest to me, unimportant as is my personal history, that I had not then for a month been in the House of Representatives; that I was on a bed of sickness from which some friends at last thought I might never rise, and that, so far from having anything to answer for about the bill of Mr. William Lawrence, I did not know that it or any other bill was pending in the House of Representatives. So much for that.

And now the Senator says he would rather lose this bill than have my amendment; that it is prussic acid to it. I went to the honorable Senator in the confidence of the friendly relations which across the political line have existed between us, and had a full and frank talk with him about this bill. I asked him "How near will this bill come to paying this mortgage by the maturity of the bonds?" He said it would leave some $20,000,000 to each road.

Mr. THURMAN. No; about $35,000,000 for the two. I said nearly $40,000,000 for the two.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I am correct; about $20,000,000 for each road. I took the Union Pacific because it is regarded as the less strong of the two roads. The Central Pacific is the wealthier, and I was illustrating on that. I said then, taking the Senator's own figures, this only leaves at the maturity of the mortgage, counting in the first mortgage above the Government, $47,000,000 on a road that is absolutely now paying 7 per cent. on $90,000,000, and I said that security must be ample; and then the honorable Senator will remember that, endeavoring to be as frank as I could, I suggested this amendment to him in my own house. I said "Your bill has many good features. The amount of it I think is not exorbitant. You state that what will remain is so small as to be beyond peradventure secure. Now make your bill a finality and you will get a large vote for it." I suggested that to the Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes; but the Senator will do me the justice to say that I did not agree at all to his amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course it is dangerous ground and I will not venture any further on private conversations. I think the Senator was not half so obdurate then as he is in the Senate now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was it after dinner?

Mr. BLAINE. No, sir; it was before dinner.

Mr. THURMAN. I can only say to the Senator that his recollection is at fault, for I told him I never could agree to such an amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator desire me to state what my recollection of that conversation is?

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator can state what he pleases about it if he thinks proper to do so; but I do affirm that I told the Senator then I could never agree to that amendment and never would.

Mr. BLAINE. I never desire to refer to a private conversation, although my recollection of it does not wholly agree with that of the Senator. The Senator, as I say, stated to me—let us take the points that are public which affect that—there would be only $20,000,000 left. Then I said to him, "You ought to make it a finality, because you have got ample security." Now he says it is prussic acid and he would rather lose the bill than agree to it. I admit it is prussic acid to all agitation of the subject; it is prussic acid not only to Wall-street agitation but to political agitation; it ends the whole matter. The stalking horse of "great corporations" dies instantly. There is nothing left of it if this amendment is put in, and the Senator himself knows that I offered the amendment in perfect and entire good faith, else why should I have consulted him the very first man about it?

Mr. THURMAN. I have not impeached the good faith of the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. I offered it in entire good faith, and rather than have any suspicion this moment that something remarkable was withheld of the private conversation which has been referred to, I desire to say in all frankness that I understood the Senator to object to my amendment, but not to object to it as strenuously as he does now, and that he said it would in any event be impossible ever to get the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. EDMUNDS] to agree to it, and that that made the thing impossible. That is what I understood that conversation to be, and that was all of it.

Mr. THURMAN. That is like your inference of my inconsistency.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the way I understood the conversation to be. It is better to have it out than to have it merely intimated with exaggerated inferences. It was a very innocent and honorable conversation, and the Senator will remember it was entirely friendly, as certainly I mean no remark I made this morning to be otherwise. Every solitary word that has been said in this debate since, every exposition of this bill that has been made since, everything that has been suggested pro and con has enforced upon my mind with still more urgency and still more strength the propriety of taking a bill that does pay off everything but $20,000,000, leaving the amplest security for that $20,000,000, and calling it a finality. Absolute in any event? Not at all; but absolute if the companies faithfully comply. Who is to be the judge of that? Congress; and it is a finality only as respects the debt. In every other respect Congress possesses the right to alter and amend and repeal just as if my amendment had never been suggested. This amendment does not touch it at all. It merely says that this settlement will, in a money point of view, secure the Government. We have looked it all over; and if your companies shall pay these sums the Government will be entirely secure in its mortgage debt. If you will do that and will faithfully comply with these provisions, you may go on until the maturity of the bonds, we reserving the right to legislate in any other direction that our sense of duty may call upon us to do, and reserving of course the right to see that the faithful compliance which we exact of you in these provisions shall not be a meaningless term, but shall be one that we will hold you to by all the powers of the Government. Is that an unreasonable proposition? Is not that the way to encourage the companies to be faithful in their compliance? Is not that the way to make the payment effective and to bring money in the Treasury of the United States? Is it not also the way to make those roads efficient—to make them carry out the great end for which they were incorporated, to carry out the great commercial development of the vast country which they traverse, and in short to secure all the ends aimed at when the Government gave its munificent bounty and imposed upon the railway companies their great responsibilities?

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I shall not ask the indulgence of the Senate for any considerable length of time. The important question presented to us is, has Congress, under the power to alter, amend, and repeal, reserved in these acts the right to legislate as is proposed by the bill of the Judiciary Committee, and, if it has, is it wise and proper that Congress should now bargain that power away to the extent mentioned in the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

Sir, I have no doubt that Congress has the power under this reservation, and I do not think it would be wise or proper for Congress to contract it away for twenty years or any other length of time as proposed.

Has not Congress power to legislate as is proposed by virtue of this reservation to alter, amend, and repeal? I do not understand this corporation created by these acts to be what is ordinarily known in the law as a private corporation. It is not in its character like a corporation created to carry on some private business, like the making of engines, or the manufacturing of cotton or wool. It is a quasi-public corporation, created, and only rightfully created, by Congress, because it was to carry out a public purpose and object. The intent in making this munificent grant of lands which belonged to the people of the United States, of making this most advantageous loan of the people's money, to these corporations was to effect a public, not a private purpose. Had Congress the right to donate to a private corporation, in the ordinary sense, twenty-one million acres of the public lands of the people, of great value? Had Congress any right to loan to private corporations over $50,000,000 of money upon most advantageous terms to them, as the law is adjudged by the court to be? I do not understand that Congress had or has any such right, acting for the people of the United States; but Congress may have authority to create a corporation, to delegate to it the right of eminent domain, which cannot be granted to any individual or purely private corporation, to empower it to take a citizen's property without his consent to effect a public purpose. Had Congress a right to make the grants which it did to these corporations, except and because they were agencies of the Federal Government to construct and maintain a public highway from the Mississippi to California, upon which should be transported soldiers, public stores, mails, &c., for the Government, and which should be a quasi-public highway for the people of the United States for all time?

In dealing with this question it has seemed to me important to bear in mind that the corporation was created, and rightfully created, only because it was to effect a great public purpose, and that to enable it to effect this purpose the franchises were granted and the donations and loans were made.

I think, sir, when we come to exercise this power reserved in the comprehensive language which we find in these acts of Congress in reference to a corporation of this character, we certainly have a right to legislate and so control and so regulate its action that it shall subserve the end for which it was created. When we do that we are, as has been well said, legislating to keep it in the very line of duty for which it was created and endowed with property and privileges. Congress in the original charter or acts of Congress creating the corporation did reserve in clear language the right at any time to alter, amend, and repeal those acts. The obvious intent by this reservation was that if the corporation failed to perform the duty which it assumed and was obligated to perform, Congress could add limitations, restrictions, and regulations, and make it perform that duty. To aid the corporation Congress by the act of 1864 allowed it to borrow money on a mortgage which is a prior lien on the road to the lien of the United States.

Now, if Congress ascertains that instead of doing what prudent business men would do, what a well-managed corporation would do, these grantees are misapplying the means in their hands, what is to be done? The debt owing to the United States in the year 1900, as it is computed, will be over $123,000,000, principal and interest; and if the corporations are proceeding to divide their earnings and make no provision for paying that debt, and the other large debt, which comes due at the same time and is secured by a first lien on the property, the road will be sold out on the prior lien and not only will the Government lose its money which was loaned, but the object and purpose of the acts of 1862 and 1864 and of the land grant and loan will be defeated. The corporation was created and the grants made that the people of the United States, not for twenty years but for all time, should have this great highway maintained for the benefit of the Government and people of the United States as well as the stockholders. If now Congress see, as any man must see, that if the corporation refuses to create a fund to pay this $123,000,000 which will be due the Government in the year 1900, refuses to accumulate or provide a fund to pay the debt due the first-mortgage bondholders, the road will be lost for the beneficial purposes which were intended to be derived from it by the Government under the provisions of the charter, and if that is so, if there is danger of this, then under the right to alter, amend, or repeal we can interfere. If the Congress that passed the law did not guard sufficiently against such a result, then if the power reserved means anything of value to the Government, may we not now by amendments require the corporations to set apart as a sinking fund such portion of their annual earnings and of their income as shall pay off the first-mortgage debt at maturity, and which will pay to the Government at least a reasonable portion of this $123,000,000 that will be due for the money loan?

In my judgment we have the right to do so. In my judgment if Congress should grant such an amount of property and such rights and franchises and make such a loan without reserving control over the corporations and their directors to compel them to administer the property so that the road should be preserved and the debts paid, Congress would have failed to do its duty to the Government and people of the United States. It would have neglected to provide any reasonable security to compel the corporations to maintain and operate the railroads and prevent their sale on the first mortgage.

In the proposed legislation Congress will not, in my judgment, violate in letter or spirit the contract contained in the acts of Congress. This legislation is to protect the property of the corporations and compel them to perform their duty to the Government and the public, and I, with great respect to others who may differ from me, cannot see how we impair any contract we made with them by the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. We granted them all these things for this great purpose, this beneficial purpose to the Government and to all the people, that there might be built across this great country connecting the East and the West a great road which should be kept up. And now when a law is proposed which simply says "we are going to require you to administer your affairs and your means so that you shall pay your honest debts, and thereby preserve this road," I cannot understand how this justly can be said to be a breach of any contract made by the acts of Congress with these corporations. We simply make them do what every prudent board of directors should do which means to pay its debts and protect its property; we simply make them do what every prudent business man ought to do who means to pay his debts, not to divide among stockholders or partners all the income from the property, and then when the debt to the Government runs up to over $123,000,000, principal and simple interest, and the first-mortgage debt is due and unpaid to over $50,000, allow the railroad and its appurtenances to be sold. Because Congress will not permit this to be done and proposes to control the action of the boards of directors so there shall be annually set apart a portion of their income as a sinking fund to pay these debts or a portion of them at maturity, it is said we propose to violate the contract made by the Government in creating and making loans to these corporations.

I insist we do no such thing in the sense claimed by the opponents of this bill. The fact that the money for this sinking fund is to be paid into the United States Treasury is in no sense requiring the debt to be paid to the Government before it is due by the contract. The proposed law requires the corporations to pay into the United States Treasury annually a portion of their income, to be invested at semi-annual interest and the interest to be reinvested as it accrues, to make a sinking fund to pay these debts when due. The corporations have the benefit of interest on their money in the sinking fund, compounded semi-annually, while the Government is only to have simple interest on its debt, paid when that debt becomes due in 1900. This is not making these corporations pay the Government debt now or at any time before it is due by the contract. I agree that if a sinking fund is created by act of Congress, as is proposed by this bill, and if through any mismanagement of the Treasury Department the money should be lost, the Government should be the loser. Therefore it is right toward the corporations and wise for the Government and other creditors to have the contributions for this sinking fund paid into the Treasury of the United States and invested by it in a mode which will keep it at interest safe. We are not attempting to make the debt due now and applying the money on the debt, but the money is paid into the United States Treasury as a fund belonging to the corporations, and we give them the benefit of its reinvestment every six months and they will get interest on the interest until the debts are due. I do not think this is breaking the contract or impairing the contract, or acting in bad faith or unfairly toward these corporations. It is a reasonable and proper exercise of the power reserved to the Congress "to alter, amend, or repeal" by the acts of 1862 and 1864.

Sir, the question as to what may be legitimately done by legislation by virtue of a power like this reserved in an act creating a corporation is important to this Government as to the great corporations under consideration in which the Government and people of the United States have so large an interest. It is important in reference to other corporations which have been or may be chartered by Congress. It is important in reference to the creation of corporations by State Legislatures. All the States have granted charters, reserving in some form the right to alter, amend, and repeal them at pleasure. It is a power that has been regarded as of great importance to the welfare of the people, and is often exercised to their advantage, and I know of no case where it has ever been used to destroy the just rights of those incorporated. It has been often exercised to secure the fulfillment by especially these quasi-public corporations of their duties to the public and to their creditors. The very fact that the power exists is a great safeguard to the public and a wholesome restraint upon those controlling corporate powers.

Now, sir, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some cases which have arisen in the State of New York, which have been adjudicated by the courts of that State, and which adjudications have been affirmed by the United States Supreme Court; and I will ask then whether this bill of the Judiciary Committee is as broad and far-reaching an exercise of this reserved power to "alter, amend, and repeal" as was exercised by the Legislature of New York in enacting statutes which have been held to be valid and constitutional by the courts. These statutes were passed by State Legislatures, which are expressly inhibited by the Constitution of the United States from passing any law impairing the obligations of contracts. I will refer to only one or two authorities, because the question has been very fully debated.

In 1838 the Legislature of New York passed an act to authorize the business of banking. I need not state the details of it. It authorized persons to associate and organize a corporation under and by virtue of the act, to deposit securities with the comptroller of the State to secure the payment of the bills issued to circulate as money, and do the business of banking. Now, observe what a contract the Legislature made with the persons who accepted the law and organized a corporation under it. It provided:

That any number of persons may associate to establish offices of discount, deposit, and circulation upon the terms and conditions and subject to the liabilities prescribed in this act. (Section 15 of the act.)

This is a pretty strong provision, that the corporators are to be subject only to the personal liabilities prescribed in the act. It then provides for articles of association to be signed, acknowledged, and filed, and then comes section 23. Now mark it. Here is the contract which the corporators, the stockholders, accept from the State in reference to individual liability:

No shareholder of any such association shall be liable in his individual capacity for any contract, debt, or engagement of such association, unless the articles of association by him signed shall have declared that the shareholder shall be so liable.

The State says to the shareholders, you shall not be personally liable unless you have expressly agreed that you would be for the debts of the corporation.

In 1844 Oliver Lee & Co.'s bank was organized, and the associates in express language provided in the articles of association that they should not be liable in their individual capacity for any of the debts of the corporation, and went into business. The law contained the reservation, which is in this language:

The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

In 1846 New York adopted a new constitution, one provision of which declared that dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporators as may be prescribed by law.

In 1849 the Legislature passed a law to enforce the responsibility of stockholders in certain banking corporations and associations as prescribed in the Constitution, and providing for the prompt payment of debts against such corporations and associations. This provided that where any banking corporation issued bills after the 1st of January, 1850, its stockholders should be individually liable to the amount of their stock, respectively, for the debts contracted after that time. In 1857 the bank became insolvent and proceedings were taken under the law of 1849 to enforce the personal liability of the stockholders. Here is a case where the Legislature made a contract in plain terms, and which, but for the reservation contained in the law to alter, amend, and repeal, the Legislature could not have changed, or impaired, never could have imposed any personal liability on the stockholders. The power to alter, amend, and repeal was reserved, and the Legislature subsequently did impose personal liability on the stockholders for the debts of the corporation. The supreme court of New York held the law constitutional as a legitimate exercise of this reserved power. The court of appeals without dissent, if I recollect aright, affirmed that judgment. The case is reported in 21 New York Reports, 9. The case was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States and the judgment was affirmed. (1 Black's United States Reports, 587.) The only question before the United States court was whether the law imposing the personal liability on the stockholders was constitutional or not. Each of the courts held that under the power reserved the Legislature had authority to pass the law of 1849. Mr. Chief-Justice Denio, a very conservative and able judge, delivered the opinion of the court of appeals of New York. He and the court held that under this reserved power the Legislature had authority to pass the law imposing upon the stockholders this personal liability for the debts of the corporation. In his opinion, he says:

The question before us is, therefore, narrowed to a consideration of the effect of the provision in the general banking law by which the right is in terms reserved to the Legislature to alter or repeal it at any time.

The court held that the Legislature could by virtue of this reserved power alter and change the contract made by the charter with the corporators, that they should not be individually responsible for the debts of the corporation so as to make them responsible for such debts. The court of appeals of New York decided in this case that the provision of the general banking law reserving to the Legislature the power to alter or repeal formed a part of the contract with every association organized under that act, and that the State could modify it without infringing the Federal Constitution against laws impairing the obligations of contracts. It was urged upon the court that some of the stockholders in corporations organized prior to 1850, had become such, relying on the provision of the charter that they were not to be individually held for the debts of the corporation; and that they could not prevent the corporation continuing to circulate bills after January 1, 1850. But the court answered this, saying in substance, that although they could not prevent the corporation from continuing to issue bills, after January 1, 1850, by which the personal liability attached under the act of 1849, nevertheless the latter act was one which the Legislature by virtue of the power reserved in the charter had constitutional power to pass.

There is another case decided by the courts of New York. This arose under a special charter. In 1834 the Legislature created by a special act what was known as one of the safety-fund banks. The charter was in the ordinary form, creating and granting power to the corporation to carry on the business of banking without any individual liability of the stockholders for the debts of the corporation. The act of incorporation contained a provision that the Legislature might at any time alter, modify, or repeal the same. This corporation continued its business after this law of 1849 and became insolvent; and the stockholders were made liable under the last-mentioned law. The case was decided after the court had decided the case of the Oliver Lee & Co.'s bank above referred to but before that decision had been affirmed by the United States Supreme Court. It is reported in 22 New York Court of Appeals Reports, 9. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case, Mr. Justice Comstock says:

Within the power here reserved the Legislature would have the right to pass the statute of 1849 and to impose the very liability now in question, even if the constitution of 1846 had never been adopted. This proposition was necessarily involved and was determined in the case of Oliver Lee & Company's Bank. In holding that a personal liability could be lawfully imposed upon the shareholders in that bank the decision was placed upon the reserved right to alter or repeal the general act under which it was incorporated.

These cases were decided by the court of appeals of New York and by the United States Supreme Court on the ground that the reservation of a power to the Legislature to alter, amend, and repeal the act under which the corporation is organized and by which the government grants and the corporation accepts and receives rights and privileges authorizes the Legislature subsequently to change the law and impose heavy liabilities upon the corporation and its stockholders from which they were in express terms exempted by the act of incorporation.

Now, sir, looking at these adjudications as to State laws and remembering that here the question is simply whether Congress may require this corporation to so manage its business, to so husband its earnings or a portion of its earnings and income that it shall maintain and operate the road forever and shall pay back when it becomes due the large loan made to it by the Government with simple interest, it seems to me that the bill of the Judiciary Committee is clearly within the scope of the power reserved to Congress by the acts of 1862 and 1864 if anything of value is retained by the reservations. The Judiciary bill merely controls the corporation in the administration of its property. Certainly when you remember that the United States courts have decided that a State may legitimately require a railroad corporation to take less fare or freight than was authorized by the charter, being a State law under which it was organized, we are simply legislating so that the corporate property shall be preserved for the benefit of the public as well as the stockholders, so that the debts of the corporation shall be paid when due, and the railroad shall not be sold on the first mortgage, to the detriment of creditors and stockholders. It is for the benefit of both creditors and stockholders that there should be a sinking fund created from the annual receipts of the corporations to meet the debts when these enormous debts become due at a future day.

This is a measure of common prudence; one which, if the stockholders could not or would not inaugurate, through their board of directors, their entire property might be sold and sacrificed without even paying the just debts of the corporation. The property would have to be sold on the mortgage, and we all know how a few men of large wealth can then become the owners of a railroad at less than one-half of its real value.

I submit, therefore, that this bill is right and should become a law. It is not a law in violation of the contract of loan made by the Government with these corporations. This bill does not assume to make that debt due now or a day sooner than it is payable by the terms of the act of Congress, which is the only contract on the part of the Government. It is a law in aid of carrying that act into effect, promoting the performance of the obligations and duty which the corporations assumed and which the public good demands. If Congress had loaned this money, payable with simple interest in the year 1900, to the amount of $123,000,000, and had not reserved power to regulate and control the corporations so they should not waste the property or divert it from the public use for which it was intended, then Congress, in my judgment, would have failed in its duty to the people of the United States.

I have only a suggestion or two more to make. I believe that Congress should not have passed the acts of 1862 and 1864 without reserving this power over the corporations created and granted privileges and property thereby for an important public purpose and to promote the public good, I do not think we should now bargain or contract this power away. The power in Congress to control and regulate these corporations should be retained that these corporations may be required by the exercise of this power, if necessary, to discharge all the obligations they assumed to their creditors and to the public. There is no danger that there will be harsh or unjust legislation by Congress toward them. There should not be. I would not unite in any legislation that looked to me like dealing unjustly or unfairly with either of these companies. It is dealing justly with them and right toward the people of the United States not to permit them to make large dividends to stockholders while they make no provision for paying their just debts at maturity. They cannot complain of Congress requiring them out of their income to provide a sinking fund which shall pay the Government and all other creditors the amounts owing them at maturity.

I think we owe it to those we represent, we owe it to the Government, we owe it to the stockholders, that Congress should retain the power to intervene where it is necessary to preserve the property, to preserve the road, to have it kept in running order, to have the stockholders own it after the debts are paid, and to prevent its being sold on the mortgages. I shall therefore vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] by which it is proposed to contract by this bill with these corporations in reference to the exercise of this reserved power by Congress in the future. I believe that Congress has legitimate power to pass the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, and that it is important for the public good and just to these corporations that this bill shall become a law, and hence I shall vote for its passage.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] to the twelfth section of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. THURMAN. With my friend's permission, I wish to say that several Senators who are quite unwell and wish to go home, have asked me if I would request a vote to-day. Knowing that there are several Senators who want to speak, and who are not well enough to sit out the bill to-night, I said to them that I should not ask for any vote either on the bill or on the amendments to-day, but would ask the Senate to-morrow to finish the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that the Senate adjourn. The Senator from Vermont does not want to go on till to-morrow.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will give way I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I prefer not; but I will withdraw my motion that the Senator may test the sense of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to say a few words.

Mr. CONKLING. I withdraw my motion for a moment to renew it after the Senator from California concludes.

Mr. SARGENT. During my temporary absence from the Chamber the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] called attention to a resolution I introduced in January, 1876, which he seemed to consider somewhat inconsistent with the position I have taken on this bill. Before I left the Chamber I had heard the Senator declare that he did not intend to use the amount of brains that God had given to him for the purpose of mousing through the RECORD; that he would consider himself humiliated if he turned over the pages of that venerable volume for the purpose of detecting inconsistencies in his opponents, and he thought a great measure like this ought not to be opposed by such means. I am compelled to the inference that my friend thinks it is perfectly right to oppose amendments to the bill by the same process of mousing through the RECORD, and his mousing has been rewarded by the discovery of the resolution to which he refers. That, however, is entirely a matter of taste. I do not myself think there is any impropriety in looking over the RECORD to find out what Senators themselves or others may have said in reference to measures, and occasionally a great deal of information may be obtained upon the merits of the subject under discussion in that way.

But I wish to say that the Senator will find, by reference to the remarks I made before he made those to which I now refer, that I spoke, with some earnestness at least, in favor of the establishment of a sinking fund for the protection of the Government, insisting at the same time that it would be better for the credit of the companies; and I also said in those remarks that I did not think it was right to take the one-half transportation and the 5 per cent. net earnings, which belonged to the Government, and put them in the sinking fund, for the Government ought not to be required to pay interest on its money for the benefit of these companies, and therefore I objected to the Railroad Committee bill for that reason. I, however, did indicate such amendments as I thought the Judiciary Committee bill should receive.

Now, sir, in my judgment and according to my best recollection, there is nothing inconsistent in the position which I have taken on this matter with that which I proposed in the resolution which gave original jurisdiction to the Judiciary Committee, as the Senator said. I do not object to this measure because it emanates from the Judiciary Committee, for I have a very high respect for that body of gentlemen. I think they are able and believe them to be conscientious. That being so two years ago, as now, I was in favor of their reporting a bill, but I certainly did not commit myself to any bill which they might report, no matter how harsh it might be or how extreme, or upon whatever theory it might proceed. I reserved to myself the right in that as in all matters to exercise my own judgment and cast my votes as I saw fit, and to advance such arguments in favor of those votes as it seemed to me was due to myself to explain my position. I therefore say, Mr. President, that there was nothing in that matter at all inconsistent, in my judgment.

In that same resolution I did propose that the Government should look into certain matters with reference to the twenty-four-million-dollar contract of the Contract and Finance Company, and that I referred to also in the remarks I made this morning and called attention to the fact that I did so, but I said with reference to that that as such investigation was not made, as Congress had for years passed the thing over, and then when their attention was specifically called to it and the legal committee of the Senate were directed to institute such investigation as was necessary, still it was not done, and that now it ought not to be brought in at this late day, when other parties had invested in this stock and in these bonds, to make weight against them.

If, however, the Senator can find any comfort in the consideration that he has convicted me of inconsistency, he is welcome to any comfort of that kind. I desire to say, however, that I prefer to do what I think is right at the present moment or at any moment which may be presented; that I am not bound to follow any convictions I may have had heretofore, provided I have seen reason to change them. I believe in the old adage that the wise man changes often; another class never changes. I am open to conviction and learning, and if any one can have listened to this long debate and not have acquired any ideas either for or against the measure, then his ears are certainly deaf.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand the Senator to insist upon retaining and exercising his power to "alter, amend, and repeal" at any time?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not. I believe it must be by contract with these companies in the same spirit as by the act of 1864, when there were modifications made in the law of 1862, the assent of the companies was required. That course is followed in all State Legislatures, and in all the legislation of Congress relating to such things. I do not believe we have a right, simply because we are, as we call it, sovereign—although we are far from it in some respects, the States being much more so than we are—I do not believe that for that reason where we are contractors we stand in any different relation than private parties would stand to each other.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, if my friend from California had heard the remarks I made, he would have found that I referred to his resolution for a wholly different purpose from that which he attributes to me.

Mr. SARGENT. I read the Senator's remarks from the Reporter's notes.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think it was for the purpose of convicting him of any particular inconsistency or condemning him for a change of opinion, if such a change had taken place. I fully concur with him that a man is made of very poor stuff who may not alter, amend, or repeal, as my friend from Delaware suggests, his confirmed convictions. That is a suggestion of my friend from Delaware, and I think a very wise and philosophical one.

Mr. SARGENT. I agree with the Senator, if that was his meaning.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, what I alluded to the resolution of the Senator from California for was this: as I had said I thought there had been an attempt here on the part of those who opposed the bill to censure the Judiciary Committee for going too far, and I cited the resolution of the Senator from California which first gave that committee jurisdiction of the subject to show that that resolution went further than the bill which is now under consideration. That is all. I certainly have no disposition to make a debate upon a measure which ought to stand upon its own intrinsic merits depend at all upon any personal consideration. I never have advocated or opposed a measure on any such ground, and I never shall.

As to what the Senator has said about the power to amend, alter, or repeal, that that is with the assent of the companies, if that was all, it might as well be stricken out of the charter at once, because without it we could make any legislation we pleased that the companies saw fit to assent to.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 8, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the following bills, with amendments; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2291) for the relief of Thomas W. Collier; and An act (H. R. No. 3822) making an appropriation for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

ELECTION OF DOORKEEPER.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order this morning is whether the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr.

BUTLER,] that the House proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper, involves a question of privilege.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish upon that question to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. I understand the resolution, if it is before the House—

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. We cannot hear a word that is said.

Mr. EDEN, (after a pause.) I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution is not before the House, but only the question submitted by the Speaker, whether it presents a question of privilege or not. If the resolution itself is before the House, then I wish to make a point of order on it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not before the House.

Mr. EDEN. That answers my present purpose.

Mr. CONGER. Does that come in before the morning hour? I understood it was postponed until to-day.

The SPEAKER. It was postponed, as the Chair remembers, immediately after the reading of the Journal. But the RECORD will show.

Mr. SPRINGER. There was nothing said as to the time. I tried to have that settled.

Mr. DUNNELL. The RECORD states that it was postponed until after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair distinctly stated on Friday the question would be postponed until this morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. CARLISLE. A proposition was made to postpone it until after the morning hour, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] declined to modify his motion in that regard.

The SPEAKER. It would come up naturally after the reading of the Journal. The question now before the House is whether the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts presents a question of privilege or not. The Chair has decided that the resolution does present a question of privilege.

Mr. CONGER. Before the question is put I wish to say this: this question has been considered by the House and by the Chair of sufficient importance to be postponed till to-day in order that it may be made a precedent. I think in order it may have any force as a precedent there should be a full record of the vote.

Mr. BUTLER. There should be a rising vote at least.

Mr. CONGER. There should be a rising vote at least.

Mr. BUTLER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. COX of New York, were appointed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 220, nays 4, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—220.

Acklen,	Crittenden,	Hungerford,	Phillips,
Aldrich,	Culberson,	Hunter,	Pollard,
Bacon,	Cummings,	Hunton,	Pound,
Bagley,	Cutler,	Ittner,	Powers,
Baker, John H.	Danford,	James,	Price,
Baker, William H.	Davidson,	Jones, Frank	Pugh,
Bailou,	Davis, Horace	Jones, James T.	Rainey,
Banks,	Dean,	Jones, John S.	Randolph,
Banning,	Deering,	Joyce,	Rea,
Bayne,	Denison,	Keifer,	Reagan,
Bell,	Dickey,	Keightley,	Reed,
Bicknell,	Douglas,	Kelley,	Reilly,
Bisbee,	Dunnell,	Kenna,	Rice, Americus V.
Blackburn,	Durham,	Ketcham,	Riddle,
Blair,	Eames,	Kimmel,	Robbins,
Blount,	Eden,	Knapp,	Robertson,
Boone,	Elam,	Knott,	Robinson, G. D.
Brentano,	Ellis,	Landers,	Robinson, M. S.
Brewer,	Errett,	Lathrop,	Ross,
Bridges,	Evans, James L.	Ligon,	Ryan,
Briggs,	Evins, John H.	Lindsey,	Sampson,
Bright,	Felton,	Lockwood,	Sapp,
Browne,	Finley,	Loring,	Saylor,
Buckner,	Forney,	Luttrell,	Scales,
Bundy,	Fort,	Lynde,	Schleicher,
Burchard,	Foster,	Mackey,	Sexton,
Butler,	Franklin,	Maish,	Shallenberger,
Cabell,	Frye,	Manning,	Shelley,
Cain,	Garth,	Marsh,	Singleton,
Caldwell, John W.	Gibson,	Martin,	Slemmons,
Calkins,	Giddings,	McCook,	Smalls,
Camp,	Goode,	McGowan,	Smith, William E.
Candler,	Hale,	McKinley,	Southard,
Cannon,	Hamilton,	McMahon,	Sparks,
Carlisle,	Hanna,	Metcalfe,	Springer,
Caswell,	Hardenbergh,	Mitchell,	Stenger,
Chalmers,	Harris, Henry R.	Money,	Stewart,
Chittenden,	Harris, John T.	Monroe,	Stone, Joseph C.
Clark, Alvah A.	Harrison,	Morgan,	Strait,
Clark of Missouri,	Hartridge,	Morrison,	Thompson,
Clark, Rush	Hartzell,	Morse,	Townsend, Amos
Clarke of Kentucky,	Haskell,	Muldrow,	Townsend, M. L.
Clymer,	Hatcher,	Neal,	Turner,
Cobb,	Hazelton,	Norcross,	Turney,
Cole,	Hendee,	O'Neill,	Vance,
Conger,	Henderson,	Overton,	Waddell,
Cook,	Henkle,	Page,	Wait,
Cox, Jacob D.	Herbert,	Patterson, G. W.	Walker,
Crapo,	Hewitt, G. W.	Patterson, T. M.	Walsh,
Cravens,	House,	Peddie,	Watson,
	Hubbell,	Phelps,	Welch,

White, Harry
White, Michael D.
Whithorne,
Wigginton,

Williams, A. S.
Williams, Andrew
Williams, C. G.
Williams, James

Williams, Jere N.
Willis, Albert S.
Willits,
Wilson,

Wood,
Wren,
Wright,
Yeates.

Bland,

Mills,

Throckmorton,

Young.

NOT VOTING—47.

Aiken,
Atkins,
Beebe,
Benedict,
Bliss,
Bouck,
Boyd,
Bragg,
Brogden,
Burdick,
Caldwell, W. P.
Campbell,
Chaffin,
Collins,
Cox, Samuel S.
Davis, Joseph J.
Dibrell,

Dwight,
Eickhoff,
Ellsworth,
Evans, I. Newton
Ewing,
Freeman,
Fuller,
Gardner,
Garfield,
Gause,
Glover,
Gunter,
Harmer,
Harris, Benj. W.
Hart,
Hayes,
Henry,

Hewitt, Abram S.
Hiscock,
Hooker,
Humphrey,
Jorgensen,
Killinger,
Lapham,
Mayham,
McKenzie,
Muller,
Oliver,
Potter,
Pridemore,
Quinn,
Rice, William W.
Roberts,
Sinnickson,

Smith, A. Herr
Starin,
Steele,
Stephens,
Stone, John W.
Swann,
Thornburgh,
Tipton,
Townshend, R. W.
Tucker,
Van Vorhes,
Veeder,
Ward,
Warner,
Williams, Richard
Willis, Benj. A.

So the question was decided in the affirmative.

During the vote,

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, said: I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan. If he were present, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. STEELE, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. DIBRELL. I am paired on all political questions with my colleague, Mr. THORNBURGH.

Mr. YOUNG. My colleague, Mr. CALDWELL, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with Mr. FREEMAN, of Pennsylvania. I do not know how either would vote on this question.

Mr. HOUSE. My colleague, Mr. ATKINS, is still confined to his rooms by illness.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. MAYHAM, is paired with Mr. HUMPHREY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I am paired with Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If he were present, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. SAMPSON. My colleague, Mr. OLIVER, is paired with Mr. HART, of New York, and my colleague, Mr. BURDICK, with Mr. BENEDICT.

Mr. BAYNE. My colleague, Mr. DWIGHT, is paired with Mr. BRIDGES. If present, he would vote in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The House has decided that the resolution presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts does present a question of privilege. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper, and that the true Union, maimed soldier, Brigadier-General James Shields, of Missouri, be chosen to that place.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to offer the following as a substitute.

Mr. BUTLER. Have I not the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House proceed to the election of Doorkeeper.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire in the first place—

Mr. CONGER. Is that all of it?

The SPEAKER. That is all of the substitute.

Mr. CLYMER. I offer this as a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire now, Mr. Speaker, if I can speak a moment without interruption, to say that the exact state of this question is before the House; and I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as we are men of business, that we come directly to the matter in hand. I understand that since the last adjournment there has been a caucus of the democratic members and they have put forward a candidate of their choice. Why does not the gentleman add to his substitute the nomination also, and let one vote determine between the two resolutions?

Mr. CLYMER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will withdraw the nomination contained in his resolution we can arrive at this thing by a single vote. But if he does not, I prefer adhering to the substitute as I have offered it, which, if it be adopted, will throw the question open for nominations, as is provided for by the rule of the House.

Mr. SAYLER. I submit the resolution is one which may be divided.

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts is unexceptible of division.

Mr. SAYLER. That is the point I make. We can vote for the first portion of it and then vote as we see fit on the other.

Mr. EDEN. I understand under Rule 11 every gentleman in the House if he chooses has a right to nominate a candidate for the position of Doorkeeper. I submit, therefore, that the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts is not in order at all. Rule 11 provides:

In all cases where other than members of the House may be eligible to an office by the election of the House there shall be a previous nomination.

The only resolution that is in order is the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper. And when that resolution is adopted any and every gentleman in the House has a right to make a nomination.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] to demand a division on the first resolution?

Mr. SAYLER. I do, unless the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is admitted. If that is admitted I do not care.

Mr. CLYMER. I very well understand that without the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts I have not the floor to offer the substitute and that the only way my resolution could come in would be by voting down the previous question. But it seems to me and to other gentlemen the most direct method of arriving at this thing is to vote for the substitute. If the gentleman does not yield for the substitute to be offered I call for a division of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, the Chair thinks, did assent to the substitute being offered.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not wish to go into any business of catches and parliamentary rules.

Mr. CLYMER. I so understand.

Mr. BUTLER. I wanted to meet the question presented fairly in the face; and therefore I suggested to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to offer a resolution similar to mine because the House has just voted by 220 to 4 that my resolution in its present form and shape is a privileged question. That is settled. Now make another one just like it and it will be a like privileged question, for which I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. CLYMER. The House has not decided that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is a privileged question. It has decided that the election of Doorkeeper is a privileged question.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh! no; pardon me. The House has decided that my resolution is privileged.

Mr. CLYMER. Not at all. Do I understand the gentleman has yielded for the purpose of my substitute being offered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to allow the gentleman from Pennsylvania to submit his amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. And then the Chair recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts because the Chair understood the gentleman desired to speak briefly to his resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. I yielded to the substitute being offered, and only made a suggestion.

Mr. CLYMER. Then if the gentleman yields to me to offer the substitute I demand the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh! Pardon me; I did not yield for that. That is a trick. That will not do.

Mr. CLYMER. The gentlemen from Massachusetts has no right to accuse me of desiring to perpetrate a trick on the House.

The SPEAKER. The effect of that would not be to cut off the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not yield for a motion for the previous question. But if the gentleman did not mean to use the privilege for that purpose I withdraw the expression.

Mr. CLYMER. I certainly intended no trick. The gentleman from Massachusetts had expressed the desire that we should reach a result immediately, and in furtherance of that desire I moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not consider the gentleman from Massachusetts cut off by the motion for the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER. But it cuts off any other amendment. I want to show how it will operate. If I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to call the previous question, and it is sustained, that prevents the gentleman from Illinois from nominating a candidate; and so with other gentlemen all over the House. I want to have the fullest right of nomination preserved.

But I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that I trust the resolution I have offered will pass. A question was raised on Friday whether I had a right to appear here and offer that resolution on behalf of General Shields. Upon that point I desire to submit as part of my remarks a letter from General Shields.

The Clerk read as follows:

CREIGHTON HOUSE,
Boston, Massachusetts, March 30, 1878.

DEAR GENERAL: I have spent the winter in New England, and have been generally treated everywhere, and nowhere more so than in your district and by your friends, who are the industrial sinews of that part of New England. But my present purpose in troubling you is a selfish one. I see a bill has passed the Senate to give me a pension of $50 a month. You of all men could make that $100 a month. Others who have suffered less and not done more are on the retired list. This would not injure you in New England.

Sincerely, your friend,

JAS. SHIELDS.

HON. BENJ. F. BUTLER,
House of Representatives, Washington.

Mr. BUTLER resumed the floor.

Mr. EDEN. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts to bring in his amendment to the Senate bill making General Shields a pensioner to the amount of $100 per month right now, and I think we will all vote for it upon this side of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that I held it a justification, when I found an office vacant, but I had not anything to do with making the vacancy, instead of leaving this old veteran of the Mexican war to eat the bread of pension and of dependence, that I would give him an office, so far as I was concerned, in which he could earn his living, a high and honorable office, an office concerning which the only complaint that I have heard is that from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] who insists that he was too good for it, that he was too high and the office too low, and this letter was my warrant for doing it. I do not know that I would not have done it for any good soldier in the same condition; indeed I am quite sure I would. Now here is a Union general, a general of the Mexican war, who was twice wounded in the glorious campaign for the capture of the city of Mexico, a man without reproach, a man not seeking the office of Doorkeeper, but a man who is now traveling through the New England States to earn by lecturing his living. He presented himself before me seeking the poor pittance of $100 pension per month; he now gets but $30; and I see a place where he can get more than $200 per month, and earn it honorably and fairly. Have I not done right in bringing him before the House?

Mr. STENGER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts not know that the office of Doorkeeper would only last about one year, while the pension would be for life? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Pardon me; if he is capable and if somebody does not lie him down by lying that he is eighty-five years old when he is only sixty-seven, he will remain here many years, and this will last him two years at any rate, and after that I know that if we get into power we will keep him here and give him the position, and I know that the other side will do so too unless some confederate division general wants the place more than Shields does.

Mr. EDEN. I ask the gentleman if he does not think that General Shields would be better fitted to fill the position of Postmaster-General than that of Doorkeeper, and whether with his great influence with the Administration he does not think that he can succeed in getting him in there? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Oh! my great influence with the Administration! The gentleman who makes that suggestion certainly must have hardly got over the festivities of Saturday. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDEN. I did not go to Chester.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not have sufficient influence with the Administration to nominate a disabled soldier as postmaster for a small town. Those who have now the ear of the Administration nominated a confederate general as Postmaster-General, a very good man; and it seems that it is the desire of the House of Representatives to nominate a man of the same antecedents for Doorkeeper. The President and the democratic majority of the House of Representatives agree on the question. [Laughter.] I do not. Now the opposing nomination to General Shields is the nomination of a gentleman by the name of Field, a good, true, loyal confederate soldier, who did his duty as he understood it to the rebellion faithfully and well and who fought well. I happen to know one occasion where he fought well. I have not a word to say against his meritorious services for his country as he chose it, but they were not done for my country, and therefore I cannot reward those services by electing him to office because he tried to destroy his country. I am willing that he shall have all the rights in the country which he forfeited, but I do not think the time has come for him to have the honors until our soldiers who fought in the service of their country have passed away; when that time comes I shall be very glad to have him appointed to office, but not till then.

Mr. YEATES. Will the gentleman allow me to remind him of what he said on Friday?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, certainly.

Mr. YEATES. The gentleman said on last Friday in his speech, that if we would not elect General Shields and would nominate a good confederate who had fought and been wounded he would support him.

Mr. BUTLER. One word there; I think the gentleman had better look at the Record.

Mr. YEATES. That is what you said.

Mr. BUTLER. Pardon me; I did not say that. What I did say was that I would vote for such a man against any civilian.

Mr. YEATES. That is right; that is what you said; but for a wounded confederate.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I said, and I stick to it.

Mr. YEATES. Then I ask you why you say that this man did not fight for your country and therefore is not entitled to your support?

Mr. BUTLER. The difference is between loyalty to the flag of the Government that educated him and brought him up, and treason to that flag, for which he ought to have been hanged. [Applause.]

Mr. YEATES rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield further?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir. The gentleman will allow me to finish my sentence. The penalty for his treason was death by all law, human and divine; but the clemency of the country relieved him from that penalty. I have the unfortunate pre-eminence of being about the only man that ever did enforce that penalty; and I stand by the act.

After the war Mr. Field left this country and sought another. He made himself the servant of an Egyptian prince and a subject of the Sultan of Turkey, because the Sultan of Turkey does not allow any man to go into his army as a high officer who does not swear allegiance to him; and most of those entering his service have to swear allegiance to the Prophet Mahomet as well. Now, we have within two months removed the disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution upon General Field; and having relieved those disabilities I am waiting, before I vote for him, to hear whether the Sultan of Turkey or the Khédive of Egypt has removed his disabilities as their subject. I want to hear from the Khédive on this point; I want to know whether he has said, "I am willing to give up this subject of mine." I do not want a man to forswear his country in order to take service under a foreign prince and then return hot-footed from that service to be chosen a Doorkeeper in the House of Representatives, which ought to be next in rank to the position of "doorkeeper in the house of the Lord."

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me a moment?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to state for the information of the House and of the gentleman from Massachusetts that General Field never accepted service under any foreign prince or potentate in such a manner as to interfere at all with his allegiance to the Government of the United States. He went to Egypt and accepted service under the Khédive under a contract; and the same contract which General Field signed was signed by four officers of the United States Government, officers of the Federal Army, and two of whom are now in that Army. I presume that these officers of the United States Army did not forfeit any citizenship or allegiance to the Government of the United States under which they were holding commissions; and if they did not forfeit it, I would like to know the process of reasoning by which it is forfeited in General Field's case. I have before me a list of those four officers.

Mr. BUTLER. I know them.

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir; and you know two of them are now in the Army.

Mr. BUTLER. In the Khédive's army?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; in the Army of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. "The more's the pity." [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNTON. They went to serve the Khédive under leave of absence from the War Department; and in the case of one of these Federal officers of the United States Army that leave was extended in order that he might recover from a wound received in fighting for the Khédive. They were Union soldiers in the Federal Army when they went to Egypt, and two of them are in the Federal Army today. If this fact does not impose a disability upon these two officers of the United States Army, tell me, I pray you, how it imposes any disability upon General Field.

I desire to give the names of these four officers, as given by the War Department:

Assistant Surgeon William J. Wilson, one year's leave.

In his case, if I mistake not, his leave was extended in order that he might recover from a wound received in fighting for the Khédive in Egypt.

First Lieutenant R. M. Rogers, Second Artillery.

He also was on one year's leave.

Charles F. Loshe, Eighth Infantry, one year's leave.

Eugene O. Fehet, Second Artillery, one year's leave.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say that the officer last named did not join the army of the Khédive in any manner.

Mr. HUNTON. He obtained leave of absence, I understand, for that purpose, and I was informed that he joined the Khédive's army.

Mr. CONGER. He never joined the Khédive's army, as I personally know.

Mr. HUNTON. It is a matter of no importance.

Mr. CONGER. If it is important enough to be asserted, it is equally important to dispute the assertion if it is incorrect.

Mr. HUNTON. Now these officers left the country and served the Khédive under a contract in the same manner that General Field did. They all signed the same contract and agreed to render the same service.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am always glad to hear from the learned gentleman from Virginia, because he always speaks to the point.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg leave to say another thing before the gentleman resumes, and I do so with his permission—

Mr. BUTLER. What is it, a letter?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; I desire to state another fact.

Mr. BUTLER. All right; go on.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, in the contract entered into between these officers and the Khédive, as I am informed, they contracted to serve the Khédive in any wars against his enemies, and unless there should come a complication with the United States of America, in which case they were to be relieved.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will address myself to that. Four gentlemen, it is said, one a surgeon, took a contract to serve the Khédive temporarily and got leave from their government to go and do it for one year, they being young and subordinate officers, an assistant surgeon and lieutenants. And they made a contract that they would not serve against the United States. Now, then, I distinguish Mr. Field's case in two regards: first, did he ask leave of the President of the United States to go out and expatriate himself and serve under the Khédive of Egypt? There is no evidence of that.

Secondly, did he get leave? Was he a citizen of the United States at the time he left four years ago? No. My friend from Virginia says it did not violate his allegiance to go out there. No, I know it did not—he did not then have any allegiance to his country. [Laughter.] He had broken it. He had forfeited it. He had forfeited all rights and all claims upon it; and his country had disabled him from all his political rights as a citizen. He went there years ago to serve indefinitely. He did not ask leave to serve for one year, but he took leave to serve, and he did serve in a high office just as long as he chose, or just as long as the Khédive chose to have him.

Now, where is Mr. Field's contract, to show whether he became the Khédive's officer and subject or not? These young men's contracts are good apparently and very proper, but where is Field's contract? He has a copy of it. It was not so heavy, surely, it could not be brought up Capitol Hill. [Laughter and applause.] Why bring up these young men's contract when Fields will not show up? They are not before us. When they are I should like to ask them some questions. But they are not here. The case of this gentleman is brought here by the other side—is here. Where is his contract? [Laughter.]

I ask the members of the democratic party in closing not to do this thing. We are a little sore yet, some of us, up North. There are a great many green graves dotted all over our villages, the waving grass hardly grown over them yet; we are going to decorate them with flowers and offerings on the 30th of next May, these graves of men who fought and died to save the Union. Do not send the sorrowing widows and weeping orphans to their fathers' and husbands' graves bowed down with the thought their dear ones' veteran comrade is so soon by the Representatives of their Government put behind one who led the armies of the rebellion in the battles of which their loved and mourned ones were slain, husbands and fathers all now sleeping in quiet graves. Do not press us so fast. We will get perhaps educated and conciliated up to it pretty soon. We may go a little slowly at first. Be a little tender with us as yet. Do not hurry us so. We are sad at our great losses. We may learn by and by, perhaps, how to moan in music and to shriek in melody, but we have not reached quite that perfection yet. Let me tell you, men of the South—and I speak now in all friendliness and kindness, and I have never attempted to excite hard feeling on this floor upon these questions—I tell you, men of the North, that this action is a small matter; it is typical; it represents an idea; it establishes a principle; it crushes a sentiment. The first gun fired at Sumter. It did no harm to the fort, but it raised up a feeling which almost destroyed your country and the effects of which you are feeling yet. Let me say this to you, men of Pennsylvania—that State so true, so staunch to the flag in times of trouble—let me say to you that this will light up among the hill-tops of that glorious old State and among her loyal people a bright and burning flame of loyalty, which, like the fiery cross of Rhoderick Dhu, will flash from hill-top to hill-top until you shall see the tribes of true men gathering as in '61. This will not be a great while a political question.

The men of the North will march again before they will see their dead dishonored and sterling veterans spurned.

I pray you now, in all sincerity, in a spirit of all friendliness, do not do this thing. You have shown by the election of the Postmaster in the regular course of business you have chosen to give a recognition to the confederates, and we bore that too, because in that matter you were organizing your House in your own way. Now, by visitation of God, (if the vote of the House the other day can be called that,) you have cut down a Doorkeeper, and here is brought forward for his place a veteran maimed Union soldier whom you may honor. If you do not like to honor him for what he did in the war of the rebellion, you may honor him for that glorious charge which he made at Cerro Gordo. If you do not want to stand by him because of the wound he received from Stonewall Jackson's brigade, you may stand by him because of the copper bullet he received though his lungs from the Mexicans.

Do not strike him down again; show that you prefer courage and brave conduct when shown on the battle-field in behalf of patriotism, loyalty to the flag, to the Government, rather than the same traits devoted to treason and rebellion.

When such a man, so true, so brave, so loyal, is presented to you, do not attempt to strike him down, to elevate one who sought to destroy his country.

Mr. EDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. EDEN. Did the gentleman from Massachusetts make any complaint against President Grant for the appointment of General Longstreet to an important office?

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer the gentleman. I made no objection to the appointment of General Longstreet; and I do not know that there was any one-armed Union soldier who was seeking for the office given him at the same time.

Mr. EDEN. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts know that General Shields is not seeking for this office now?

Mr. BUTLER. Pardon me, I thank God he is not. But let me say further, General Longstreet had long before repented of the part he took in the rebellion. [Laughter on the democratic side.]

Mr. EDEN. His repentance consisted, I suppose, in his joining your party. If a confederate general joins your party he is fit for office; but so long as he remains a democrat he is unfit.

Mr. BUTLER. Pardon me again, I never knew General Longstreet had joined our party. I do not care whether he did or not. But he not only repented, but he gave works meet for repentance. More than that, I think I have lived too long—my friend from New York said the other day I was growing old—I have lived too long when I have lived to hear in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States the fact that a man repented of treason to his Government sneered at and with derisive laughter.

Mr. CLYMER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; for how long?

Mr. CLYMER. For five or ten minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. CLYMER. The important business before this House is the election of a Doorkeeper to fulfill the responsible and arduous duties connected with that office. Our experience in the past has not been fortunate, and we are here to-day about to endeavor, in the person of some one, to repair past mistakes.

The gentleman from Massachusetts would have us, the majority on this floor, elect a person of his choosing. I will join him in doing all honor to the man who served with high distinction in two wars, who was a Senator from two States, and who in every relation of life has performed his duties admirably and well. But, sir, we do need in the officer about to be elected personal ability to perform the duties of the place. And let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts when he speaks here of the pension to be granted to General Shields, whether he knows the fact that within the last five weeks, when that question was before the Senate Committee on Pensions, it was increased from $30 to $50 per month upon the ground, in proof before that committee, that General Shields was not only so personally disabled that he could not earn a livelihood for himself, but that in addition he required the services of some one to take care of him. Does he not know that that was the very ground upon which the pension was increased from $30 to $50?

Now, sir, I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that when that bill which is now upon our Calendar shall come up I will join with him in granting the request of General Shields to make the pension $100 per month. And, sir, I will go further. I will, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will join me, vote for a bill to place him on the retired list of the Army of the United States, which will give him over $3,000 a year for life. And, sir, I will go further still, and I will vote to pay him for the services which he would have rendered in that Congress from which he was ejected, although elected by a majority of over 3,000 votes, by the republican party, headed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Applause.]

But, sir, I wish to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I do not propose as a member of the majority on this floor to allow the minority to dictate to us who shall be our officers. I wish also to ask the gentleman when in his past history or in the past history of the party to which he belongs has he honored a soldier when that soldier was a democrat? Did not he and those who follow him drive McClellan in shame and disgrace from the Army? Did they not send Hancock into exile? When all along the whole line of brave men who suffered for the Union cause have you ever honored them or given them place and position if they were democrats? Never in all your history; and neither would you now if you did not conceive that at this hour you could drive a wedge into the democracy and rend it in pieces. But, Mr. Speaker, we are neither to be controlled nor frightened. And when the gentleman appeals to me or to others from the State of Pennsylvania I tell him that the red flag which he attempts to flaunt here in our eyes to-day has no terror for me or for the people I represent. With them, sir, the war is ended. To them peace has come, and that people cannot be driven from their love of peace and the enjoyment of its blessings by any agitator such as the gentleman from Massachusetts has proven himself to be in this hour on this floor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are here to elect a proper person for Doorkeeper of this House. We will not elect one who is utterly and totally unable by reason of political disability to perform its duties, but we will elect one, if our party is united, as I confidently believe it will be, who is capable, who is honest, and who will be faithful to the high trust which this House shall impose upon him, undeterred by the threats of the gentleman from Massachusetts or those with whom he acts.

Mr. BUTLER. As to General Shields's ability to fill the place, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a copy of his petition which is on file in one of the committees of this House, and upon which he asks a pension, a petition written by his own hand every word of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of James Shields, of Carroll County, State of Missouri, sheweth: That your petitioner was formerly a brigadier-general United States Army, and served as such in the Mexican war; that, at the battle of Cerro Gordo, Mexico, on the 18th day of April, 1847, while leading his brigade against the reserve of the Mexican army, under the immediate control of General Santa Anna in person, he was shot down in front of a Mexican battery of five guns by a large grape-shot, supposed to be a copper ball, passing through his body. The ball entered his right side, just under the nipple, and passed out on the same side about an inch from his spine behind. From this wound he recovered sufficiently to enter the valley of Mexico at the head of his brigade, with the rest of the Army, and with this wound partially healed, but still open, he led his brigade through the battles of Contreras and Churnbuse, and was again severely wounded in the left arm by a musket-ball at the storming of Chapultepec. As he continued to press forward to the City of Mexico, neglecting his wound until the city was taken, his arm began to mortify, and he came near losing his life in consequence. For those two wounds he was allowed a pension of $30 a month after he withdrew from public life. He was placed in the field again in the last war, and received another wound, in 1863, at the battle of Winchester, in Virginia, a fragment of a shell having shattered his arm from the elbow to the shoulder. As he is now sixty-seven years of age, these several severe wounds are telling terribly upon his health, strength, and constitution. This induced him to apply to the bureau for an increase of pension, for having a family and his private means being limited he found that $30 a month were inadequate to his support. The bureau refused to allow the increase on the ground that he is not totally helpless, though he is helpless to labor or to earn a livelihood either for himself or his family by labor. He is not totally helpless. On the contrary, he does everything he can to help himself, and will continue doing so as long as he lives, and he receives what he needs, the personal assistance of kind friends wherever he goes. But age is making him more helpless every day, and as his years cannot be many now, he appeals hopefully and respectfully to the liberality of the American Congress for such an increase of pension as will save him from want in his old age.

JAS. SHIELDS,
Ex-Brigadier-General, United States Army.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, there is the old man's story, and there is no evidence to overthrow it on earth. He says that while he is totally helpless to earn his living by his hands, he is still able to earn a large part of it for himself and family, having but $30 a month pension from the Government, and that he receives the assistance of friends. He is now lecturing in New England acceptably to our audiences, as neither of the three last Doorkeepers could have done. [Laughter.] He is not expected to stand guard here and hold the door. We have one-armed men—no, I take that back—we had one-armed men here, and a man without hands opening the doors and performing the active duties of doorkeeper. The question we have to consider is, is he honest? One good and honest man, as certified to by both the majority and the minority of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, your last Doorkeeper, you incontinently turned out. [Laughter.]

The office demands capacity of affairs, brains, and executive ability, and all that General Shields has. Those of you who met him in the field know that.

Now, then, let me turn to another matter. Much has been said against the republican Congress because we did not give him a seat in this House. I hold in my hand the record in the case of the contested election to which General Shields was a party, and as I have but little time, I will state it rather than read it. A report was made by the majority and minority of the Committee of Elections to that Congress, and it was only claimed that there was a majority of 663 votes for General Shields, not thousands. Mr. Burr, who advocated General Shields's claim on the other side of the House, admitted this. It was alleged by the republican member contesting his seat that there were frauds in the voting although Mr. Shields had nothing to do with them. The committee reported he was not therefore entitled to the seat. So satisfied were the democratic party of that day with that report, that although the now Speaker of the House, then on the floor, took charge of how the vote should be put, there was no division even called, not even a stand-up vote on the question whether General Shields was entitled to his seat, but only upon the last resolution, and that was that James Shields, the contestant, should be paid $5,000 for his time and expenses of the contest, and upon that question I voted "ay." And in a House that was republican by two-thirds majority the resolution passed by a two-third vote.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, if you will be very quick.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the RECORD show that a yea and nay vote was taken upon the question whether Shields was entitled to his seat, and did not the gentleman vote "no?"

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman has the RECORD before him. If he will turn to it he will find that that is the case.

Mr. BUTLER. I am certain I am right. I will refer to it later on if I have the time. I have another thing to say. I should have voted "no" on his title to his seat if I had been called upon to vote. Let there be no mistake about that. I did not have a chance to vote. Now, then, I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maine. [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, it is not so necessary that I should occupy the floor as it was before the last few remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] attacked the gentleman from Massachusetts on Friday, and charged that a republican House had rejected General Shields, although he had received a large democratic majority in Missouri. The gentleman from Massachusetts did not then seem to be prepared with a reply. Now I have examined that matter in order to find what the reply was, and I desire to say that the republican side of this House was entirely and completely justified in the course which it took at that time, and if they had taken any other course they would have stultified themselves and violated the law of the land.

I find that in the State of Missouri when that election took place there was a constitution in force which provided that no man who had engaged in the confederate army, or in any possible way given aid, counsel, or encouragement to those in arms against the Government, should be entitled to registry as a voter. I cite the provision of the constitution on that subject:

At any election held by the people under this constitution, or in pursuance of any law in this State, or under any ordinance, or by law of any municipal corporation, no person shall be deemed a qualified voter who has ever been in armed hostility to the United States, or to the lawful authorities thereof, or to the government of this State, or has ever given aid, comfort, countenance, or support to persons engaged in any such hostility, or has ever in any manner adhered to the enemies, foreign or domestic, of the United States, either by contributing to them or by unlawfully sending within their lines money, goods, letters, or information, or has ever disloyally held communication with such enemies, or has ever by act or word manifested his adherence to the cause of such enemies, or his desire for their triumph over the arms of the United States, or his sympathy with those engaged in exciting or carrying on rebellion against the United States; or has ever, except under overpowering compulsion, submitted to the authority or been in the service of the so-called "Confederate States of America," or has ever left this State and gone within the lines of the armies of the so-called "Confederate States of America" with the purpose of adhering to said States or armies, or has ever been a member of or connected with any order, society, or organization inimical to the Government of the United States or to the government of this State; or has ever been engaged in guerrilla warfare against loyal inhabitants of the United States, or in that description of marauding commonly known as "bushwhacking," or has ever knowingly and willingly harbored, aided, or countenanced any person so engaged.

I find that General Shields was nominated by the democrats in a district in the State of Missouri where the democratic party, under the constitution then in force, were in an utterly helpless minority; and they knew it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement right here?

Mr. FRYE. No, sir; I have but five minutes.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. This side of the House will give you as much time as you desire, if you will give me two minutes.

Mr. FRYE. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. How much time did the gentleman from Massachusetts allow to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. BUTLER. Five minutes.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask only two minutes.

Mr. FRYE. I do not yield.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I venture to say that members on this side will grant the gentleman an extension.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. FRYE. No, sir; I decline.

The democratic party nominated General Shields, then a Union general, when they were in a helpless minority and when they knew that they were. I find that in the report on the election contest as determined in this House, a report in which all the republican members of the committee joined, the following conclusions were reached:

The committee think the evidence establishes that the appointment of Payne, Dowd, and Monroe, by whom the registration in Jackson County was made, was the result of a corrupt arrangement made by Phelan with Charles Dougherty, the democratic candidate for sheriff in Jackson County, and his political friends, and that one, at least, of the persons so appointed, and who seems to have been one of the most active and influential members of the board of registration of the county, Milton J. Payne, was a party to that corrupt arrangement. The board thus appointed seem to have acted throughout in disregard of the first and most important duty imposed upon them by the law. The language of the law is, "They shall, before entering the name of any person on the registry of qualified voters, diligently inquire and ascertain that he has not done any of the acts specified in the constitution as causes of disqualification."

The evidence seems to establish conclusively that all that was required in order that a person's name should be put upon the list of qualified voters was that he should take the oath of loyalty found in the sixth section of the second article of the constitution of Missouri.

The result of this registration was that 5,186 were registered as qualified voters in 1868, while only 2,284 were so registered at the prior registration in 1860, and only 2,967 at the subsequent registration made in 1869.

Charles F. Quest swears that fifty-six of the persons so registered by this board as qualified voters were disfranchised for cause in 1860 by the board of which he was a member. He further testifies that Phelan told him that there were not over a dozen legal voters at the most in Fort Osage township; yet that township was so registered that 183 qualified voters were returned as cast at the election of November 3, 1868, of which 174 were cast for the contestant, and only 9 for the sitting member. A. L. H. Crenshaw, who was one of the judges of the election at Blue Springs in Suibar township at the election in November, 1868, testifies that six persons were registered as qualified voters in that township who were "bushwhackers" in the late rebellion; that seven others were so registered who were in the southern army, as they themselves had informed him, and that twenty-five others were so registered in the same township who were open sympathizers with the rebellion, and three of whom were known to him to have been in the rebel army.

Jacob S. Boreman testifies that he was present at the meeting of the board of review, and that sixty names attached to the copy of the oath of loyalty, said to have been received by mail, were entered upon the qualified list without any proof of residence or loyalty, or other matter outside of the oath of loyalty, and not more than a half dozen of whom were known to any member of the board, as stated by them at the time.

The evidence seemed thus to establish conclusively that all that was required in order for a person's name to be put upon the list of qualified voters was that he should take the oath of loyalty; that in Jackson County 5,168 persons were registered as qualified voters in 1868 when this election was held, while only 2,284 were registered at the prior election in the same district, and 2,967 at the next election following. So that, as shown by the registration, there was a cheat and a fraud of some thousands by admitting to registration democratic voters who had no right under the constitution to vote. I find that in a single parish 183 men were registered where there were not a dozen voters authorized to vote under the constitution. The case was the same in parish after parish, precinct after precinct. The committee wisely and justly concluded that the republican candidate, on the legal votes cast, had a large majority.

I find further from history that when these restrictions in the constitution of Missouri were removed and the democratic party was put into an overwhelming majority, this same district did not love the gallant Union soldier, General Shields, enough to renominate him; but they did nominate a man who could not have voted as a citizen of that State under the constitution in force in 1868.

Mr. BUTLER. I now call the previous question.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir, if I have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has more than five minutes remaining.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I was a resident of Missouri immediately after the war and was cognizant of the facts which transpired at the time of which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has spoken. I will state that under the Drake constitution there were but few men in the State who were permitted to vote. That constitution was gotten up for the purpose of disfranchising not only those who had been in the rebel army but those who had sympathized with those who had gone off—as if men could control their sympathies. Not only this; that constitution was gotten up to disfranchise men like myself, who were democrats during the war and after the war. Under that constitution they undertook to disfranchise me, to prevent me from voting, although I had followed the flag of the Union through three long and bloody years of the war. Although they did defeat General Shields by the action of those infamous registrars, who had their birth under that constitution, they did it in secret; they did it at night when honest men were asleep; they did it by striking from the list of voters men who were authorized even under that infamous constitution to vote. Thus Van Horn was seated as a member of this House, not by the votes of the people, but by the infamous acts of an infamous set of registrars, whose acts were conceived in wickedness and born in iniquity. That is the way General Shields was beaten—beaten by the iniquities of the republican party at a time when his mouth was closed in this House and he was not permitted to say a word in defense of himself. Such was, such is republicanism.

That constitution, with its disfranchising clauses and its inquisitorial oaths, striking alike at the democratic party and the Catholic Church, has long since passed into nothingness and been overthrown by the people of Missouri. Had General Shields's votes not been tampered with, not been discarded by the registrars at midnight, at the time when evil deeds are executed, he would have received his certificate and been seated, as he should have been. But, sir, his offense to republicanism was that he was a democrat, and that party then spurned him, and drove that gallant old man from this House, charged with fraud and branded as a fraud. His crime was democracy then, and it is too late now for these same gentlemen to pretend that they are his friends by voting for him for Doorkeeper of this House. Such an act adds insult to past injuries. They vote for him to-day, not because they love him, but because they hope to use him as an instrument to defeat his own party. It will not do, gentlemen; the trick is too apparent. Had you the majority in this House, you would see him doubly damned before you would vote for him.

Never do good that evil may come from it. General Shields is loved in Missouri—yea, over the whole country. He is a man of ability, honesty, and great worth. If here, he would never permit his name to be used with such an intent and for such a purpose as to defeat his old party. You mistake him, gentlemen, greatly, and you are now disporting idly with his honor. He is a democrat of too stern a stuff to be caught by such trifles. Lift your visions to other days, and you will have his standard. He was a Senator twice in character; he is a Senator yet, and will ever be.

It is true that General Shields was beaten in a democratic convention, as charged by the gentleman from Maine, for Congress; but the honorable member now in Congress from the district of Missouri, [Mr. CLARK,] the successful gentleman, was not a candidate before the convention. After a long contest between General Shields and others, the convention, in a spirit of reconciliation, took up the present member from that district and nominated him, doing honor alike to the State and to the district. General Shields was supported in that convention by confederates, and they clung to him with a wonderful tenacity. The brave always love the brave, wherever found, upon the one side or the other, and they despise the cowards who skulked during the war and since its close have bravely come forth to wage a war of words and kindle up flames of political and civil contention around our own fireside.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me.

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield to the gentleman for three minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. Three minutes is all I desire.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to be second to the gentleman from Massachusetts in signifying my love and respect and reverence for the distinguished and gallant Union soldier whose name he has introduced into this House for the nomination of the minor office of Doorkeeper. I have always loved and respected General Shields, not only for his service in the Army, but for his service as a statesman, the representative in the Senate of the United States of two States.

And I am glad to see the other side at this late day signifying they are returning to their senses so that they are willing now to recognize his virtues. But I learned, sir, in my boyhood timeo Danaos et dona ferentes; and I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, whether this be really for the benefit of General Shields or whether it is not merely for the purpose of a little political claptrap. [Laughter and applause.] For the purpose of testing the sense of the other side and the interest of the gentleman from Massachusetts in the testimony he bears to General Shields and his virtues, I now signify my purpose here to do him justice, not by making him Doorkeeper of the House, and placing him in a menial position as the representative either of the democratic or republican party, but (and I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me for the purpose) to offer a joint resolution as a substitute for his to-day, and I ask it be passed here by the House, not as northern and southern men, but as Union men, loving and respecting a man who has as fine a record as any one in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot yield for a substitute except on the subject of Doorkeeper.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask to have my joint resolution read as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read by the Clerk as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That James Shields, late brigadier-general of volunteers, be, and he is hereby, placed on the retired list of officers of the United States Army, with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general on the retired list.

[Applause and clapping of hands.]

Mr. BUTLER. I now take the floor.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BRAGG. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts permit my substitute to be offered?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no!

Mr. BRAGG. I thought when the test was applied he would not.

Mr. BUTLER. I resume the floor now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts declines to allow the amendment to be offered.

Mr. BUTLER. I decline to be interrupted. Now, when a man gets up and talks about claptrap and introduces such a resolution as that—[laughter and applause.]

Mr. BRAGG rose.

Mr. BUTLER. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. [Laughter and applause.] Even the last Doorkeeper knew that amendment was not in order. [Laughter.] We are electing a Doorkeeper now, and when we have finished that and come to the other proposition in order, when you wake up to your duty to Union soldiers, I will vote for that resolution; but you cannot put it in now. You cannot put it in here now to save a confederate general. [Laughter.] No confederate general ever could ride into office on old General Shields's back, and he never shall by my vote. [Laughter and applause.] Now, as my time is up, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CLYMER. Do not second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, debate it all day if you want to. I am good for three weeks. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLYMER. We will see.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 111.

Mr. CONGER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER and Mr. CLYMER were appointed.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 120.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CLYMER took the floor. I yield now to the gentleman from New York, Mr. COX.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not propose to detain the House for more than five minutes.

Mr. Speaker, from what fell from the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who honors me now with his proximity, I judge that I must have made some remark the other day which may have wounded his feelings. It was about his growing old. None of us are exempt from the lapse of time. I sincerely regret having said anything to wound the feelings of the gentleman, especially in that regard. As we grow older we need to cultivate more toleration. In all our affairs, in all our legislative business especially, and conspicuously in all our governmental functions, if we would unite and elevate our patriotism, we should learn the blessed lessons of fraternity. Let the dead past bury its dead.

It was in this spirit that I offered an amendment to a resolution in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress. On the 14th December, 1875, the gentleman from Illinois, my eminent friend, [Mr. FORT,] had offered the following resolution:

That in all subordinate appointments under any of the officers of this House it is the judgment of this House that wounded Union soldiers who are not disabled from performance of duty should be preferred.

To that I offered the following amendment:

Resolved, That, inasmuch as the Union of the States has been restored, all the citizens thereof are entitled to consideration in all appointments to office under this Government.

That resolution passed this House by 168 yeas to 102 nays. Many straightforward and liberal gentlemen on the other side voted for my proposition. I propose to do again as I have endeavored to do in my votes and voice here, to stand on that proposition. The war is over. We have scarcely the ashes of it left. Why should not all the States and all the citizens thereof have an equal chance to the honors and emoluments of public service under our common Government? Are we never to have that peace which comes of concordant hearts—the peace that with some passeth understanding? Are we forever, sir, by debate and wrangle, to keep open the old wounds of the war? Are they forever to be kept green and bleeding? Or shall we not pour oil of healing and benefaction into the wounds? Why, why, since our destiny is one and inseparable, why may we not come together in a spirit of fraternity, the gray along with the blue, rejoicing with pride, a common sentiment: idem sententia de republica. Why is it, that at this year, this year of so many since the war was flagrant, that we must have these bitter and most unnecessary contests so often renewed and renewed in this House where all sit together from every section, having common duties?

We have only copied, in choosing certain confederates for office here, the practices of your republican administrations. You, on that side, have chosen men of distinction from the confederate army. In a former republican administration you had an Attorney-General; and you have had other distinguished men from the South in office. Your administration under Grant as well as your administration under Hayes appointed confederate officers. Every day men of these antecedents, but of present patriotism, are being appointed to places of trust and eminence. If you have business to transact with the Postmaster-General you have to do it with an ex-brigadier-general in the confederate service. Are we to be reproached when we select for Doorkeeper a gentleman of similar biography?

All that can be asked of a candidate for office is this: does he now stand before the country as having a common sentiment with us concerning the Republic? Need we go further than that as to the qualifications for office in this regard, either within or without this House? If we do, then our professions of conciliation and mutual regard are as empty as the wind and as fruitless of results, save results of disaster.

But, sir, the gentleman from Massachusetts seemed at first to come here to-day, as I supposed, with a general power of attorney from General Shields to present his name for this appointment. When he sent the letter of the veteran general to the Clerk's desk to be read, I supposed of course that it was a letter acquiescing in the nomination, or may be that he was anxious or willing to take the office from the House of Representatives as the Doorkeeper. But the letter had no such import. It was simply a request for the increase of his pension; and to-day when the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] proposes that we shall ignore this reproach of making this ex-United States Senator and ex-general of two wars a mere Doorkeeper, and give to his name intrinsic and proper splendor in the line of his military history, and that, too, by doing the very thing which General Shields requested of the gentleman from Massachusetts, is it to be put down as "claptrap"? Is the request to be refused as a substitute for the resolution because not germane in an orderly point of view? Let us at once to-day, when we can suspend the rules by a two-third vote, honor this distinguished general by giving him his old position in the Army, honored on the retired list of our generals. This will be indeed an honor and a reward. It may not be adequate to his services and his merits, but it will be much nearer it than the position of custodian of our doors. Will not that content the gentleman from Massachusetts? Will not that fill his letter and power of attorney? What more can he ask than that? If he is not bent on mere partisan and political objects, should he not be entirely satisfied with this House giving that kind of pecuniary aid which gives no tarnish to his epaulettes or service, and which General Shields in such a manly way himself requested?

It was said in the debate the other day I was not exactly fair in attributing to that side of the House the repulsion of General Shields from the House when he came here as a member-elect to Congress from the State of Missouri. And the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] goes back to the old report and brings it out to parade it—what for? To show that General Shields came here as a fraud? That he was elected by a fraud? There is no other meaning attributable to his remark. After all your attempt to honor this statesman and soldier you are compelled to say this day you drove him from the House because of fraud.

Mr. BUTLER. Not his fraud.

Mr. COX, of New York. Ah! Not his fraud. But he came here with a credential based on fraud—so it is stated—and my friend from Massachusetts voted to give him $5,000; for what? For a fraudulent case? For no case at all except one based on fraud. Coupling the remarks of the gentleman from Maine with those of the gentleman from Massachusetts this is the dilemma. You paid him for a fraudulent case—paid him $5,000. I never consent here to pay the contestant in such cases. It is not the rule, and it is not the right.

Is it not a general rule of right and practice in this House when a tainted case comes here that we do not pay the contestant? What was this $5,000 for? I voted with the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts to give this $5,000 to General Shields after he was repelled by the republican majority. We all voted for it except some 63 republicans, who would give him nothing; but 108 voted to give him his $5,000 in a case based, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] says, on fraud. If my friend will look at that list of 108 he will find that all the democrats voted that way except one, Mr. Benjamin, of Missouri.

Mr. FRANKLIN. He was a republican.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then all the democratic members voted for it, and carried it with the aid of a number of generous gentlemen on the other side of the House. You turned General Shields out of the House on the ground that his election was fraudulent, and then gave him a little douceur of $5,000 to save his feelings—did you? Oh, Mr. Speaker, as we pursue this matter it becomes too evanescent; it is too attenuated as you approach with analysis.

One thing in conclusion: this democratic House has not been unfair to Union soldiers. How is the House now organized? We have a northern man for Speaker, we have a Union soldier from Kentucky as Clerk, we have a gentleman from Ohio, north of the Ohio, who was and is a Union man, as Sergeant-at-Arms. The confederates, so called, on this side of the House are about equal to the Union men on this side in numbers, and yet they only have—how many leading officers? The Postmaster and the Doorkeeper. Are we then aggrandizing power in behalf of the "confederacy"? Are we discriminating in favor of the southern section? Why all these complaints from the gentleman from Maine that we have not acted fairly? Could we have done otherwise, sitting here as we do representing the unity of the country and the majority of the people? Could we while representing a large majority, if properly counted, at least 2,000,000 in advance of the other side, have done less without injustice? The country is bound together once more in amity. Kindness and conciliation should knit it more closely with each revolving year. I trust we are one—one, never to be severed again, as I trust in God, the blue and gray hereafter, to decorate the graves of their dead in gentle unison and saddening though harmonious memories of equal prowess; and in such a condition of patriotic felicity why are we reproached because we see fit to choose a man for the office of Doorkeeper who is peculiarly fitted for the place; and why should he be voted down because he fought upon the other side during our terrible struggle for the preservation of the Government—a struggle whose perils he shared so gallantly, but a struggle whose animosities all good men should desire to be buried beneath the waves of oblivion forever.

Mr. CLYMER. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. I do not wonder that gentlemen on the other side of the House hesitate to vote on this question. It is not surprising that points of order are made and the previous question voted down, because the democratic party is confronted with a question which shows its bias. The tracks of that party are all one way; they are in a direction upon which the country is profoundly alarmed, the domination in it of the old confederate element. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] asks us why the dead past is not allowed to bury its dead, and the answer is that as fast as he and his associates gain power and have patronage to dispose of they will not let the dead past rest, but that whenever any act can be done that is offensive to the loyal sentiment of the North in the disposition of patronage it is done.

It was for this that in the last Congress the Committee of Ways and Means took for its clerk Mr. Hambleton, a man who had named his child after the assassin of President Lincoln; it was because of this that the party chose the ex-sergeant-at-arms of the confederate house of representatives as Doorkeeper of the Forty-fourth Congress, and had to get rid of him at last because he was incompetent; it was because of this that this winter a southern man was taken as Doorkeeper, and when he failed, as his letter in the Post shows to-day, to do the behests of the leaders of his party, he was turned out, and when that party went into caucus again, if the report of the newspapers is correct, they were confronted with the nomination of a Union soldier, General Shields, who had been wounded in the Mexican war, and whom we now support upon this side of the House in opposition to a confederate soldier.

Mr. SOUTHARD and Mr. FRANKLIN rose.

Mr. HALE. I cannot yield to the gentlemen. They may reply if they choose when I am through.

General Shields was an equally good democrat (nobody having ever shown any aberration from party fealty on his part) with the gentleman who was nominated. He was equally a southern man residing in Missouri, where the late Doorkeeper came from. He was true in every respect to his party and was as good a man as General Field. But he was overslaughed by a vote of 5 to 1, and the democracy chose to nominate a man whose record as given before me from a democratic paper is that, educated at the expense of the Government at West Point, an officer in the United States Army when the rebellion broke out, being then of mature age, not urged by the excitement and effervescence of youth, (for he was then a captain in the Union Army,) he broke the bonds of loyalty and went into the rebellion, carrying to that cause the advantages that he had gained by being educated at the expense of the country. He fought continuously through the war and gained rank and recognition upon the side of the confederacy, all of which is appreciated by the democracy. At the end of the war, failing in business, he expatriated himself and went to a foreign clime, and transferred to a foreign potentate whatever of ability and education this country had given him. But for some reason, on the accession of the democratic party to power he returns here; and the only piece of patronage that the party has in its present control is given to him rather than to the gentleman from Missouri who was a Union soldier, who bears upon his body wounds received in the service of his country, and who is to-day presented on this side of the House. His competitor has only asked for and received amnesty within the last few months. Is not this hot haste?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not expect—no man on this side expects—the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] who nominated General Shields does not expect—that if he shall be elected by the votes of this side and a minority of the democratic party he will ever be anything but a democrat. There is no man on this side who expects in the way of patronage the pittance of a pageship or a messengership or a folder. We expect that his patronage will be distributed in the interest of the democratic party, for General Shields has nothing to recommend him on this side but his ability and his loyalty and his services during the war.

But, Mr. Speaker, as surely as tides and sunrise come the party upon the other side must take this cup to their lips, must decide whether or not there are any influences in their party that permit, in fair competition, a Union soldier, who is a democrat, who lives in the South, to gain a place of this kind as against a confederate, who deserted the flag, who went back upon his military alma mater, who went into the service of the rebellion, and whose only record and only strength with the democratic party is because of that fact. This issue cannot and shall not be blinked. It is a thing that that party is responsible for, and it must take the responsibility.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the gentleman from Maine takes his seat will he allow me to suggest to him that the very contest which he describes was settled by this House when a confederate from Alabama was beaten for a more important position than the Doorkeeper's office by as gallant a Union soldier as wore the uniform of your Government, beaten in the contest for Clerkship, which was decided, not by the assistance of republican votes, but in a democratic caucus. A majority of the democrats on this floor, although in sympathy with the defeated candidate, gave the position to the Union man.

Mr. HALE. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman that before any other interruptions or any further speech-making on his part, he should get over an apparently inveterate habit which I notice on the other side in referring to the Government of the United States when addressing this side of the House, as "your Government." [Laughter and applause.] It is a matter which I am free to say is somewhat offensive to me. I do not like such distinctions. I wish that the gentleman himself could allow the "dead past to bury its dead" sufficiently to make him willing now to call it "our Government," as we do on this side. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Maine had listened to my sentence he would have found that when I spoke of "your Government," I referred to a time when this was not "my Government." I was fighting against it. I said that the man who succeeded in that democratic caucus in obtaining the Clerkship of this House had been a gallant supporter of his Government at the time that his competitor was as gallant a supporter of my government. I was referring to that period of four years of war when I drew the distinction; I was not referring to the present time. But even if I were to indulge in such an expression now it would hardly create wonderment in this House, for from the way the gentleman from Maine is accustomed to disport himself here, modesty might well assume that the Government was in his individual and exclusive keeping. [Laughter and applause.]

While on the floor I wish to add a word in answer to a suggestion of the gentleman. I deny that I or any man belonging to the element with which I have been identified in the past can be proven by the record ever to have uttered a word on this floor that looked toward the opening of issues that should have been buried in the war that gave them birth. If one word of a sectional character has ever come from this side of the House it has been when manhood and patience exhausted, and spurning further insult, drove the party to its utterance in self-defense. I despise the man here or elsewhere who seeks to make either personal profit or political capital out of revamping issues that belong to the darkest period of this country's history. It is the part of ghouls and hyenas to delve into trenches where bloody carcasses lie buried, and drag them out to batten and fatten upon the feast. They have been brought out here again to-day.

Have they been broached from this side of the Chamber? It was reserved to the gentleman from Massachusetts and that gentleman from Maine who has just taken his seat, to refuse to allow a subordinate officer of this House to be elected without fighting over the war again. Charges false have been hurled against us, and not for the first time either. We have been told here to-day, sir, that the candidate nominated in the democratic caucus for the Doorkeepership of this House deserved by every law, human and divine, to have been hanged. We have been told, using him as an average specimen of that element embracing eight millions of the people of this land, that they were all breathing a miserable existence, at sufferance, and were indebted for their poor wretched lives to the magnanimity of the republican party! That has been told to us over and over, and it is told to us to-day. It is false, and the falsehood should wither and die upon the lip that last uttered it. How is it possible, I ask, for a man that belonged to the armies of the confederacy to have been hanged after the terms of surrender and capitulation had been agreed upon? Do you mean to say that the well-earned reputation for prowess, gallantry, courage, and manhood, which the soldiers of the Union Army had illustrated by overwhelming and conquering the people, was to be blotted and blurred for the first time in the history of civilized warfare by this Government ignoring the conditions of surrender and hanging the unarmed men it had agreed to protect as an inducement to lay down their arms?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Have I uttered any such sentiment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit to every candid man upon this floor, whether he sits on that side or on this, as to whether I have not quoted him correctly.

Mr. BUTLER. Have I said or hinted that after they laid down their arms they ought to have been hanged? The time was before.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The statement he made was this—

Mr. BUTLER. The way was to hang them as long as they bore arms.

Mr. BLACKBURN. How were men to be hanged in the confederate service while they were standing in line of battle with bristling bayonets upon their country's battle-fields, bidding defiance to your armies? When a member of this House asserts that this nominated candidate of the democratic party for Doorkeeper deserved by every law, moral, human, and divine, to be hanged, and when that utterance is coupled with the boast that he alone stood by that law and executed it, I would like to know what interpretation or construction could possibly be given except that they were to be hanged when the power to hang was conferred.

Mr. BUTLER. Not after we agreed not to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is time this should stop. It is time false charges should cease to be made—that truth should be observed; and it is time it should be admitted that without doing violence to the plighted faith which your country—then your country, if that will suit you—executed through its generals commanding its several armies, to restore the men who wore our uniform to every personal right, privilege, and prerogative of citizenship so long as they observed the conditions of their parole, no hanging could be done and no punishment be inflicted—it is time it should be admitted that we and each of us then and now, sir, were not only entitled to every right of personal liberty and property under the Constitution of this country, but became the object of protection at the hands of the dominant party itself. We had your solemn promise; we had your word deliberately given; we had laid down our arms; we had ceased to war upon the Government on the condition stated and a condition precedent that could not be violated except to tarnish, to blacken, to disgrace, to render infamous the men who dared to violate it.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, it was found necessary by a member of this House to remind us while boasting of that which he chose to term clemency, but which impartial history will denominate but common fairness—I am sorry, in illustrating this magnanimity for which he claims such credit for his party, it was found necessary for him to parade before us boastfully the execution of an unarmed and helpless prisoner—the only man I believe upon the confederate side that the history of that war shows was ever killed or injured by the warrior from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has twenty-five minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. CLYMER. I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON.]

Mr. CALKINS. May I have the indulgence of the House for a moment?

Mr. CLYMER. I have yielded the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for two or three minutes.

Mr. McMAHON. Not now; I may at the close.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope I will have the consent of the House for one or two minutes.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Speaker, if we were to believe the professions of a republican Congressman we should imagine that his love for the Union soldier surpassed the love of woman, of which we read so much in poetry and in prose. If he would be less ostentatious in his professions and let concealment feed a little more on his damask cheek we might be more charitable in our belief in his honesty. But when it is paraded in public, on numerous small occasions and upon small provocation, it becomes tainted with the hideous leprosy of hypocrisy which was so sternly denounced eighteen hundred years ago by Him whom we regard as the fountain of all high virtues.

I do not come forward at this time, Mr. Speaker, claiming any special prominence as the soldier's friend or the advocate of his rights. I try to do my duty in this particular, as most of us do. But I come forward because the wants of my constituents make me more familiar with the record of the democratic party upon these questions than any other man probably upon the floor of the House. And I do not want that party grossly misrepresented. I want it judged by its record as a party, not by the mistakes or misfortunes of its Doorkeepers or subordinate officers. And its fidelity to the Union is not to be tested by the question, Who shall be elected to the office of Doorkeeper?

Nor do we need to fly in apprehension when the enemy propose the election of General Shields to this small and petty office. We propose, at the proper time, to do more for this gallant officer. He was twice a Senator of the United States. He would have been a member of the lower House, some years ago, if his republican lovers had not turned him out, notwithstanding his large majority. We do not propose to dishonor him at the bidding of republican politicians by asking him to accept the subordinate position of opening and shutting the doors of this Hall and bowing obsequiously to an army of Congressmen who shall be his masters. No; he is too great, too old, too venerable a man to have this affront put upon him. He deserves better of his countrymen; and when this election is over, if our enthusiastic republican friends will only keep their enthusiasm at fever heat, we will give them an opportunity of helping us in a great and good work, and we will put this devoted friend of his country in a high position and far beyond the reach of want or the vicissitudes of party.

I have said this much, Mr. Speaker, to show that the record we will make on this side of the House in the coming election is not a record against the Union soldier, but will be a record in his favor. The party, I have said, can stand upon its record in Congress. And I wish to devote my attention for a few moments to the comparative records of the republican and the democratic parties upon the question of justice to the Union soldier, not some particular Union soldier here, but to the grand army of Union soldiers scattered all over the United States; for all the stuff we have had on this question for some days amounts to nothing if it does not prove that the democratic party is hostile to the Union soldier. In 1865, at the close of the war, the republican party was naturally full of love for the Union soldier, and it passed the following law, to be found in the Revised Statutes, section 1754. It has become so obsolete in practice that I doubt if many members have a recollection that such a law was ever passed:

Sec. 1754. Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointment to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

How has that law been kept? Go through the Departments of the Government and see for yourself. Out of the eighty-five thousand men in the employ of the republican party, how many are disabled or crippled veterans? I venture to say that, compared with the army of lusty politicians that are to be found stowed away in the fat places, you can almost count the disabled soldiers on your fingers and toes.

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I know that in his fairness he does not wish to misrepresent.

Mr. McMAHON. I yield to the gentleman if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. CALKINS. Does not the gentleman know that more than half of the appointees in the Departments here in Washington were Union soldiers, and, including their widows and orphans, that the proportion is largely more than one-half?

Mr. McMAHON. But the law says that in all cases such persons shall be preferred.

Mr. CALKINS. But you said that the persons so appointed could be counted on your hands.

Mr. McMAHON. I say that one-half of those in the employment of the Government are not Union soldiers; and if the gentleman will go round with me some summer afternoon and count the eighty-five thousand, we will see who is right; and I reiterate my statement, that of these eighty-five thousand men, so few are disabled soldiers that you might, comparatively speaking, count them on your fingers and toes. My friend from Maine the other day laid great stress upon the absence of crippled soldiers from the soldiers' roll. What can he say about their employment not only under this administration but under that of General Grant? He made much sport the other day about "diseased democrats." I say to him it would be well if there were more of this class of men in your public offices. The gentleman is not well posted in the troubles that afflict the men of an army. And it is easy to be seen that he never set a squadron in the field. If he had, he never would have fallen into the error that a soldier can be disabled only by the loss of a leg or the loss of an arm. He never would have made light of a "diseased" soldier. The trouble with our friends upon the other side is that they always want something conspicuous. There is no merit to them in a "diseased man." He may have been a gallant soldier and have lost his health in the service of his country. But he does not show off well.

They want a man without an arm, or a leg—one that gets around with some trouble. Then they sit back in their chairs with all the unction of men who have performed a great and a noble work, and say to the world: "See what we have done. See the fourteen cripples we have on the soldiers' roll. We are not like those bad fellows on the other side." And with this their love for the Union soldier becomes exhausted, and they never take pains to inquire how many of the eighty-five thousand of their own officeholders are disabled or "diseased" men, when the law requires them all to be, for I take it for granted that for every office in the gift of the Government there can be found a disabled Union soldier competent to fill it under the provisions of the section I have read.

Now, let us pass from the consideration of republican unfaithfulness to this law; and see what else they have failed to do for the Union soldier. Their party had power in both Houses from 1865 to 1875, ten years. Did they ever pass the bill for the equalization of bounties? It passed this House repeatedly. It always failed in the Senate. You had both branches and the President for ten years. Your pretended friendship always failed at some point. Once it went through the Senate by the casting vote of Vice-President Wilson. But General Grant did not sign the bill. You never did more than keep up a respectable pretense.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman is mistaken; General Grant never vetoed the bill. It was never sent to him.

Mr. McMAHON. The bounty bill to which I refer was passed by the Forty-third Congress. The President's veto was upon the bill. In the Forty-fourth Congress this same bill was in the hands of my colleague's [Mr. BANNING's] committee. It came to the House and passed the "confederate" House, as it was then called, and when it went over to the Senate they blackballed it there.

Mr. DUNNELL. The bill never was sent to the President.

Mr. McMAHON. You are entirely mistaken.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am not mistaken. I know precisely what the record is. It was laid upon the table in the Senate.

Mr. McMAHON. The bill that was sent to the President, or failed to become a law, to which I refer was the bill that passed the Forty-third Congress. The Vice-President gave the casting vote in its favor.

Now let us pass on and consider another part of this comparative record. A bill has been pending for years in the House to pay arrearages of pensions. Have you ever passed it yet? We brought it up in the Forty-fourth Congress, and it was then in charge of a gallant soldier from Ohio, my colleague, [Mr. RICE.] It passed the House under a suspension of the rules in the so-called "confederate" House, and was sent to the Senate, and there it slept the sleep of death in the republican household—lost in the House of its professed friends.

Mr. FOSTER. You defeated it last Monday.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank thee for that word. We defeated the bill then offered, because my colleague's [Mr. RICE's] committee has a better bill for the same purpose on our Calendar to-day ready to be passed. It was reported to the House on the 13th of February last, and we are assured by General RICE and his committee it is a much better bill than was offered last Monday, and we did not then propose and do not propose now that demagogues upon the other side of the House shall steal our political thunder and in an underhand way appropriate the work of our committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. But you have neglected to press that bill although a day has been assigned for its consideration.

Mr. McMAHON. This is a charge against my colleague, General RICE. If my colleague desires to put his record as a soldier against that of my colleague, [Mr. RICE,] I want the two records lifted up before the country. I think General RICE may be trusted to look after the interests of the wounded soldier. He is one himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Put your record against Mr. RICE's.

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir; you and I belong to the same army, the stay-at-home guards.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly I do. Put your record against that of Mr. RICE's.

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir; but I put yours against his because you have undertaken to impeach his faithfulness. It is his record and not mine that is assailed.

Now let me proceed to another historical fact. A bill was reported here for pensioning the soldiers of the war of 1812—old, decrepit men who had fought in that war; men who had stood up for their country against a foreign enemy when certain men in another part of the country, which I will not now mention, were not standing up for their country as well as they should have done—indeed, not at all. Who voted against that measure? Twenty-five men upon the other side of the House recorded their votes against pensioning these few old patriots who had fought in the war of 1812 because perchance some of them might have sympathized with some of their sons or grandsons or nephews in the rebellion. I would not have that spot on my record. I would rather hide myself behind the thickest oak in the forest than have cast so unfeeling a vote. But the old soldier of the war of 1812 rejoices to-day, and he has the gratification of knowing that he is pensioned for the remainder of his days by a unanimous democratic vote and in spite of the votes of some of the political descendants of the blue-light patriots.

Who are now endeavoring to pension the soldiers of the Mexican war? An almost solid phalanx on this side of the House is trying to pass that bill. It may be too liberal, but I would rather err upon the side of liberality than on the side of parsimony in such matters. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] read us a long and deliberate essay against that bill because there may be some one included in its provisions who was against the Union during the late war. Who have voted to bring up that bill every time and all the time? We upon this side; and I for one propose to have the pleasure of voting for the bill either in its present shape or in some modified form. That does not meet the narrow views of gentlemen on the other side, who are almost unanimous against this bill. Such a thing as an enlarged love for the soldier never seems to penetrate them. There must be some politics in it before their love comes to the surface, and if they can only get astraddle of a poor Doorkeeper from the Confederate States they maul him unmercifully; and then the republican party rises to a moral grandeur it never reaches on any other occasion, and proclaims its hypocritical love for the soldier. It will not pension the Mexican soldier because it hopes to make political capital out of the fact that the bill may pension a few who were not on the Union side.

So now, gentlemen on the other side, thinking it an opportunity for political capital, without sincerity, undertake to make a foot-ball of this poor old man, General Shields, whose name they use without authority, whom we are willing to take in hand and do all we can for, and to do for him as for one of our own. We will "see" all that you choose to do, and "go a little better." [Laughter.]

I do not disparage the motives of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] for I believe that in this matter he is sincere; but when he finds supporters on the other side gentlemen must permit me to doubt their sincerity or honesty. When I find republicans coming up and voting solidly for an Irish Catholic democrat then I know there is a "cat in the meal-tub." [Laughter,] for I know that if the republicans had a majority of but one in this House they would see the gallant old hero in the bottomless pit before they would give him an office.

But let us go on in the investigation of facts. We have seen that the bills for the equalization of bounties and the arrearages of pensions have both passed a democratic House in times past. The importance of these votes is more apparent when we consider that the democratic party came here in the interest of retrenchment and reform. Have we ever cut down the pension bill? Have we ever listened to the oft-repeated charge that the pension list is too large; that fraudulent claims are on it; that it should be revised? No, we prefer to err on the side of the soldier or his suffering family. We have cut everywhere else; we have retrenched in every direction but in that. We vote for no increased expenditures except for the Union soldier.

And what has been the democratic record in the passage or recommendation of private bills for pensions? In the last Congress the democratic committee reported favorably to the House two hundred and seventy-seven private pension bills. Of these nearly every one that was reached was passed. When they went to your republican Senate, not one in five was passed by that body. And in the present House your democratic committee has already favorably reported one hundred and forty-six private bills. What has been our daily experience on Fridays, the day set apart for that work and all private business? Our confederate friend [Mr. BRIGHT, of Tennessee] regularly rises and moves that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. He knows perfectly well that, when a southern claim is reached on that Calendar, every patriot on the other side rises at once to pound it, and that it has not the ghost of a chance. But he does his duty as chairman of his committee. And when a pension bill is reached providing for some Union soldier or his family, when one single objection from the democratic side would suspend the passage of that bill for two weeks, is that one democrat to be found? Never! These denounced "confederate" enemies of the soldier never once take their revenge. They never once put in an objection. All the insult, the injury, and the misrepresentation to which they are compelled to submit in silence in the interest of their party organization never once betrays them into an objection to the pension of a Union soldier. Why? Because they honor and respect the men who fought against them. Because they accept the results of the war and know that pensions are due to the soldiers of the prevailing side. Now let us have further facts on the record of the two parties.

In the Forty-fourth Congress a bill of general application was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by that clever confederate general, the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK.] I refer to the bill to repeal the limitations upon all applications by officers for lost horses. This bill, covering a large number of officers' claims, was passed by this House. But when it went to the republican Senate, what fate did it there meet? In that body it "slept the sleep of death." Was this republican love for the Union officer?

What more? In the same Congress we passed in the House a bill to extend the provisions of the law providing for commutation for artificial limbs to certain persons who were excluded by the express provisions of a previous bill. We had no trouble to pass it in the House. It went to the Senate. There the very essence of the bill was taken out by amendment offered by the chairman of the Pension Committee; and the bill was vigorously fought. The bill was substantially destroyed by the vote of the Senate. The "confederate" House insisted on its law for the Union soldier; and the republican Senate was finally compelled to yield to the confederate House; and the law of August 15, 1876, became a law by confederate obstinacy in the interest of the Union soldier.

That same confederate House passed another bill, which became a law in February, 1877, increasing the pension of soldiers who had lost one hand and one foot from $24 to $36 per month. There is now ready for report to this House from your Committee on Pensions a bill to increase the pensions of all persons who have lost both eyes, or both hands, or both feet, to the sum of $72 per month, the pension now allowed by law being a little over $30 a month. This bill will pass. No one on this side will raise his voice against it. Pity for these poor unfortunate men, and a desire to help them in their terrible distress, is just as powerful and just, as honest and true upon this side as it is upon the other.

This is our record. We do not parade it except in self-defense.

We do not proclaim upon the highways, except when our position is misrepresented. We let our acts speak, and not our professions.

Upon this record we are willing to go to the country and to be judged by it. If there is hostility to the Union soldier in one line of it I do not observe it. If we are behind the republican party I do not know it, nor does the country perceive it. We may not be so pretensions, so clamorous, so talkative on the subject, but we have given proof that no reasonable measure for the relief of the Union soldier has ever suffered any damage at the hands of a democratic Congress.

Let us be judged by this record, not by the alleged shortcomings of a good-natured Doorkeeper. And when we vote for General Field to-day instead of General Shields—the confederate democrat instead of the Union democrat—the country will know that we have reserved higher and better and more appropriate honors and emoluments for the gallant soldier who has spent the best days of his life in the service of his country. And when the time comes for conferring these honors and emoluments upon General Shields, as it may come to-day, I pledge every democratic vote on this side of the House, and every "confederate" general, as one man to stand by gentlemen on the other side, if they sincerely wish to do him a favor. We do not wish him who has represented two States in the Senate of the United States to stoop to the insignificant and trying position of Doorkeeper of the House. His country would be ungrateful to ask him to accept the place. Let him go into an honorable and glorious retirement as an officer of the Army of the United States, and spend the remainder of his days in the quiet and competence that his great services and advanced age require. This will be a reward worth having.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have done. I hope that we are about through with the insincere professions which are the stock in trade of the other side. The country is tired of them. If gentlemen think they have advanced the interests of the country, or promoted the prospects of their party by recent demonstrations, I for one believe that they are mistaken. There is too much good sense in the people not to discern insincerity, and too much honesty not to despise hypocrisy.

Mr. CLYMER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CALKINS. I wish to say one thing— [Cries of "Vote!"] I wish to say in justification of myself before the question is put— [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. CALKINS. I do not; I wish to say a word by leave of the Chair and by leave of the House.

Mr. CLYMER. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to yield to a motion to postpone this until to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal. [Cries of "No!"]

Mr. CALKINS. I have a right to know who objects to my being heard.

The SPEAKER. Quite a number of voices objected.

Mr. CALKINS. No one extends more courtesy to members than I do and I wish to know who objects.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I am one who objects to the gentleman.

Mr. CALKINS. I am glad to know it.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question recurs on the substitute moved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] that the House now proceed to the election of Doorkeeper.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. State it.

Mr. BUTLER. As the Chair has decided that the resolution introduced by me is divisible, and as its division would make the first clause of the resolution and the substitute identical, I ask whether the gentleman will not reach what he desires by voting on my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question first recurs on the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BUTLER. All right; that is a substitute for the whole of my resolution.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative— yeas 123, nays 108, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—123.

Acklen,	Caldwell, John W.	Crittenden,	Finley,
Banning,	Candler,	Colberson,	Forney,
Bell,	Carlisle,	Davidson,	Franklin,
Bicknell,	Chalmers,	Dibrell,	Fuller,
Blackburn,	Clark, Alvah A.	Dickey,	Garth,
Bland,	Clarke of Kentucky,	Douglas,	Gause,
Blount,	Clark of Missouri,	Durham,	Gibson,
Boone,	Clymer,	Eden,	Giddings,
Bouck,	Cobb,	Elam,	Glover,
Bragg,	Cook,	Ellis,	Goode,
Bright,	Covett,	Evins, John H.	Gunter,
Buckner,	Cox, Samuel S.	Felton,	Hamilton,
Cabell,	Cravens,		Hardenbergh.

Harris, Henry R.	Landers,	Rea,	Throckmorton,
Harris, John T.	Ligon,	Reagan,	Turner,
Harrison,	Lockwood,	Reilly,	Turney,
Hartridge,	Lynde,	Rice, Americus V.	Waddell,
Hartzell,	Mackey,	Riddle,	Walker,
Hatcher,	Maish,	Robbins,	Walsh,
Hewitt, Abram S.	Manning,	Robertson,	Whitthorne,
Hewitt, G. W.	Martin,	Ross,	Wigginton,
Hooker,	McKenzie,	Saylor,	Williams, A. S.
House,	Mr. Mahon,	Scales,	Williams, James
Hunt,	Mills,	Schleicher,	Williams, Jere N.
Jones, Frank T.	Money,	Shelley,	Willis, Albert S.
Jones, James T.	Morgan,	Singleton,	Wilson,
Kenna,	Morrison,	Siemona,	Wood,
Kimond,	Muldrow,	Smith, William E.	Wright,
Knapp,	Patterson, T. M.	Southard,	Yeates,
Knott,	Pelphs,	Sparks,	Young.
	Potter,	Stenger,

NAYS—108.

Aldrich,	Danford,	Keightley,	Robinson, G. D.
Bacon,	Davis, Horace	Kelley,	Robinson, M. S.
Bagley,	Deering,	Ketcham,	Ryan,
Baker, John H.	Denison,	Lathrop,	Sampson,
Ballou,	Dunnell,	Lindsey,	Sapp,
Banks,	Eames,	Loring,	Scotton,
Bayne,	Errett,	Marsh,	Shallenberger,
Bisbee,	Evans, I. Newton	McCook,	Sinnickson,
Brewer,	Evans, James L.	McGowan,	Smalls,
Briggs,	Fort,	McKinley,	Springer,
Brown,	Foster,	Mitchell,	Stone, Joseph C.
Bundy,	Frye,	Monroe,	Stone, John W.
Burchard,	Hale,	Neal,	Strait,
Butler,	Hanna,	Norcross,	Thompson,
Cain,	Harmer,	O'Neill,	Townsend, Amos
Calkins,	Haskell,	Overton,	Townsend, M. I.
Camp,	Hazelton,	Patterson, G. W.	Van Vorhes,
Campbell,	Hendee,	Peddie,	Wait,
Cannon,	Henderson,	Phillips,	Watson,
Caswell,	Hiscock,	Pollard,	Welch,
Clark, Rush	Hubbell,	Pound,	White, Harry
Cole,	Hungerford,	Powers,	White, Michael D.
Collins,	Ittner,	Price,	Williams, Andrew
Conger,	Jones, John S.	Pugh,	Williams, C. G.
Crapo,	Joyce,	Rainey,	Williams, Richard
Cummings,	Keifer,	Randolph,	Willits,
Cutler,		Reed,	Wren.

NOT VOTING—60.

Aiken,	Cox, Jacob D.	Hunter,	Smith, A. Herr
Atkins,	Davis, Joseph J.	Jorgensen,	Starn,
Baker, William H.	Dean,	Killing,	Steele,
Beebe,	Dwight,	Lapham,	Stephens,
Benedict,	Eickhoff,	Luttrell,	Stewart,
Blair,	Ellsworth,	Mayham,	Swann,
Bliss,	Freeman,	Metcalfe,	Thorburgh,
Boyd,	Gardner,	Morse,	Tipton,
Brentano,	Garfield,	Muller,	Tucker,
Briggs,	Harris, Benj. W.	Oliver,	Townshend, R. W.
Brogden,	Hart,	Page,	Vance,
Burdick,	Hayes,	Pridemore,	Veeder,
Caldwell, W. P.	Henkle,	Quinn,	Ward,
Chittenden,	Henry,	Rice, William W.	Warner,
Chadlin,	Humphrey,	Roberts,	Willis, Benj. A.

So the substitute was adopted.

During the vote,

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, said: My colleague, Mr. BROGDEN, is confined to his room by illness since Saturday and is not able to be here to-day. I wish further to announce that I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan.

Mr. MORSE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. RICE.

Mr. YOUNG. My colleague, Mr. CALDWELL, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with Mr. FREEMAN, of Pennsylvania. If present, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. My colleague, Mr. HART, is paired with Mr. OLIVER, of Iowa, and my colleague, Mr. BENEDICT, is paired with Mr. BURDICK.

Mr. TUCKER. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. GARFIELD. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. EDEN. My colleague, Mr. TOWNSHEND, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. TIPTON, on all political questions.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. MAYHAM, is paired with Mr. HUMPHREYS, of Wisconsin, and my colleague, Mr. QUINN, is paired with his colleague, Mr. BACON.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. My colleague, Mr. AIKEN, is paired with Mr. WARD, of Pennsylvania. If he were present, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. DEAN. I am paired with my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. CLAFLIN. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with Mr. ROBERTS, of Maryland. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. QUINN. If he were present, I would vote "no" and I suppose he would vote "ay."

Mr. PAGE. I am paired on this question with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WILLIS. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. STEPHENS. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. SAMPSON. My colleague from Iowa, Mr. BURDICK, and Mr. BENEDICT, of New York, are paired.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. ATKINS, of Tennessee. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. BRENTANO. I am paired with Mr. MULLER, of New York. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. JORGENSEN. On all political questions I am paired with my colleague from Virginia, Mr. PRIDEMORE.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleagues, Mr. TIPTON and Mr. TOWNSHEND, are paired. Mr. TIPTON would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the resolution as amended by the adoption of the substitute.

The question being taken, the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution, as amended, was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I now nominate Charles W. Field, a citizen of the State of Georgia, for the office of Doorkeeper of this House.

Mr. BUTLER. I nominate the gallant, Christian, maimed, loyal, tried, and true Union soldier, James Shields, brigadier-general United States Army, a citizen of the State of Missouri.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. CLYMER. I decline to yield.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. We are about to vote for an officer of this House—

Mr. EDEN. That is not an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated he rose to make a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair of course recognized the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I am about to state it. I was saying we are about to vote for an officer of this House—

Mr. EDEN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I desire to know whether Mr. Field, who has been nominated by my colleague for this office, has been relieved of his political disabilities?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I am informed that he has not.

Mr. CLYMER. He has been; and I will say further that he is now holding office under the commissioners of this District.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. When did the bill pass?

Mr. CLYMER. He has been holding office for some time under the republican commissioners of this District.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give the gentleman from Pennsylvania every privilege as long as he adheres to his statement that his inquiry was a parliamentary one.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I protest I did adhere to my statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say the gentleman did not.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. According to my understanding of the rules I think I have a right to know for whom I am voting.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I nominate for Doorkeeper a Union soldier, a gentleman who fought three years in the war, who acquitted himself with great honor and credit, and who bears the marks of lead upon his body. I nominate John H. Trent, of the town of Morristown, in the State of Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. If there are no further nominations the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to move that the House do now adjourn?

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The House proceeded to vote viva voce for Doorkeeper, with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast, 232; number necessary for a choice, 117; of which Charles W. Field received 123 votes; James Shields received 101 votes; and John H. Trent received 8 votes.

The following is the vote in detail:

For Charles W. Field—Messrs. Acklen, Banning, Bell, Bicknell, Blackburn, Bland, Boun, Boone, Bouck, Bragg, Bright, Buckner, Cabell, John W. Caldwell, Camiller, Carlisle, Chalmers, Alvah A. Clark, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, Jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cobb, Collins, Cook, Covert, Samuel S. Cox, Cravens, Crittenden, Culberson, Cutler, Davidson, Dickey, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Elam, Ellis, John H. Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Garth, Gause, Gibson, Giddings, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Herbert, Hooker, House, Hunt, Frank Jones, James Taylor Jones, Kenna, Kimmel, Knapp, Knott, Landers, Ligon, Lockwood, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, Manning, Martin, McKenzie, McMahon, Mills, Money, Morgan, Morrison, Muldrow, Thomas M. Patterson, Potter, Rea, Reagan, Reilly, Americus V. Rice, Riddle, Robbins, Robertson, Ross, Saylor, Scales, Schleicher, Shelley, Singleton, Siemona, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Stenger, Throckmorton, Turner, Turney, Vance, Waddell, Walker, Walsh, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jere N. Williams, Albert S. Willis, Wilson, Wood, Wright, Yeates, and Young—123.

For James Shields—Messrs. Aldrich, Bacon, John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bisbee, Brewer, Briggs, Browne, Bundy, Burchard, Butler, Cain, Calkins, Camp, Campbell, Cannon, Caswell, Chittenden, Rush Clark, Cole, Conger, Crapo, Cummings, Danford, Horace Davis, Deering, Denison, Dunnell, Eames, James L. Evans, Fort, Foster, Frye, Hale, Hanna, Haskell, Hazelton, Hendee, Henderson, Hiscock, Hubbell, Hunter, Hungerford, Ittner, James, John S. Jones, Joyce, Keifer, Keightley, Kelley, Ketcham, Lathrop, Lindsey, Loring, Marsh, McCook, McGowan, McKinley, Mitchell, Monroe, Neal, Norcross, Overton, George W. Patterson, Peddie, Phillips, Pollard, Pound, Powers, Price, Pugh, Rainey, Reed, George D. Robinson, Milton S. Robinson, Ryan, Sampson, Sapp, Sexton, Shallenberger, Sinnickson, Smalls, Springer, Stewart, John W. Stone, Joseph C. Stone, Strait, Thompson, Amos Townsend, Martin I. Townsend, Van Vorhes, Walt, Watson, Welch, Michael D. White, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, Richard Williams, Willis, and Wren—101.

For John H. Trent—Messrs. Bagley, Bayne, Errett, I. Newton Evans, Harmer, O'Neill, Randolph, and Harry White—8.

During the roll-call the following statements were made:

Mr. BUNDY, (when his name was called.) I vote for General James Shields, who never had occasion to ask Congress to remove his political disabilities.

Mr. HAMILTON, (when his name was called.) I vote for Charles W. Field, a former major-general in the confederate service.

Mr. MORSE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. RICE.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. My colleague, Mr. HART, is paired with Mr. OLIVER, and my colleague, Mr. BENEDICT, is paired with Mr. BURDICK.

Mr. DIBRELL. Upon all political questions I am paired with my colleague, Mr. THORNBURGH. If he were here, I should vote for Mr. Field.

Mr. TUCKER. I am paired upon all political questions with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD. If he were present, I should vote for Mr. Field.

Mr. EDEN. My colleague, Mr. TOWNSHEND, is paired upon all political questions with Mr. TIPTON.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. MAYHAM, is paired with Mr. HUMPHREY, of Wisconsin. If my colleague were present, he would vote for Mr. Field.

Mr. DEAN. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CLAFLIN.

Mr. EWING. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. GARDNER. If he were present, I should vote for Mr. Field.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. QUINN. If he were present, I should vote for Mr. Shields.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My colleague, Mr. PRIDEMORE, is detained at his home by illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote for Mr. Field. He is paired with Mr. JORGENSEN.

Mr. PAGE. I am paired upon all political questions with Mr. WILLIS, of New York. If he were present, I should vote for Mr. Shields.

Mr. BRENTANO. I am paired with Mr. MULLER. If he were present, I should vote for Mr. Shields.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I am paired with Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If he were present, I should vote for Mr. Shields.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. ATKINS, of Tennessee. If he were present, he would vote for Mr. Field, and I should vote for Mr. Shields.

Mr. JORGENSEN. I am paired upon all political questions with my colleague, Mr. PRIDEMORE.

Mr. HENDERSON. My colleague, Mr. BOYD, is absent from the House on account of indisposition.

Mr. COLE. I desire to announce that Mr. WARD, of Pennsylvania, is paired with Mr. AIKEN, of South Carolina. If they were present, Mr. WARD would vote for Mr. Shields, and I suppose Mr. AIKEN would vote for Mr. Field.

Mr. YOUNG. My colleague, Mr. CALDWELL, is paired with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague, Mr. TIPTON, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. TOWNSHEND.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. If Mr. DWIGHT were here, he would vote for Mr. Shields and I should vote for Mr. Field.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I desire to say that I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan. If he were present, I should vote for Mr. Field. I desire also to announce that my colleague, Mr. BROGDEN, is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. BLAIR. Upon this matter I am paired with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. ROBERTS. If he were present, I should vote for Mr. Shields.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. Charles W. Field having received a majority of the votes, is duly elected Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask that the oath of office be now administered to the Doorkeeper-elect.

CHARLES W. FIELD appeared and qualified as Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives by taking the oath of office prescribed by law.

GENERAL JAMES SHIELDS.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have passed at this time a bill authorizing the President of the United States to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, a brigadier-general in the United States Army on the retired list. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman decline to allow the bill to be read?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANNING. I hope the gentleman will not object to the reading.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Is it in order for me to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair under his practice cannot recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on the motion to suspend the rules. The right to make that motion rests either with the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] or the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. FRANKLIN.]

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to suspend the rules and put upon its passage the bill of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK.] I want to know whether gentlemen on the other side mean what they say or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. CONGER. That can only be done after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to direct the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to Rule 145.

The Clerk read as follows:

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice being given of the motion therefor; nor shall any rule be suspended except by a vote of at least two-thirds of the members present; nor shall the order of business, as established by the rules, be postponed or changed, except by a vote of at least two-thirds of the members present; nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules, except during the last six days of the session, and on Monday of every week at the expiration of one hour after the Journal is read; unless the call of States and Territories for bills on leave and resolutions has been earlier concluded, when the Speaker may entertain a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill authorizing the President of the United States to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, a Brigadier-General in the United States Army, on the retired list.
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled—

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I object to the reading of the bill until the question of order is decided.

The SPEAKER. What question of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. The question of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. I raised no question of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Then I raise the question.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, the Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan not to interrupt the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

The Clerk (resuming) read as follows:

That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, formerly a brigadier-general and brevet major-general during the Mexican war and a brigadier-general of volunteers during the late rebellion and who was severely wounded in both said wars at the head of his command, a brigadier-general in the United States Army on the retired list, with rank and pay from and after the date of the passage of this act; and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed, so as to enable the President to make said appointment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I raise the question of order that this motion cannot be entertained under Rule 145.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late with his point of order, for the bill has been read.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I rose a moment ago and objected to the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose to state that the gentleman from Michigan had raised the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. And I then said that I raised the question of order.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly you did.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I raise the question of order now. I take the responsibility of so doing. The passage of this bill is without a precedent in the history of our Government.

The SPEAKER. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he rose for the purpose of objecting and raising the point of order. He will now state the point.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. My point is that under Rule 145 the motion to suspend the rules and put this bill on its passage cannot now be entertained by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Because the rule says so.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman point out the language of the rule which forbids the entertaining of this motion?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I raise the additional point that this motion cannot be entertained until after the expiration of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the language of the rule.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Very well. I find the language to be this:

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice.

Then the next clause seems to contemplate the entertainment of the motion; but that is explained away by the concluding clause of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please read that part of the rule that he relies upon in connection with the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I rely upon the entire rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reads the only portion of the rule that really relates to the proceedings of Monday:

On Monday of every week at the expiration of one hour after the Journal is read.

Mr. HALE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his point of order. At any rate it would only make a delay of an hour. The House will easily enough come to a vote on this proposition; and there is no advantage to be gained by insisting on the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I call for the regular order of business, which is the decision of my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide the point of order. The very letter of the rule says "on Monday of every week at the expiration of one hour after the Journal is read." The Journal was read and finished about a quarter after twelve o'clock; that is about three hours and three-quarters since.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Does the Speaker overrule my point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I submit.

Mr. FRANKLIN. And votes for General Shields. [Laughter.] The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 225, nays 6, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—225.

Aldrich,	Deering,	Horton,	Beilly,
Bacon,	Denison,	Itner,	Rice, Americus V.
Baker, John H.	Dibrell,	Jones, Frank	Riddle,
Baker, William H.	Dickey,	Jones, James T.	Robbins,
Bailou,	Douglas,	Jorgensen,	Robertson,
Banks,	Dunnell,	Joyce,	Robinson, M. S.
Banning,	Durham,	Keifer,	Ross,
Bayne,	Eames,	Keightley,	Ryan,
Bell,	Eden,	Kelley,	Sampson,
Bicknell,	Eickhoff,	Kenna,	Saylor,
Bisbee,	Elam,	Ketcham,	Scales,
Blackburn,	Ellis,	Kimmel,	Schleicher,
Bland,	Evans, I. Newton	Knapp,	Sexton,
Blount,	Evans, James L.	Knot,	Shallenberger,
Boone,	Evins, John H.	Landers,	Shelley,
Bonck,	Ewing,	Lathrop,	Sinclair,
Bragg,	Felton,	Ligon,	Sinnickson,
Brintano,	Finley,	Lindsay,	Slemmons,
Briggs,	Forney,	Lockwood,	Smalls,
Bridges,	Fort,	Loring,	Smith, William E.
Bright,	Foster,	Luttrell,	Southard,
Browne,	Franklin,	Lynde,	Sparks,
Buckner,	Frye,	Mackey,	Springer,
Bundy,	Fuller,	Maish,	Stenger,
Butler,	Garth,	Manning,	Stewart,
Cain,	Gause,	Marsh,	Stone, Joseph C.
Caldwell, John W.	Gibson,	Martin,	Stone, John W.
Calkins,	Giddings,	McCook,	Strait,
Camp,	Glover,	McKenzie,	Throckmorton,
Candler,	Goode,	McKinley,	Townsend, Amos
Cannon,	Gunter,	McMahon,	Townsend, M. I.
Carli le,	Hale,	Metcalfe,	Tucker,
Caswell,	Hamilton,	Mills,	Turner,
Chalmers,	Hanna,	Mitchell,	Turney,
Chittenden,	Hardenbergh,	Mosey,	Vance,
Clark, Alvah A.	Harmer,	Monroe,	Van Vorhes,
Clark of Missouri,	Harris, Benj. W.	Morgan,	Waddell,
Clarke of Kentucky,	Harris, Henry R.	Morrison,	Wait,
Clark, Ruah	Harris, John T.	Morse,	Walker,
Clymer,	Harrison,	Muldrow,	Walsh,
Cobb,	Hartbridge,	Neal,	Watson,
Cole,	Hartzell,	Page,	Welch,
Collins,	Haskell,	Patterson, T. M.	White, Michael D.
Conger,	Hatcher,	Patterson, G. W.	Wigginton,
Cook,	Haskellton,	Peddie,	Williams, A. S.
Covert,	Hendee,	Phelps,	Williams, Andrew
Cox, Samuel S.	Henderson,	Phillips,	Williams, C. G.
Cravens,	Henkle,	Pollard,	Williams, James.
Crittenden,	Hewitt, Abram S.	Potter,	Williams, Jere N.
Cullerson,	Hewitt, G. W.	Pound,	Williams, Richard
Cummings,	Herbert,	Powers,	Willis, Albert S.
Cutler,	Hiscock,	Price,	Willits,
Danford,	Hooker,	Pugh,	Wilson,
Davidson,	House,	Rainey,	Wood,
Davis, Horace	Hubbell,	Rea,	Wright,
Davis, Joseph J.	Hungerford,	Reagan,	Yeates,
Dean,	Hunter,	Reed,	Young.

NAYS—6.

Acklen,	Jones, John S.	Randolph,	White, Harry
Cox, Jacob D.	O'Neill,

NOT VOTING—57.

Aiken,	Cladin,	Mayham,	Stephens,
Atkins,	Crapo,	McGowan,	Swann,
Bacley,	Dwight,	Muller,	Thompson,
Beebe,	Ellsworth,	Norcross,	Thornburgh,
Benedict,	Errett,	Oliver,	Tipton,
Blair,	Freeman,	Overton,	Townshend, R. W.
Blass,	Gardner,	Pridemore,	Veeder,
Boyd,	Garfield,	Quinn,	Ward,
Brewer,	Hart,	Rice, William W.	Warner,
Brogden,	Hayes,	Roberts,	Whitthorne,
Burchard,	Henry,	Robinson, G. D.	Willis, Benj. A.
Burckick,	Humphrey,	Sapp,	Wren.
Cabell,	James,	Smith, A. Herr
Caldwell, W. P.	Killinger,	Starin,
Campbell,	Lapham,	Steele,

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

During the vote,

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, said: I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan, on all political questions; but, as this is not a political question, I vote in the affirmative. My colleague, Mr. BROGDEN is absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. TUCKER. I am paired with Mr. GARFIELD on all political questions. This is not one and I have therefore voted in the affirmative.

Mr. EDEN. My colleague, Mr. TOWNSEND, who is absent, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. TIPTON. I presume if they were here they would both vote in the affirmative.

Mr. EWING. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. GARDNER; but, as this seems not to be regarded as a political question, I vote in the affirmative.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. ATKINS. If he were here I would vote in the affirmative, and I presume he also would vote the same way.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague, Mr. TIPTON, is absent by leave of the House. I presume, if he were here, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. KENNA moved to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, objected.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 142) granting a pension to George McCoy;

A bill (H. R. No. 436) granting a pension to Adam Stinson;

A bill (H. R. No. 467) restoring the name of Thomas Crawford, a soldier of the Mexican war, to the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 596) to amend section 540, chapter 1, title 13, Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1254) for the relief of John A. Darling;

A bill (H. R. No. 1948) granting a pension to Bridget T. Hopper; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2516) granting a pension to Fannie E. Records, widow of Albert B. Records, late a private in Company G, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Volunteers.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 180) to provide for a building for the use of a post-office, the United States circuit and district courts, and other Government offices at Topeka, Kansas; in which concurrence was requested.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill (H. R. No. 4246) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I will call up the post-office appropriation bill for consideration immediately after the pension bill is disposed of.

CURRENCY.

Mr. BUTLER arose.

Mr. SAYLER. I do not wish to interfere with the gentleman from Massachusetts unless his business occupies too much time. I wish to move to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. It will not take much time.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will not move to adjourn, as I wish to report the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SINGLETON. And I wish to make a report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill (H. R. No. 4238) to supply a convenient currency with which the minor business transactions of the people may be done. I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue United States notes of denominations for the fractions of a dollar representing fifty and twenty-five cents each, only to the extent and according to the provisions of sections 3572, 3573, 3574, 3575, and 3576 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. And the same may be redeemed either in other notes of the United States, as provided in section 3574 of the Revised Statutes, or in coin.

SEC. 3. Any person paying into the Treasury either United States legal-tender notes or coin shall receive therefor such amount of said fractional currency as he may desire, equal to the amount so paid in, until the limit of issue of said fractional currency shall be reached.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay out one-sixth of all payments made from the Treasury in redemption of national bank notes in United States legal-tender notes of the denominations of $1, $2, $3, and $5, each in equal proportions, and all payments for the current expenses of the Government in like proportion, until the amount of such notes in circulation shall be equal to one-sixth of all the legal-tender notes and bank-notes shown by the books of the Treasury to have been issued, and to remain uncanceled until the amount of one-sixth thereof shall be reached. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, thereafter pay out United States legal-tender notes of such small denominations, in payment of current expenses, in such proportion with the other notes as to maintain the proportion of one-sixth of small legal-tender notes to the whole amount of bank notes and legal-tender notes which shall appear to have been issued and to remain uncanceled by the books of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. I now desire to have read a section of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. You will not get rid of it that way.

The SPEAKER. It will go over until next Monday.
The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of citizens of Hancock County, Indiana, for an increase of the pension of Eli C. Francis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BACON: The petition of Low, Harriman & Co. and other merchants of New York, against the passage of the tariff bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of the common council of Brooklyn, New York, for the construction of a post-office building in said city—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BAKER, of New York: The petition of Willard Johnson and 154 other business men of Oswego Falls, New York, against the passage of the tariff bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRAGG: The petition of John Malloy, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BREWER: A paper relating to the establishment of post-roads between Corunna and Hazleton, and between Elsie and Edgewood, Michigan—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CAIN: The petition of the Agricultural Society of South Carolina, against reducing the duty on jute and jute bagging—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Samuel Lowery, for aid in the establishment of silk culture in Alabama—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. CARLISLE: The petition of Mrs. S. B. Holton, for compensation for the use of property by the United States military authorities—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COLE: The petition of the tobacco manufacturers of Saint Louis, Missouri, against the establishment of bonded tobacco warehouses—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. COOK: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route between Montezuma, Evansville, Snow Drop, Henderson's, Green Hill, and Hawkinsville, Georgia—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CRAVENS: The petition of citizens of Arkansas, for an appropriation of $15,000 to clear obstructions in the Fourche la Pave River—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Wilson G. Gray, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FELTON: The petition of citizens of Marietta and Cobb Counties, Georgia, for the establishment of a branch mint at Marietta, Georgia—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. FORT: Papers relating to the claim of Allen Harper, of Illinois—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FOSTER: Two petitions of citizens of Seneca County, Ohio, against reducing the tariff on wool—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. FRYE: The petition of Gideon Bearse and others, that a pension be granted George C. Leighton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: The petition of citizens of Perry County, Indiana, for a post-route from Carrollton to Leopold, Indiana—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GIDDINGS: The petitions of the mayor and aldermen of Galveston, Texas, and of owners, masters of vessels, and others, for an appropriation to construct a light-house at the entrance of the inner harbor, port of Galveston—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HAZELTON: The petition of Montgomery Mills and 25 others, against changing the tariff on linseed-oil—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of the State grange of Wisconsin, against reducing the duty on wool—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Rowly Morris and 15 others, of Green County, Wisconsin, for the reduction of the duty on manufactured tobacco—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of the publisher of the Independent, Brodhead, Wisconsin, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John A. Klindt and 24 others, for the repeal of the bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HEWITT, of New York: The petition of citizens of New York, relating to national export trade—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of C. H. Caldwell and others, for the establishment of postal savings-banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MACKEY: The petition of the Nebraska colony, of Altoona, Pennsylvania, for the passage of the bill for the relief of settlers upon western Government lands—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MONEY: The petition of the publisher of The Advance, Winona, Mississippi, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of citizens of Mississippi, for the refunding of the cotton tax—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of Mrs. P. J. Leflore, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army—to the same committee.

By Mr. MONROE: The petition of John C. Biggs, of Ohio, and others, for the repeal of the limitation of time in the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: Papers relating to the claim of Mrs. Martha Cannon—to the Committee of Claims.

Also, the petition of Passed Assistant Engineer Absalom Kirby, United States Navy, for relief—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MORSE: The petition of John Ritchie and others, against the imposition of an income tax—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. PUGH: The petition of merchants and citizens of Trenton, New Jersey, for the establishment of ocean mail steamship service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Trenton, New Jersey, for the appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to investigate the workings of the interstate railroad system of the United States—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, two petitions of workmen, of Trenton, New Jersey, against any reduction of duties which protect labor and against the reimposition of the war tax on tea and coffee—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania: The petition of workmen of Columbia, Pennsylvania, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: The petitions of J. W. Manley and 100 other citizens of Muskingum County, Ohio, against any reduction of the tariff; of James Colville and 40 other citizens of Licking County, Ohio, against the reduction of the tariff on wool; and of D. H. Powers and 50 other citizens of Zanesville, Ohio, against any reduction of import duties on glass and other manufactured articles—to the same committee.

✓ By Mr. STEWART: The petition of citizens of Minnesota, for the amendment of the timber-culture act so as to reduce the number of acres necessary to be cultivated from forty to ten acres—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York: Two petitions of citizens of Troy, New York, against reviving the income tax—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. VAN VORHES: The petitions of John Parmeter and 23 other citizens of Meigs County; of M. B. Custer and 46 other citizens of Fairfield County, and of W. H. Hammond and 88 other citizens of Hocking County, Ohio, against any reduction of the tariff on wools and woollens—to the same committee.

By Mr. WAIT: Papers relating to the claim of J. George Harris, of Tennessee—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of G. W. and Agnes Bumpass, of Tennessee, for the reference of their war claim to the southern claims commission—to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 9, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EUSTIS presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Red River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of A. M. Miller & Co., and others, foreign steamship agents, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2475) to amend certain sections of titles 43 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, so far as the same relates to foreign vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of Mrs. Nancy M. Richmond, of Pierson, Michigan, widow of Lyman A. Richmond, a soldier in the Mexican war, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Sidney T. Holmes and 156 others, business men of Bay City, Michigan, praying for the unconditional repeal of the national bankrupt law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY presented the memorial of George Rutson, D. H. Noyes, and 254 others, residents of the coast of Saginaw Bay, Lake Huron, remonstrating against the proposed transfer of the life-saving service from the Treasury to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of Hugo Osterhaus, United States Navy, praying that Master W. M. Wood, United States Navy, be restored to his proper rank. I move that the petition be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I trust that that committee will consider it in connection with the proposed promotion of Mr. Wood.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Lelia E. McCauley, widow of Commodore Charles S. McCauley, late of the United States Navy, praying payment for personal property lost at the abandonment of the navy-yard, Norfolk, Virginia, April 20, 1861; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of John H. Walker and others, citizens of Pensacola, Florida, praying for the construction of a southern transcontinental railway from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. E. C. Long, of Florida, daughter of the late Richard K. Call, praying compensation for services rendered the Government by her late father, in accordance with a judgment of the northern district court of Florida, rendered on the 18th day of January, 1847; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OGLESBY presented the petition of Charles F. Tate, and other citizens of Illinois on his behalf, praying that he be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 21) for the relief of Brigadier-General Alexander S. Webb, late of the United States Army, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 864) to provide for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a military telegraph in Dakota and Montana Territories, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1058) to repair and put in operation the mint at New Orleans, authorizing the coinage of gold and silver thereat, and making an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. The bill just reported is in the nature of a substitute for two other bills, the bill (S. No. 916) to re-establish the mint at New Orleans, authorizing the coinage of gold and silver thereat, and making an appropriation therefor, and the bill (S. No. 768) to defray the expenses of the mint and assay-office at New Orleans, Louisiana, and making an appropriation therefor. I therefore move that these bills be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I ought to add that the Committee on Finance deem this mint at New Orleans to be all that will be necessary to coin all the silver that is required under existing law.

Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 375) for the protection of widows, orphans, and heirs at law of officers of the Army of the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 592) for the relief of Captain P. A. Owen, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1021) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3740) to provide for the deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for prior years, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I will call it up at such time time as the business of the Senate may suggest a proper opportunity.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1059) granting a pension to Jacob S. Hunt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1060) directing the Secretary of War to erect headstones over the graves of soldiers interred in the cemetery at Monnd City, Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1061) to introduce industrial expositions into the public schools of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1062) to introduce moral and social science into the public schools of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1063) providing for the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mails on railroad routes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1064) for the relief of Henry Warren; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLAINE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1065) for the relief of Toussaint Mesplie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, it was Ordered, That Catharine T. Campbell have leave to withdraw her petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That Andrew B. Battelle and George D. Evans have leave to withdraw their petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. MITCHELL. On the 27th of last month the Committee on Claims instructed me to report to the Senate a bill (S. No. 999) for the relief of Eliza E. Hebert. This claim has been reported heretofore twice, favorably in both Houses, I believe; but from information which I have received from a prominent Senator within the last few days and also from some further information which I have received from other sources, I am impressed by the conviction that this claim should receive further consideration at the hands of the committee. I therefore move the recommitment of the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, communicating, in answer to a resolution of February 13, 1878, information in relation to lands belonging to the United States in the State of Florida, reserved for naval purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY REGULATIONS.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 868) to provide for a code of Army regulations.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to have prepared and to report to Congress at the next session, or as soon thereafter as is practicable, a code of regulations for the government of the Army and of the militia in actual service, which shall embrace all necessary orders and forms of a general character for the performance of all duties incumbent on officers and men in the military service, including rules for the government of courts-martial; and the existing regulations are to remain in force until Congress shall have acted on his report.

Mr. MAXEY. This bill comes from the Committee on Military Affairs, who instructed me on the 2d instant to report it back favorably, with this amendment: In line 4, after the word "Congress," to strike out the words "at the next session or;" and in line 5, after the word "soon," to strike out "thereafter;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to have prepared and to report to Congress as soon as is practicable a code of regulations, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on this amendment reported from the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state that there have been no Army regulations revised for fifteen years, since when the Army has been both increased and reduced. A great many laws have been passed affecting the Army, and many regulations and rules have been made which are not embraced in the revised Army regulations of 1863 but are scattered through many papers, and the inconvenience is apparent. The Secretary of War urges the passage of such a bill, the only question being whether the code should be published under the supervision of the President, without being placed before Congress, or whether it should be submitted to Congress. I will state that a bill like this passed Congress several years ago, but it contained the words "and to report to Congress at the next session." The report was not acted on by the end of the then next session, and the result was that we had no revision of the Army regulations under that measure. That was several years ago. The Committee on Military Affairs instruct me to say that in their opinion the clause of the Constitution which declares that Congress shall have power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces" necessitates the adoption of these rules, when made, by Congress; that an expert or experts may be employed in aiding this work, but the final act of judgment in the adoption of the rules must be by Congress. Hence the committee report the bill as it now stands.

Mr. McMILLAN. May I inquire of the honorable Senator from Texas whether the views of the War Department and of the General of the Army have been obtained upon this subject or can be communicated by the Senator?

Mr. MAXEY. I have already stated, but presume the Senator did not hear me, that the Military Committee referred the whole matter to the Secretary of War, who urges the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I had not heard the Senator. His remarks were indistinct in this part of the Chamber.

Mr. MAXEY. I took that precaution myself.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. C. SNYDER.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 536) for the relief of W. C. Snyder, of Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Auditor of the Post-Office Department to credit the account of W. C. Snyder, as postmaster at Fulton, Whitesides County, Illinois, with $175, on his money-order account, for that sum paid by him upon money-orders burned on the 26th of March, 1875; and the further sum of $451 on his general account, being the amount of postage-stamps and stamped envelopes burned by the destruction of his office by fire, and funds of the United States stolen on that day, without his fault or negligence.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "451" and insert "381," so as to read:

And the further sum of $381 on his general account, being the amount of postage-stamps and stamped envelopes burned in the destruction of his office by fire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, after the word "fire," to strike out the words "and funds of the United States stolen;" so as to read:

Being the amount of postage-stamps and stamped envelopes burned by the destruction of his office by fire on the said 26th of March, A. D. 1875, without his fault or negligence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LANDS OF BROTHERTOWN INDIANS.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1135. This bill came from the House with a report which the Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration, and they recommend that it pass. The committee find in reading the bill that there is a clerical error which occurs in the engrossed bill of the House precisely as it appears in this printed bill. The object of the bill is to appoint a certain number of the Brothertown Indians trustees to sell a small portion of a township of public lands which belonged to the Brothertown Indians long, long ago, and which was under a law of Congress allotted to them in severalty, and upon the allotment being made to each of the Indians of the tribe they thereby became citizens of the United States. The township was disposed to each Indian in severalty, and the title all settled, and they became citizens. Subsequently it was discovered that there was an excess of about one hundred acres in the township which was not divided or allotted. The bill simply provides that the Brothertown Indians in their council may appoint four or five men, named in the bill as trustees to sell that hundred acres and divide the proceeds among the tribe; that is all. I wish the bill to be passed as proposed to be amended so that it may go back to the House to be corrected. It is a mere clerical error which compels us to send it back for the purpose of correction. But for that amendment the bill would pass here without hesitation, and immediately become a law. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1135) to authorize the issue of a patent of certain lands in the Brothertown reservation, in the State of Wisconsin, to the persons selected by the Brothertown Indians.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 2 of section 2 to strike out the words "is hereby" where they twice occur.

Mr. OGLESBY. These words are simply repeated in that line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT KANSAS CITY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3712) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Kansas, in the State of Missouri.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for and cause to be erected a suitable building, with fire-proof vault extending to each story, for the accommodation of the post-office, custom-house, bonded warehouse, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices, at the city of Kansas, Missouri. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $200,000.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out lines 16, 17, and 18, in the following words:

Release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or assess said site, or the property thereon, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State, and the service of any civil processes therein.

So that the proviso will read:

Provided, That no money to be appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site of said building shall be vested in the United States, and until the State of Missouri shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended toward the construction of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. I desire to inquire whether the requisite steps have been taken so that this will be all that the building will cost, or whether there are any plans and specifications?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state that it was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and he estimated that $200,000 would be sufficient to complete a building of the character which was needed at Kansas City, Missouri. This bill limits the cost to that amount.

Mr. KERNAN. Please state what are the necessities for a building there?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state the necessities for a building at Kansas City. In the first place, the amount of clearings at the Kansas City clearing-house for 1875 was $40,815,935.76; for 1876, $62,840,608.76; and for 1877, $69,213,011.51. The internal revenue paid by Kansas City alone, at the Kansas City office, not including the amount that was collected from the adjoining district, for 1874 was $63,190.50; for 1875, $72,144.95; for 1876, $75,586.97; and for 1877, $74,285.19. The post-office does probably a larger business than that of any of the western cities of anything like a similar size. The aggregate receipts from the sale of stamps, envelopes, and cards; for box rent, unpaid letters, waste-paper, and fees on money orders for 1875 were $39,768.08; for 1876, $52,000; and for 1877, $64,221.51. The aggregate expenses of the office, clerk hire, rent, salaries, and carrier system altogether, for 1875 were $25,813.85, leaving a net profit to the Government of $13,954.23. For 1876 the expenses were $23,446.51, leaving a net gain to the Government of $25,553.49; and for 1877 the expenses were $25,726.91, leaving a net gain to the Government of $38,494.60. The money orders issued at that office amounted to $125,123.45; the fees on the same to $1,190.60. The certificates of deposit for money-order funds from the postmasters amounted to $636,343.74, making the total receipts from these two resources $763,657.79. The total number of pieces of mail matter delivered was 3,007,605. The total number of pieces of mail matter collected was 1,478,986. The number of letters sent was 1,25,000, and the number of letters delivered in the city 1,814,082.

It is one of the largest railroad centers west of Saint Louis, has nine railroads centering there, and has communication with all parts of the great West. I ask that this bill may be passed simply because it is a matter of economy to the Government to provide a building at that place for the transaction of its rapidly increasing business. The business now justifies the expenditure, and in a very few years the business will be double what it is now.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say, in addition to what the Senator from Missouri has said, that this matter was very fully investigated by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and reported unanimously.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DAKOTA SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 927) to authorize the construction of a narrow-gauge railroad from Bismarck to the Black Hills.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Railroads with amendments.

Mr. WINDOM. This bill was read at length on a former occasion, and at the request of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] it was laid over that he might suggest some amendments. He has prepared a number of amendments which meet the approval of the members of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are some committee amendments which will be first disposed of. They will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment of the Committee on Railroads is, in line 3 of section 1, to strike out "William Johnson" and to insert "William A. Johnstone" as the name of one of the corporators.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 6 of section 1, to strike out "Loren" and insert "Lorain" in the name of "Lorain P. Hilliard."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 7, section 2, after the word "entire," to insert the word "line;" so as to read:

And complete, furnish, and equip, as herein provided, the entire line of its said main line within four years after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 5, to strike out the following words:

And when the business of said road shall seem to require it, the said company may change the gauge of said railroad to the ordinary and usual gauge of first-class trunk railroads.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 8, in the following words:

That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act, having due regard to rights which may have become vested in said company.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The said Dakota Southwestern Railroad Company may construct its main line and branches of such gauge as may be determined on by its board of directors. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act until such time as the said railroad so to be built shall be, or the major part thereof shall be, within the limits of some State. And when the said railroad, or the greater part thereof, shall be within the limits of a State, the corporation hereby created shall in all respects be considered and treated as a corporation created by such State, whenever it shall have become subject to the laws thereof; and thereafter Congress shall not have any greater or other control over such corporation than if it had been created by the State.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has the bill in charge whether he proposes to strike out that provision of the charter which gives Congress the power to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] will answer that question. He has an amendment prepared to meet that case.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I propose to leave the eighth section as contained in this bill, reserving the power, stricken out as it is, and then for the eighth section, which is printed as an amendment on the thirteenth page, I propose to offer the following as a substitute:

Whenever any part of the present Territory of Dakota through which said road may run shall be admitted into the Union as a State or States, so much of said railroad and its appurtenances and property as may be within any such State shall be subject to State taxation.

I propose that as a substitute for section 8 on page 13, the committee's amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan propose to amend the amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Yes, sir. Then I propose to add as a new section:

This act, and every provision thereof, and every right, power, and privilege therein granted, are hereby declared to be subject to the condition that Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act or any provision therein contained.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be first acted upon.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to say that, having charge of this bill, I have no objection to either of these amendments, and I hope they may be adopted. I am sure the last is strong enough for all purposes.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish the last amendment to come in at the close of the bill, as a ninth section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In that view the committee's amendment will be dealt with separately and first disposed of. It will be reported now in order that the Senate may vote upon it understandingly.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Railroads report to strike out section 8, in the following words:

That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act, having due regard to rights which may have become vested in said company.

And in lieu of these words to insert:

SEC. 8. The said Dakota Southwestern Railroad Company may construct its main line and branches of such gauge as may be determined on by its board of directors. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act until such time as the said railroad so to be built shall be, or the major part thereof shall be, within the limits of some State. And when the said railroad, or the greater part thereof, shall be within the limits of a State, the corporation hereby created shall in all respects be considered and treated as a corporation created by such State, whenever it shall have become subject to the laws thereof; and thereafter Congress shall not have any greater or other control over such corporation than if it had been created by the State.

Mr. WINDOM. I propose to have that struck out in order to accept the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The amendment I wish now to come in place of section 8 is the following:

Whenever any part of the present Territory of Dakota, through which said road may run, shall be admitted into the Union as a State or States, so much of said railroad and its appurtenances and property as may be within any such State shall be subject to State taxation.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I should like to inquire whether the railroad is to be exempt from taxation until any portion of that Territory has become a State under the original bill?

Mr. TELLER. I will say that there is nothing in the bill that exempts the company from taxation. If there is anything of that kind in the bill I propose to strike it out.

Mr. CHAFFEE. If there is nothing in the bill to exempt the railroad from taxation I do not see the force of the amendment.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. My amendment in no way affects the question of taxation between this time and the time when the Territory shall be admitted as a State. It neither affirms nor denies that power.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Now, I move to insert as the last section the following:

SEC. 9. This act, and every provision thereof, and every right, power, and privilege therein granted, are hereby declared to be subject to the condition that Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act, or any provision therein contained.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan whether by the amendment offered and adopted at his instance there is any provision or implication in the bill which exempts the property of this railroad company from taxation during the time of the territorial existence of the country through which it passes?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. None whatever, as I understand it. It only provides for the contingency when the Territory becomes a State or States.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to suggest several amendments for the purpose of carrying out one object. The bill, as reported from the Committee on Railroads, provides for branch roads. I desire to strike out everything in the bill with reference to branches so as to make but a single line from Bismarck to the Black Hills. I first move, however, on line 20 of section 1, to strike out "narrow gauge."

Mr. SARGENT. That makes it a broad-gauge instead of a narrow-gauge road.

Mr. WINDOM. It leaves the company at liberty to adopt either as they may choose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In the same section, on line 24, I move to strike out, commencing after the word "corporation," the words:

With such branch or branches from the most advantageous place or places on the main line, to such other place or places in or near the Black Hills, as the said board may deem advisable.

Mr. SARGENT. Have the amendments with reference to striking off the branches the concurrence of the committee? I notice the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is absent.

Mr. WINDOM. There are no specific branches mentioned, but by the bill as reported there is a general authority to build branches. It was not discussed in committee particularly, but upon consideration several of us in the Senate have thought it advisable to limit the power to authority to build a single railroad.

Mr. SARGENT. I see the Senator from Oregon is now here. I suppose he has no objection to the proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is it?

Mr. WINDOM. The proposition is to strike out the branches of the little Bismarck and the Black Hills road, so as to authorize the building of only one line.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 87 of section 1, I move to strike out the words "alter and repeal," and insert the words "any reasonable." I make the motion at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan. It will then read:

Said company shall have power to make any reasonable by-laws, rules, and regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 93, in the same section, after the word "company," I move to insert—

And may alter or repeal the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 7 of section 2, I move to strike out the words "said main line" and insert "road."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In the same section, after the word "act," on line 8, I move to strike out the words—

And the said company shall locate its branch line or lines and file maps thereof in the office of the Secretary of the Interior within five years after the passage of this act, and shall complete, furnish, and equip all its branch lines within five years thereafter; and the said company shall be debarred from all right, power, and authority to construct any branch line which shall not be located within the time above limited thereafter.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator state why he wants to strike those words out?

Mr. WINDOM. I said a moment ago that the bill as reported gives a sort of general authority to construct branch roads and equip them. On reflection, it is deemed advisable to confine them to a single line, as we do not know where they may wish to build branches, and if they do they can apply to Congress hereafter.

Mr. THURMAN. I quite agree to that if the Senate has stricken out the power to build branch roads.

Mr. WINDOM. This is for the same thing, in order to perfect the bill and make it conform to the action of the Senate in striking out the branches.

Mr. THURMAN. The question I asked was whether the antecedent provisions in regard to the branch roads had been stricken out.

Mr. WINDOM. They have been.

Mr. THURMAN. That is all right, then.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 16 of the same section, after the word "railroad," I move to strike out the words "and branches."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On lines 20 and 21 of the same section I move to strike out the words "narrow gauge."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 26 of the same section I move to strike out the words "and branches" after "road."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On the same line I move to strike out the word "mails." The purpose of that is to provide at the end of the section the following:

And shall transport the mails of the United States at rates not higher than the average rates which shall be paid on railroads in the State of Minnesota.

I move that at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, who has given this bill very careful consideration.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 4 of section 3 I move to strike out the words "and branches."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On lines 9 and 10 in the same section I move to strike out the words "and branches their entire length."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 5, section 4, I move to strike out the words "and branches."

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator allow me before he passes from section 3, to suggest an amendment there? I see by section 3, commencing with line 10, that the right of way is granted to the railroad and branches:

Their entire length through the public domain, including all necessary ground for station-buildings, workshops, engine-houses, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

It seems to me, and I suggest it to the Senator who is now offering amendments to this bill, that the amount of land donated to this railroad company for depots, &c., should be fixed. If it is not fixed the time will come when there will be an altercation between the railroad company and the people living around the depots. The company will claim an indefinite amount of land. There should be so many acres fixed; make it a liberal amount if you will; but make it positive and definite. The language is:

All necessary ground for station-buildings, &c.

They may say fifty acres or a hundred acres are necessary. My object is to restrict this railroad company within reasonable limits so that the citizens—it may be in a town or a town may grow up around the depot, and the citizens of that town or in and around that depot, want to be assured in their rights. After they have put up a building, unpretentious as it may be, they do not want the railroad company to come in and say "this is our ground; you must tear down your building and give away because it is necessary for this switch or this turn-out or this depot." Fix the number of acres. If the Senator does not make any suggestion, I would suggest a number of acres, but I prefer to leave it to the wisdom of the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. That is a very difficult thing to do. I think it is not important to do it as the word "necessary" will confine them to the land that will be absolutely needed for the purpose.

Mr. HEREFORD. I think we should fix the number of acres; otherwise I will oppose the bill. I believe in granting the right of way to railroads through these Territories; I am liberal in that; but as to depot grounds, &c., the amount should be fixed and definite. Here is the right of way for a hundred feet in width granted on each side of the railroad—

Including all necessary ground for station-buildings, workshops, engine-houses, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

I should say myself that twenty acres would be enough for a depot. Twenty acres is a large amount of land. Twenty acres is more than is used for either one of the great depots here in Washington City. They have not the half of twenty acres. I suggest that section 3 be amended so as to confine the amount of land donated for the purposes specified in lines 11, 12, and 13, to "not exceeding twenty acres at any one station."

Mr. WINDOM. I think they would not get more than that as the bill now stands; but it is extremely difficult to limit it. I think if the Senator moves to do so at all, he should at least make the ordinary Government subdivision which is forty acres. I think that is more than they would get under the present language.

Mr. HEREFORD. I have no objection to forty acres. There should be some limit.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the bill is better as it is, but if the Senator makes that suggestion I have no objection to forty acres.

Mr. HEREFORD. I move to amend, then, by saying, "not to exceed forty acres at any one station."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator will allow me to say a few words as to that, I wish to accomplish what he wants to accomplish, and that is not to give any more to this company than is necessary for the purpose. In my opinion, if the language is left to stand as it is now, they not only would not get forty acres but they would not get twenty.

Mr. HEREFORD. I would ask the Senator from Michigan who is to determine what is necessary?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I suppose if any question arose it might be a question of law for the courts to decide, if they undertook to claim more than was necessary for the purpose. In the first instance probably the Secretary of the Interior would decide, or the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not think it is very important, but I would rather take the vote on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HEREFORD. The forty acres may not be worth $40 now, but the time may come when it will be worth a great deal more, and a private citizen may have gone and built a house there, and through the power of the railroad company they may be able to control the jury and the jury may determine that a certain piece of property on which a private citizen has erected a house is necessary for railroad purposes; and there is no provision here made that that building thus put up by a private citizen shall be paid for by the railroad, because by the verdict it will have been ascertained that the land was necessary for railroad purposes; and if necessary for railroad purposes, then this private citizen ought not to have put his house thereon. I desire right now as this bill is passing through that it shall limit the amount. It has been usual in all bills like this to limit the amount that railroad companies shall have at each station.

Mr. WINDOM. Let us have a vote, Mr. President.

Mr. HEREFORD. I am informed by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE,] who is more familiar with such legislation than I am, that there is a general law now to that effect relative to the right of way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 24, noes 15.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 5 of section 4 I move to strike out the words "and branches."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 3 of section 5 I move to strike out the words "and branches."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 15 and line 18 of section 6 I move to strike out the words "and branches" where they occur respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no further amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. On page 8, after the word "court," in line 16 of section 4, I move to insert:

And in determining the amount of such compensation they shall not take into account any benefit or advantage to or increase in value of the land of such owner by reason of the construction of said road.

The way this bill is drawn these commissioners might offset the advantage to the land of the owner by reason of the construction of the railroad against the value of the land taken or the damage done. We had large experience in that in Ohio once in the construction of the Ohio Canal. The commissioners went for about forty miles down the Scioto Valley and never assessed one dollar of damages. Three commissioners, just as are here provided for, went up and down that valley, and for forty miles never awarded one single cent of damages, because, they said, owing to the construction of the canal there would be a general rise in the value of the land all along there, and that that would more than compensate the owner for the loss. To correct that the people of Ohio put in their constitution just what I offer here.

Mr. McDONALD. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that that amendment should be amended in this way:

That in estimating the value of the land taken they shall not take into account, &c.

If you estimate the consequential damages, may you not consider consequential benefits? If it is confined to the value of the land taken, it is all right.

Mr. WINDOM. There is no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio as modified by the Senator from Indiana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "court," in line 16, section 4, it is proposed to insert:

And in estimating the value of the lands taken they shall not take into account any benefit or advantage to or increase in value of the land of such owner by reason of the construction of said road.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not say "the value of the land taken."

Mr. McDONALD. I suggested that.

Mr. THURMAN. I prefer it in the way I had it first. I do not accept the suggestion of my friend from Indiana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read as proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment as offered is in these words: And in determining the amount of such compensation they shall not take into account any benefit or advantage to or increase in value of the land of such owner by reason of the construction of said road.

Mr. McDONALD. I now suggest an amendment to the amendment to confine it to the value of the land taken. I move to amend the amendment in that way.

Mr. THURMAN. I have several other amendments to offer to this bill, not in the spirit of hostility to it at all, but I think that it is very important it should be amended—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. Therefore I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me say a single word. There is nothing in the world granted by the bill but the right of way and the right to form the company. It is believed the road can be built this summer if the bill is passed in reasonable time this spring. I am anxious to pass it as soon as possible.

Mr. THURMAN. I will help the Senator to pass it in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. WINDOM. I give notice to the Senate that I will try to call it up to-morrow in the morning hour.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4245) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, a brigadier-general in the United States Army on the retired list; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3102) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriations for detecting trespass on public lands, and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. M. J. DURHAM of Kentucky, Mr. J. H. BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. J. H. BAKER of Indiana managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3064) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 691) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas," approved February 19, 1873; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 22) providing for a place of deposit for the records and proceedings of the commission appointed under the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, 1877.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 15) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I beg everybody to believe that I am not going to deliver an oration and to hope that I shall finish just as soon as a condensed statement of what it appears to the committee ought to be now stated can be made. This affair has prolonged itself so much, and so much of discursive learning and eloquence has been devoted to it that it is not at all surprising that a good many Senators may feel that it has come to be a bore; but there is, after all, this matter before us; there is the solemn responsibility which we as the rulers of the commonwealth of this country are bound to perform in doing justice between these corporations and the people of the United States; and in order to do that we must understand exactly how the case stands. The Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] and some other Senators have, with the apparent purpose of producing impressions against the recommendations of the committee in the minds of Senators, dwelt with eloquence and with persuasiveness upon the great benefit that these companies have done to the people and to mankind at large by the construction of these roads, as if therefore either Congress has no power to regulate their future proceedings, or that we ought to condone (as the expression of the Senator from California was) this debt not only to ourselves but to all the other creditors of the corporations who stand just as we do, entitled to the protection of Congress for the preservation of their interest just as much as the people are entitled to the protection of Congress for the preservation of their rights which as tax-payers are now drawn into peril.

Mr. SARGENT. I presume the Senator does not wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By no means.

Mr. SARGENT. Did the Senator understand me that there should be any condonation of this debt?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No.

Mr. SARGENT. I said nothing of that kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the Senator said nothing of that kind, but the Senator used the term "condonation" over and over again applied to one part of these transactions, which condonation, if agreed to and made, would have exactly the effect that I speak of, of diminishing the honest resources of these companies in a very large degree, and thereby diminishing the chances of their creditors, including the people of the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. Now, if my friend will allow me—I certainly do not wish to interrupt him causelessly—I did not use the word "condonation" once nor many times in that connection at all. I did not use it in reference to the debt, its disposal, or the manner of its being incurred. I simply said that with reference to certain alleged offenses which had been brought in here to make weight against the companies, by previous non-action of Congress there had been a condonation, but I did not argue that for that reason the debt should be forgiven or any part of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, Mr. President, I do not precisely understand the impulse which should have led the Senator from California and many others who have spoken of equalities of rights and of fair play, as they call it, to these companies, and of tenderness, of liberality, to press upon the Senate repeatedly and continually as affecting this question of law, of our right to amend these charters, and this question of business prudence and duty to the creditors of these companies to preserve their funds for their benefit, unless it was to effect some purpose or other. The Senator from California rarely talks without a purpose, never I may say. His mind is clear and far-reaching; and when he delivers to this body a speech like that which I had the pleasure of listening to, laying stress more upon the benefits that these companies have conferred upon the people of the United States and upon the Government in respect of cheapening transportation, it must have been for the purpose of leading Senators either away from the real question that my friend now admits is here, or of persuading them to mitigate and to blind the intellectual processes, by which, first, we are to understand the present condition of affairs and our rights, and, second, those wholesome regulations which prudence and justice require should be adopted. But I am glad to know that my honorable friend now, if he ever was suspected of occupying such an attitude, does not; and so we may dismiss, I take it, from the arena all these considerations, all that has been pressed upon us about the enormous benefactions which these great monopolies have bestowed upon the people of this country—exactly such benefactions as the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company, as every railway company in every State has bestowed upon the people of its State, although in many instances (not in respect to the first company I have named but in many instances in all the States) we know that these benefactions have grown out of prodigious corruption, out of prodigious fraud on the part of the managers of these corporations, not only against the public in unjust and coercive rates, but against their own stockholders and creditors who have contributed the money by which the enterprises were inaugurated and carried on. And yet the benefit to public considerations is the same. A bankrupt and corrupt railway corporation that is only the spoil upon which its directors or its trustees or its receivers fatten, nevertheless carries your grain, and your coal, and your beef, and your wool, and your iron, and your citizens, from one part of the country to the other; and such companies are in that sense benefactors. So, Mr. President, in the same sense would be the benefactions of a mob or of a public enemy that might break into the Treasury of the United States to-day at New York—not here, I suppose, for there is not much money here, I presume—and seize the one hundred millions of gold that is there, and give it to the poor; there would be bread and clothing and shelter for the poor and there would be benefaction.

Then Mr. President, it does not do to have our minds warped or prejudiced in the least degree pro or con in respect to these affairs by the circumstance that these railways have diminished the total expense to the Government of the United States in transportation by their construction. It is not, by the way, a demonstrable problem that they have. There are many other things to be taken into the account if you were to strike a balance-sheet in reference to these things, because you will perceive that an estimate based upon military expenses of a given year in respect to the Indians or upon the cost of transportation of the mails may be entirely a fallacious one the next year. It depends upon the circumstances of each particular year; and if it be a benefaction, as I have said, the United States by the expenditure of very little more money than the face of these bonds that it gave to these companies could have built the line itself and it would have belonged to the people at this day, so that the benefaction part of the argument which is offered to convince us either that we have not the power to do the thing that is here proposed or that having the power we ought not to do it, may be entirely laid aside.

What, then, is the state of this affair? The first great question, and one which I shall only discuss very briefly, is the question of our power, in the constitutional sense, legally to make the requisitions upon these companies which the bill of the Judiciary Committee proposes. My learned friend from Ohio, [Mr. MATTHEWS,] not in his seat, the honorable Senator from Georgia whom I see before me, [Mr. HILL,] and many others have maintained with pertinacity and with audacity—and I use that term in its best sense of courage that commands our admiration, however much it may lack our respect—that really the powers of Congress, as the grantor of all these privileges which the companies now exercise, by whose breath alone they can levy a dollar to obtain income, by whose authority alone they exclude similar enterprises, are absolutely beyond our reach. Arguments that have been advanced in the courts of the States by ingenious counsel, that have been advanced before legislative committees for the last twenty years by counsel and by lobbies as they have been here, arguments that have been advanced recently in the great tribunal of last resort near us, in cases coming from the States, are brought forward here and repeated as if they were fresh, and as if they were still potent for consideration when every one of them has gone down, one by one, before the calm authority of judicial reason and judicial decision. And yet this Senate appears to be treated as if it were really a backwoods jury that had never seen a law-book or a lawyer before, and to whom as before a justice of the peace once in the State of Vermont, counsel could go and urge that the bankrupt law of 1842 was totally unconstitutional, and therefore a note that had been entirely discharged and barred by that could be still recovered. That is what we are now treated to, Mr. President, and as I say, therefore, while I admire the courage of that sort of argument, I cannot give it the homage of my absolute respect.

These companies were authorized by the act of 1862 to do a great many things. I will take the Union Pacific for instance. The act of 1862 authorized the formation of that company; and in order to guard against what has happened since under the act of 1864,—the consolidation of its stock into the hands of three or four great operators who thus become the kings of the ring and the rulers of the corporation, and so the rulers of all that section of the country, in a certain sense, over which the railroad runs, the lords paramount of every hamlet and every city in the two thousand miles that stretch from the Mississippi to the Golden Gate—it was provided in the act of 1862 that no stockholder should hold more than two hundred shares himself of the stock, so that there could not be this consolidation of power that elects Senators, appoints members of Congress at conventions, regulates local elections in all the counties through which they go by their capacities of frequent intercourse with the people and by having a constant agent in the station-agent and in the trackman to do the electioneering which the President of the United States has lately advised members of his official household through all the offices not to do. But when we came to the act of 1864, which, by the way, was an amendment of the act of 1862, not with the assent of the company on the face of it, but which exercised the plenary power of Congress, bear in mind, that was reserved in the act of 1862 to amend, that was conveniently repealed, and we have since seen that the evil foreseen by the act of 1862 and guarded against has come, and that consolidated power (which is the essential theory of a monopoly) has come to be so potent that it is always against a stress of difficulties and a multitude of objections that the mere weight of justice and the interests of the people and the creditors of such corporations can make way at all. If these very companies at this moment were under the force of the act of 1862 requiring a diffusion of this stock, do you imagine, Mr. President, that the lobbies of this Senate would be filled with persons engaged to promote the interests of these companies and to defeat legislation that is not perfectly agreeable to them, at the expense of the stockholders, at the expense of the creditors of these corporations, at the expense of the Treasury of the United States? I imagine not, but it is done.

It was also provided in the act of 1862, made for these purposes to which I have alluded and which I need not further refer to of public benefit by a public corporation, and also for the private advantage of the enterprise of the people who engaged in it, that all the money advanced by the United States to these objects should be a first mortgage not only upon the road-bed and the track of the company when built, but upon every description of the property that the company might possess. I do not spend your time to read it but I know that I state it correctly; I believe that it has been stated before. It also provided—and that brings me to the first point in the short statement that I have to make about this affair in regard to the net earnings—that—

Said company may also pay the United States, wholly or in part, in the same or other bonds, Treasury notes, or other evidences of debt against the United States, to be allowed at par; and after said road is completed, until said bonds and interest are paid, at least 5 per cent. of the net earnings of said road shall also be annually applied to the payment thereof.

Not a limitation to which the legislative authority of the United States bound itself that no more than 5 per cent. of net earnings or exactly that should be paid to the Government, but as a command and declaration of duty on the part of this company that not less than 5 per cent. should be paid. What was the object of that clause? Let me take it upon the narrowest view that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] or the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] or the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] can suggest. Here is a law which says that not less than 5 per cent. of the net earnings shall be paid in. Does not that imply that under circumstances which make it fit and proper, more than 5 per cent. may be required, when in the very same act and as a part thereof, in the very same clause, it is provided that Congress may change the regulations of the operations of this company according to its own sense of justice and right in order that the great object of the act may be carried out, that the road may be perpetually kept up for the benefit of the people and the Government of the United States? And yet Senators say you are interfering with vested rights when you undertake not to increase the percentum of net earnings, but merely to define so that there shall be no more equivocations and higgling about it, what "net earnings" are, and when you undertake to define them according to the common sense of universal mankind, according to the same definition that if you will take the railway reports of 90 per cent. if not 99 per cent. of all the railway corporations in this country to-day you will find to be defined exactly as this bill from the Judiciary Committee defines them; and that is the clear balance that is left after paying the operating expenses of the concern.

I see here before me the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] I saw only a day or two ago the annual report of the directors to the stockholders of that great corporation, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, that covers two States, not only Illinois but Iowa; at any rate it extends indefinitely westward from Chicago,—a corporation I am bound to say that according to all its history and all its reputation has been managed with high fidelity and with great advantage not only to itself and to its stockholders, but to the people of the country that it traverses. I happen to observe in that report that where they figure out the balance of net earnings, they figure it out and they have always done so, exactly in the manner that this bill of the Judiciary Committee defines "net earnings." They do not take out of their assets received from their various sources of income the interest that is due to their respective bondholders and creditors before they ascertain what are their net earnings, but they take "net earnings" to mean what every honest man who is not a lawyer would at once say they meant, what you get in net, taking out from that which you thus get in the expense you have been put to in getting it. That is what "net earnings" means, and I repeat without the fear of contradiction, although I do not do it upon an examination, that you may take 90 per cent. of the reports of all business corporations, railway as well as others, in the United States for the last twenty years, and you will find that the term "net earnings" has come to be understood just what it was understood to be in the dictionaries when the term was invented. It refers to the earnings, the clear earnings, not to the amount of money that may be due from the party that earned it. You might say upon the other principle that a farm that had a mortgage upon it for more than it was worth, and yet could raise fifty thousand bushels of wheat a year worth a dollar a bushel at an expense of $20,000, had no net earnings, that the farm itself was absolutely worthless, although the man had borrowed on it five times what it was worth already and owed a debt for it which was greater than the value of the farm; yet the farm was utterly worthless because it could not get any net earnings! Of course that is not so; and yet Senators stand up here and say that we are violating the Constitution of the United States in defining "net earnings," and that in the face of this provision of the statute which authorizes us to call for 10 per cent. of the net earnings if the just judgment of Congress thinks that is proper and necessary. Notwithstanding that, they stand up here and contend that this definition which the committee endeavor by this bill to put upon "net earnings," to save disputes, to make it clear if by any ingenious sophistry any court could be persuaded that it now in point of law means something else, is really an outrage upon the rights of these corporations, that it does them injustice and wrong!

Mr. President, whatever may be believed here, the just judgment of mankind, to which we sometimes appeal, will, I am sure, vindicate the report of my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] upon that subject. There are a good many other things, but I cannot spend your time to read them, that are of great interest in this first act of 1862. I have stated, I believe, that the act of 1864 is an amendment of the act of 1862, and that its going into effect did not, as my friend from California [Mr. SARGENT] stated yesterday, depend upon the assent of the companies. The act of 1864 is an act of affirmative and coercive legislation. There is no provision in it that the act of 1864 shall not take effect until either company assents to it, and there are half a dozen other amendatory acts in the book before me prepared by the companies themselves, all brought together for convenience, no one of which undertakes to leave its going into effect, or any part of it having force, to the assent of the companies. What does that mean? It means that until now it had not been thought by the lawyers and the statesmen of Congress, it had not been thought by the lawyers and counsel of these companies, that where in the acts of 1862 and 1864 the right of alteration, amendment, and repeal had been reserved, however otherwise it might have been, it depended upon the assent of the companies at all what changes Congress should make in the regulation of their affairs; and so, as I say, while the act of 1862 required the assent of the companies, because then nobody had been bound, and the act of 1862 could not go into effect until the companies did assent to it, because they were not bound to assume the responsibilities which the act imposed upon them, every act afterward, from 1864 to this day, contains no such provision; every act afterward, without question, in either House of Congress, has exercised calmly and serenely, sometimes and more often in the interest of the companies, sometimes and rarely in the interest of the people and against their wishes, this power that the act of 1862 reserved, and which without it would exist, in my opinion, in respect of the objects we are now speaking of, to change the regulations upon which they stood.

The act of 1862 contains another provision that it is worth while to call attention to just now, and that is as to the number of directors, vital to the management of the operations of the company. The Union Pacific company was to have, I believe, thirteen, and the United States was to have two, appointed by the President. The act of 1864, passed, as I have shown you, not with the assent of the companies, not requiring their assent, provided that the number of directors on the part of the company should be fifteen, if I recollect correctly, and the number of Government directors should be five, altering the managing constitution of the company. Nobody ever questioned that power, I suppose; the power of amendment was reserved. It was questioned in the case of Miller vs. The State of New York referred to the other day, not upon the ground that if the Legislature had reserved that power in the charter between themselves and the corporation it would not have been good, but they said it had gone beyond that and that the city of Rochester only came in incidentally, and between herself and the company it was a contract that could not be changed. But the supreme court of New York and the Supreme Court of the United States overruled that. But in respect of the direct relations between this corporation and the United States, I suppose nobody can question, nobody has yet questioned, the propriety in point of law of the act of 1864 which changed the number of these directors.

I only refer to this as showing how complete the power of the United States is, not as an opposing party to a contract having hostile interests, but as a supreme and impartial judge controlling and regulating the exercise of these great monopolies and of the corporations who carry them on, to so constitute the management as to preserve justice and private and public rights; and therefore, if it should be found in respect of what is called the prorating question that the directors, as now organized, of the Union Pacific Railway Company do not carry out the true spirit of their charter in respect of this co-ordination of the resources of the company, it is within the competence and within the duty of the Government of the United States through its Congress to so change the management of that corporation by increasing the Government directors to a majority as to see to it that impartial and not selfish hands control the interests of these great corporations for the benefit of their creditors, and for the benefit of the public and equal justice to all. And the time may come, if the lobby still continues to be successful as it has been hitherto, a year ago and before—I do not speak of the lobby disrespectfully; it is a very good thing, no doubt, for those who use it—but if these companies, I will say, should be successful in now so entangling this legislation as to break it down by amendments proposed in their interest, or substitutes proposed in their interest, the time may come when the voice of the just judgment of the people will be heard in such a way that the management of this great corporation will be placed in the hands of impartial and fair and safe men, and that if our hands are to be tied for twenty-two years in respect of all the financial administration of these corporations touching not only the millions of our interest but the millions of the other debts that we are bound to protect, there will still be in the enforced sense of public justice from the people (which at last reaches us) a means of redress in regulating the management in such a way that the money will not then be squandered, and the stock run down or bulled or beared to affect interests pro or con to the injury of creditors.

But I only refer to this to illustrate how potent, how pervasive everywhere through these acts is this omnipotent resource of justice and of right reserved to the Congress of the United States, not as an interested party, not as an opposing litigant, but as an impartial tribunal to whom the persons now claiming rights under these charters agreed in the outset, when they assumed the responsibilities of them, should be referred every question respecting their future management and operation and the protection of persons who should deal with them. That is it. It is not, therefore, Mr. President, any invasion of private rights; it is not any invasion or violation of the sanctity of contracts, but the very reverse, when, if the state of the case calls for it, this tribunal, pointed out and agreed upon by the parties who availed themselves of the benefits of these acts, is called upon in its sense of justice to so readjust the administrative regulations of these corporations as that their funds shall be preserved to the very sacred use to which they were designed, the discharge of their obligations. That is all there is to it, and it is to that, therefore, that we ought to address ourselves.

I ought to say, though, before I leave that part of the topic, as a mere matter of self-defense—it is of no interest to the Senate—that I think my friend from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] went a little wild the other day when he undertook to convict me on the authority of Kent's lectures to his students up at Albany or New York, or wherever it was, that the right of visitation that I spoke of as being a right of Congress did not apply to a civil corporation, that it only applied to what are called eleemosynary corporations, that is, corporations founded by some private person for a charity, or a school, or something of that kind, who, he conceded, had the authority to visit the corporation and see that it did what it ought to do, and to compel it to do what it ought to do. Let me tell my good friend from Ohio in the first place that the power of visitation of a private corporation of the kind I am now speaking of is not a power that executes itself. The private visitor, the founder of a charitable corporation who has the right of visitation in its highest sense, is not able to go to a college or to a hospital and kick out the people who are then in by the force of his own personal strength. He has no more right to do that than you have who are the President of the Senate. His power of visitation is the power to require those things to be done which the true ends of the corporation call for, and when he has required and they do not obey what is the next step? The execution of it by himself? Not a bit of it. An appeal to the judicial arm of the Government to enforce the orders that he has made. That is visitation, as it is defined in the dictionaries and as it exists in common sense. Now, is there any such thing as it respects civil corporations? If my friend had looked a little further in Kent he would have found also the same thing I believe. I have not taken the trouble to look it up, but here is Angell & Ames; after speaking first of the eleemosynary part of it:

In this country, where there is no individual founder or donor, the Legislatures are the visitors of all corporations founded by them for public purposes, and may direct—and may direct judicial proceedings against them for abuse or neglects which at common law would cause a forfeiture of their charters.

Just as this Judiciary Committee bill does—

And then they go on to speak of other inconveniences, and say:

If such inconveniences are found to be numerous and formidable in practice, the remedy, it is presumed, must be sought in legislative interposition.—Angell & Ames on Corporations, chapter 19, page 679.

Mr. President, that is a mere private matter between my friend and myself that the Senate does not care anything about, but as a lawyer much younger than my honorable friend from Ohio, who I am sorry to see is not here, of course I felt a little abashed to have the country that no doubt took a great interest in that question of definitions told that I had entirely missed my mark in saying that the power of the legislative sovereignty of the States and of the United States over corporations that they had established to regulate their affairs and compel them to do what the great objects of their charters called for by fresh legislation, was a power of visitation. Of course, as I say, I felt a little abashed to be told that that was an invention of my own, or that I had not read what he called the horn-books of the law. I dismiss that part of the subject as being of no interest to the Senate. It is entirely a question between my friend and myself.

Now I will take up just for a moment the question of net earnings again, and will be very brief about that. I had called the attention of the Senate in answer to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] before, who were pressing upon your consideration the opinion of the supreme court of Massachusetts by Chief-Justice Shaw it is said, a later case than the one they referred to, of the Massachusetts General Hospital against the State Mutual Insurance Company of Worcester, which I had thought ran on all fours with this question of our power over the subject of net earnings, which as everybody agrees is the most difficult part of the bill in point of law. It comes nearer to the boundaries of our power in respect of controlling these corporations than any other part of it does, because this part of the Judiciary Committee bill requires a payment into the Treasury of the United States as a payment. It is not the preservation of the funds of the corporations, as the rest of the bill is, leaving them still the property of the corporations, and only operating as a legislative injunction against their dividing them up among the stockholders, but it requires a payment, and therefore there is great plausibility in the argument that says "if you make your definition of such a character that it requires the payment of a greater sum than the present want of a definition would require, then you are in effect requiring the payment of a greater sum than you did before, you are making us pay what is not due;" and that is the plausibility of the argument.

Now, see how easily it is answered by the case in 4 Gray's Reports. My learned friend from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] thought it did not apply. Let me state it or read it partly so that you may see that it does, and then I shall have done with reading law-books to you. This was a bill "in equity for an account of one-third of the net profits made by the defendants from insurances on lives." The plaintiffs were incorporated in 1810 and were authorized to receive contributions and stock, &c., and so on, "for the purpose of making assurances on single lives, joint lives, and survivorships, with all the powers and privileges, and subject to all the duties and liabilities, contained in the thirty-seventh and forty-fourth chapters of the Revised Statutes, so far as the same may be applicable to this corporation." This corporation was thus founded on authority to make insurances upon lives upon the mutual plan. They were to have a guaranteed stock. "By section 7 of said statute 1844, chapter 187, it was provided that the defendants should, on the third Monday of January in every year, pay over to the plaintiffs 'one-third of the net profits, if any, which shall have arisen from insurance on lives made during the preceding year;' and by statute 1846, chapter 82, section 1, it was enacted that 'the net profits of the business of the mutual life-insurance companies incorporated in this Commonwealth, one-third of which they are required to pay to the trustees of the Massachusetts general hospital, shall be taken to be the excess of the dividend over 6 per cent. annually, payable by the said companies respectively to the holders of the guarantee capital stock actually paid in."

By this same act of incorporation, which I have not read but will state to save time—it is here and my friend from Ohio will see that I state it correctly—by this same act of incorporation of the defendants' company, they were authorized to have $100,000 of a guaranteed stock and were authorized to pay 7 per cent. interest upon that guaranteed stock. After that the Legislature by the act of 1846 said that in respect of mutual insurance companies that otherwise would not have any net profits at all, because they all went to the benefit of the people who were insured, the net profits mentioned in the old law should be considered to be the excess over a dividend of 6 per cent. annually upon that, thus cutting them down 1 per cent. and declaring that to be a net profit which in contemplation of law before was not net profit at all, nor anything like net profit. That was resisted, and the same kind of arguments advanced by my friends from Georgia and Ohio and all the rest on that side of this question were pressed upon the court and the counsel in stating it demonstrated just how it would work; he proceeded to say:

The statute of 1846, chapter 82, which undertakes to declare what shall be taken to be "net profits" in mutual companies, is unconstitutional, so far as it applies to the defendants, who did not assent to it; because it attempts to compel the assured members to pay annually the sum of $166.67 more for the expense of insuring each other's lives than they were obliged by the terms of their act of incorporation to pay.

And he stated it exactly as it was. That was exactly how it would work out. Now hear what Mr. Justice Dewey says, after referring to some other questions in the case and working it down to this point:

It expressly declares that the net profits for this purpose "shall be taken to be the excess of the dividend over 6 per cent. annually, payable by the said companies respectively to the holders of the guarantee capital stock actually paid in."

The only question is, therefore, whether the statute of 1846, chapter 82, is a constitutional act. It is said by the defendants that this act is unconstitutional, because it violates the vested rights of the defendants acquired under their act of incorporation. If this were so, the act can have no effect. But all acts of incorporation, passed since the 11th of March, 1831, which contain no express provision limiting their duration, are, by the provisions of the statutes of the Commonwealth existing from that period to the present, subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal. The act incorporating the defendants was passed in the year 1844, long after the enactment of the revised statutes, and was of course accepted by the corporators subject to the provisions of those statutes. This seems to put at rest all further question as to the constitutionality of the statute of 1846, chapter 82, and this being so, the defendants are bound by it, and must govern themselves accordingly."—Gray's Reports, 233.

That was the end of the case of the Massachusetts General Hospital and the defendants. The judges who composed that court that thus unanimously decided were Hon. Lemuel Shaw, the great chief justice; Hon. Charles A. Dewey, who delivered the opinion; Mr. Justice Metcalf; Mr. Justice Bigelow, who until lately was an eminent judge of that court, and resigned not long since I believe; Mr. Justice Thomas and Mr. Justice Merriek, men all of them eminent, and deciding—and that is why I am almost inexcusable in reading such a case—deciding what every court in every State and at all times in respect of similar principles had already decided and have ever since, and this case is only interesting in the fact that it happens, not in respect of any new principle at all, to contain a state of fact which presents the exact point that this question of net profits does here, put in the strongest way that the Senators on the other side can put it.

So then, Mr. President, I think we may dismiss from our consideration any fear that we are going to be in danger of violating the Constitution of our country if we declare by this bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary that the meaning of net profits shall be hereafter taken and understood to be the clear result, after paying the operating expenses of these roads, added to which—that has been referred to and answered already—for the mere purpose of convenience and as a matter that does not belong to it theoretically or philosophically at all, is the payment of the interest on the first-mortgage bonds, added, as I say, not because it diminishes what are the future net profits, but because as a matter of convenience between the Government and these people it is more convenient to put it in that way.

Then I wish to repeat to all gentlemen who doubt about our authority in point of constitutional law to pass this act, that everything that has happened in the history of these transactions contained in this little book which, as General Cass said, "I leave you to look upon"—everything that has happened since the act of 1862, which did require their assent, has been through the sovereign power of Congress reserved in the act of 1862 of alteration, amendment, and repeal, and after the act of 1864 reserved there, and that in no instance of legislation either favorable or unfavorable to these companies until now has it been proposed even to doubt the authority of Congress to act of its own supreme and just pleasure, or as the saying now is to make a bargain which is to tie up its hands for any length of time. It is reserved, Mr. President, to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] to be the first man, and at this late period of time, to propose in any act regulating or creating a corporation or any part of its operations, the sovereign power of the great tribunal that imparts to it its gifts, that creates for it its monopolies, that is bound to stand between it and those dangers that monopolies always threaten people with—for the first time, I say, it has been proposed that an act of administrative justice which calls for the accumulation of a sinking fund, and which is nothing but an administrative act for the future that changing events may change the aspect of from day to day as other lines are built, as other men come into the management, as the stock is either run down or run up to please "bulls" or "bears" for private interest, that the hands of this supreme tribunal shall be tied behind its back, not in respect of anything that it has received to discharge a debt, because there would be the end of it without any such provision, but in respect of the future administration of the affairs of these companies so far as it affects the interests of the United States connected with this debt. Well, how far is that? Can there be anything done in respect of the administration of the affairs of these companies that does not affect the interests of the United States in regard to this debt? The salaries of their directors affect the interests of the United States in this debt, because they are a part of the operating expenses. Counsel fees paid to lawyers, small sums to be sure, only $50,000 last year so far as heard from at present, to defeat the bill of last year, spent here at the Capitol—counsel fees anywhere for any purpose affect the interests of the United States in this debt, but our hands are tied by the amendment of the Senator from Maine. There is not the smallest matter of expenditure, there is not the smallest or the greatest matter of policy that these directors may engage in, either of combinations or pools or hostilities with other roads, that does not run, (as all roads it was said always ran to Rome,) straight to the question of affecting the interest of the United States about its security; and therefore if you are to take the amendment of the Senator from Maine as it reads and as it plainly means—I know he did not design it so—if you are to take it as it would be construed in a court of justice and as it will certainly be construed by these corporations, there is not a single step that these companies may take that does not run straight to the question of affecting the interests of the United States about the reimbursement of its bonds, because every dollar of the corporate money, every step of the corporate policy affecting its financial interests, and every all must affect it, are tied up and bound.

Mr. President, I should prefer that would not be so, and I submit even to my honorable friend from Maine with some confidence as a statesman of experience and as a statesman desiring just ends and just policies, that when you bear in mind the distinction which exists between a bargain made between either public or private parties, which is executed and ended, and what this bill proposes to do, which is purely an administrative bill for the future, accumulating for the companies and by the companies only their resources for the discharge of their obligations, the extent and the necessity of which and the steps for the protection of which may change from day to day and from year to year, and undoubtedly will and must under the best of administrations, is it just—I appeal to him, to his good sense and mature reflection—is it safe, either for the stockholders of the companies or their creditors or the interests of the United States, to say that Congress binds itself for twenty-two years, almost a generation of human life, to interfere in no manner so far as it affects the reimbursement of these millions of money?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Vermont has asked me a question, and in answer to the criticism which he has indulged in with regard to the amendment I have offered, I will say that every particle of the evil anticipated or suggested by him as possible to flow from it would be entirely averted by putting in a proviso that the amount paid by each company per annum during these years shall not be less than a given sum. He says it may entirely change. Put in such a proviso, and that would at once displace every suggestion of danger which the Senator has made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President, a proviso! The suggestion of a proviso is pregnant of the suggestion of the danger of any such binding and final legislation.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, if the Senator will permit me, he has brought more danger into this body than any other member of it, for he has been more fruitful of provisos in our legislation than any other Senator that ever sat on the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have never been fruitful of provisos which tied up the hands of the Congress of the United States from the future exercise of its sovereign power. When I do, it will be time enough for the Senator from Maine to suggest that I am fruitful of provisos. He, as I said before, is the original father—there is no grandfather and no collateral relation—of a proposition in the legislation of this country of the Congress of the United States, since the time when the evil of the hands of States and of Congresses being tied up has been discovered in the last few years, to provide that in any respect or under any circumstances the hands of the legislative power shall be held off from the exercise of their legitimate and constitutional control over public corporations. If I was enabled to see any contingency in which an amendment of this character, a limitation of this sort, could work evil, I would not upon principle vote for a bill which should contain it, because if it be right in this instance in respect of this purely administrative affair, not a bargain between these companies and the United States, but a requirement that the sovereign will of Congress imposes as it has a right to impose upon these people to do, it is right in every case where we grant a new charter either to a bank or a railroad or an insurance company or whatever, because in the case of a new charter it is just as clear on the face of the bill what you expect the company to do, what the company is required to do, and what it engages to do. Wherefore, then, do you reserve the right to alter, amend, or repeal? Why do you not give them their twenty years of existence upon the terms stated in their original charter? There is no doubt about what it means. You have fixed it just as you intend to have it. You cannot foresee now anything that will require you to change it during the period of their existence. Why do you always put in this potent and sovereign reservation? You put it in because you know that unexpected good or evil arises, unforeseen events occur as shifting fortune changes the scene, from day to day; you know that in human affairs there may be defections and difficulties in the administration of corporations. You know that within the strict letter of the law directors and counsel may be found astute enough to change the whole spirit of it. You know that unforeseen contingencies, not provided for, may arise where the highest interest of the community, the highest interest of justice calls upon you, if you have the power, to appear and protect these rights.

Now, what might happen under this very bill, saying nothing about provisions? This stock is transferable at the offices of these companies. It is said to be now all in a very few hands. It is said that one gentleman, whom I have long known as a very amiable and estimable gentleman, a man of extraordinary genius and ability, and a man who I believe is painted a great deal blacker than he is, owns more than a majority of the stock of one of the companies. He is under no obligation to hold it; he is a private citizen although a director and president for aught I know of one of the companies; but his ownership of the stock is his private property, and he is under no obligation to us or to anybody else to hold it for five minutes when he can sell it at a price that is satisfactory to him. If the management of that corporation is left with him and with his board of directors, we might all expect that this thing would go on smoothly and swimmingly, that fidelity to these requirements would be observed, that the income of the corporation would be as great as it is now and would increase, that the same energy and economy and prudence and skill that in his hands have made the company develop large profits much more than ever before will continue to go on; but if he chooses to sell out his stock to-morrow at the stock board in New York, have you any right to complain of him? Not the least. The stock is his private property. He can retire from the corporation when he likes. Suppose it fell into the hands of foreign stockholders, if you please, of such people as are now manipulating and fighting and seesawing over the Erie Railroad in New York—they may be good or they may be bad—but what becomes of the creditors? What becomes of the income? Receiverships and lawyers' fees and pools and oppositions and cuttings, as they call them, and other things run the income down to nothing and there is a default on the first-mortgage bonds. This act that we propose does not require them to pay the interest on the first-mortgage bonds; it leaves them just as they are in that regard. It does not forfeit the charter if they do not pay the interest on the first-mortgage bonds. Suppose they default. The stock runs down to nothing; the first-mortgage bonds run down to nothing, as they do always when there is a default. I do not mean the word "nothing" literally, but they go away down. What becomes of your second securities and your third, and your land-grant bonds, and your income bonds, and your sinking-fund bonds? They become like the third and fourth mortgage bonds of all other defaulting corporations nil, absolutely nil; and when Congress is appealed to by the constituents of my friend from New Hampshire who are said to hold sinking-fund bonds for protection, the United States is obliged to say "we have engaged to do nothing for twenty-two years; the money is still paid into the sinking fund, 25 per cent. of the net earnings if there be any, but there are not any, and that is no breach of the act; they have done just what they agreed to. They only agreed to pay in while they have net earnings, but they have so bedeviled the whole thing that there are not any net earnings; and if you will wait more than the lifetime of your grandchildren on the average, then we will appeal to Congress, and if after several sessions we can get public sentiment sufficiently waked up to it and against the press of the men who are engineering against you with plenty of money, we may be able to do something."

Are we going to throw away our power in that way, Mr. President? Have we any right to throw away our power in that way? Are we doing justice to the poorest creditor there is of these corporations? Are we doing justice to public interests? You cannot tell, sir, what will happen; you cannot tell who will manage these corporations; you cannot tell how long there will be any net income or not, depending not upon the fair progress of natural resources of development and natural competition, but depending upon the evil devilry of stock-boards and private jobs. There is the trouble about all these corporations; and yet my honorable friend from Maine, in that sweet innocence which characterizes his character, that sublime faith that everybody is as virtuous as he is, is willing to fold up his arms and be tied up in a bag by the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies for twenty-two years, merely because we require them to establish a sinking fund!

Mr. BLAINE. If I understand my friend's argument—and I do not mean to interrupt him—he desires to state that as long as Mr. Jay Gould (he did not call him by name but referred to him) shall own a majority of the stock the Government of the United States may rest secure, but it might possibly pass out of his hands and then danger would come.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, then my friend does not understand me. I did not desire to state anything of the kind. I desire now to state, as Mr. Jay Gould is referred to—my friend is fond it seems of referring to private conversations and to private men—

Mr. BLAINE. Why, the Senator referred to him. Did not the Senator refer to him, if not by name?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not mentioned Mr. Jay Gould at all.

Mr. BLAINE. Am I mistaken in saying that the Senator intended to refer to Mr. Jay Gould as the gentleman he spoke of?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I intended to say exactly what I did say, and I intend to respect the proprieties of this place sufficiently not to name private citizens by name unless there is a very urgent reason for it indeed.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator did not refer to him at all?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not say what I did, except that I said exactly what I did say referring to the managers of this corporation.

Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator spoke of some gentleman holding a majority of the stock who was a very much better man than he is painted to be, and the Senate, I think, could have understood only that he referred to one gentleman, whom I am not referring to except with respect myself. I understood the Senator to say that as long as the stock or a majority of it was in his hands all would go smoothly, but the possibility of danger arose just when it might slip out of his hands and get into somebody else's. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why, Mr. President, my friend must be very much wide of the mark. Does he suppose that there is nobody else in the world than Jay Gould who is better than he is painted? There are a great many Senators that I have heard very severely denounced in connection with corporations and otherwise that I believe are a great deal better than the stories that are told about them. Therefore my description of an imaginary being or a real being as being a great deal better than he is painted does not make it necessary for my honorable friend to jump up and say that I am talking about Mr. Jay Gould at all.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, shall I understand that the Senator was not talking of him?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entitled to understand exactly what he likes from what I say. I do not undertake to control my friend's understanding at all; he is entirely at liberty to understand anything that he wishes to understand, and I am at liberty to say anything that I wish to say within the proprieties of this place.

But, Mr. President, this jocoseness of my friend and myself about a particular person has very little to do with this question. The object I had in view was to point out to the Senate if I could what I feel very deeply myself—how dangerous it is, because a corporation happens to be prosperous at this moment and to be well managed at this moment—and I am bound to say for Jay Gould, if he has anything to do with it, (seeing that the Senator has mentioned him,) and the other gentlemen connected with the Union and with the Central Pacific roads, that they are well managed—how uncertain it is because at this present moment it happens that a corporation is well managed that you are to tie up your hands for twenty-two years and assume that it is going to be so for all time. That is the principle, that is the homily which I am trying to lay down and preach to those who are kind enough to listen. I am not undertaking to say that the present gentlemen who manage these corporations will always do it as well as they do now; but I am undertaking to say that in the course of human affairs, if they are managed well—which must be the theory of this amendment, or otherwise nobody would think of tying up our hands—the present managers may disappear honestly and properly from the scene to-morrow, and we know them no more; and into whose hands the management then goes, only those evil beings that rule our corrupt stock boards and combinations can tell. That is what I say, and yet the confidence of my honorable friend in the future is so great that he is willing to tie our hands.

But, Mr. President, this is not all. There are other things about this amendment the honorable Senator has proposed, and which I dare say he does not intend himself, which show again how unsafe it is to jump at amendments of this character which are to tie up the sovereign power of Congress, if we have any power to tie it up, which I deny in respect of this particular application of this amendment. This amendment strikes out all the provision in the Judiciary Committee bill of this being taken as still reserving the power of amending all these acts and this act itself; it strikes that all out, leaves no authority on the face of the bill to make any further amendment, and then on the theory of the Senator from Georgia we should have no authority to amend any part of the original acts, even so much as requiring a report twice a year instead of once a year; but I am bound to say that I do not think that is the law myself, and therefore I should not make any point upon that.

Mr. HILL. The Senator will allow me. I have no recollection that I have ever said anything or intimated anything that Congress had no power to change any part of the original act. On the contrary, I have said distinctly, and endeavored to impress on the Senate why I said it, that Congress did retain the right to amend, alter, or repeal the act of incorporation and the franchises of the company, and the regulation of those franchises; but I endeavored to draw a distinction between the franchises of the company and the contract of loan. I have never said that Congress did not have authority to regulate the franchises of the company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The contract of loan is the very thing that the gentlemen on the other side of this question are continually referring to as the thing we are trying to deal with and the thing that we have no power to change; and therefore if there is anything at all in the argument that we have no power to change an act that we do pass, and if we pass it it is binding because it refers to what they call the contract of loan—

Mr. HILL. The Senator will allow me to say that my very objection to the bill of the Judiciary Committee was that it professed to alter and amend the act, and yet every provision of the bill relates to the contract of loan, and not to the franchises of the company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly.

Mr. HILL. If you would introduce a bill to regulate or change the franchises of the company, I should concede its constitutionality; but I say that you have no right, in my judgment, to alter, amend, or change the contract of loan, especially after that contract has been perfected under the authority of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator has said that three or four times, and we understood him perfectly. We understood him the other day. But I was saying that, on the Senator's theory, if we did pass this bill and did adopt this amendment which on the Senator's own theory we cannot vote for, nevertheless we were cut off entirely from any further legislation upon the subject, and I said that that was his doctrine because in referring to the act of 1871—if I am not greatly mistaken, I have it before me—the Senator did contend that the act of 1871 which commanded the Secretary of the Treasury to pay over the half transportation to the companies had foreclosed the power of Congress on the subject entirely inasmuch as there was no reservation in the act of 1871 of the power to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say that, in relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, I do not see that there is anything in my theory that prevents me from voting for that amendment. That amendment, as I understand it, simply says that Congress shall not interfere with this contract again if the companies shall perform the obligations of this bill and the previous bills relating to the contract. That is the way I understand it. Now, I say frankly that I do believe myself that is the law already; I believe that the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine is the law now. I do not think Congress has any right or power to interfere with this contract after it has been made and executed. There is something in this country, in my opinion, of higher dignity and higher value than the legislative power of Congress, and that is the right of private parties to their contracts and their private property.

In relation to the act of 1871 I was simply replying to those gentlemen who derived all the power to pass this bill from the reservation of the authority to alter, amend, or repeal contained in the acts of 1862 and 1864. They said that, in relation to this half transportation, Congress had a right to change it and require the whole transportation to be paid into the Treasury under the power of amendment. Then I said there was a subsequent act to those of 1862 and 1864, that of 1871, in which Congress had commanded that the half transportation both heretofore and hereafter accruing should be paid to the companies, and there was no reservation to alter or amend that act. Therefore the argument that we derived the power to interfere with the half transportation from the reservation to alter or amend contained in the acts of 1862 and 1864 did not apply to the act of 1871 which ordered this half transportation to be paid over without any reservation of the right to alter and amend. That was all I said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No Mr. President, it was not all the Senator said, but it was part of what he said.

Mr. HILL. All on that subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was in the same direction I admit. I am sorry to go out of my way to go back to this constitutional question, which I take it is ended in this body. If we could get a direct vote on that question of our power, I should be greatly disappointed if we did not come rather more nearly being unanimous than we have lately been upon any question. But I do wish to suggest, in response to what the Senator from Georgia has said, that his distinction between the state of this affair as a contract and the state of the franchises is a most extraordinary one and is as novel as is the amendment of the Senator from Maine in the aspects to which I have alluded. The Senator says you may control the franchises, you may do everything except interfere with the contract. Now, what is the contract? As he puts it the contract was that the United States should lend to these people a certain amount of bonds and that the bonds should be repaid, principal and interest, at the maturity of the principal, not before, leaving out now the half transportation and 5 per cent. of net earnings to be applied. That is the contract. Very well. It is also the contract that they may issue first-mortgage bonds which shall be paramount to the Government loan, of exactly the same tenor, as the statute says, and legal effect, and the same security. Therefore, according to the theory of the Senator, the first-mortgage bonds would not be payable, principal or interest, until the end of the time the principal becomes due. But that is not the point to which I wish to refer. That is aside. There is the contract providing for the first-mortgage bonds and for our mortgage. That is the contract. Now, what does this bill do? Does it undertake to say that that shall not be the contract? Not at all. It undertakes to say that the money of this company shall not be wasted and spent with its stockholders, but shall be kept in order to fulfill that contract.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to interrupt him just a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir, I cannot. I ask my friend to wait until I finish, as I wish to finish. My friend will have his opportunity afterward.

Mr. HILL. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator does not need to apologize for asking leave to interrupt me, because that is perfectly proper; but as I am not at all well and am rather fatigued, he will excuse me.

Mr. HILL. I do so. I think these interruptions are very frequent any way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are never disagreeable; and but for my physical weakness I should be glad to submit to the interruption now.

That is the contract which I have described. This act of sovereign power, which does not put on the form of a contract and does not ask the assent of the companies to its passage, (it will ask the assent of the President of the United States, I trust not of the companies) merely says to these companies, "You shall not take the product of your franchise, the very thing which your franchise alone entitles you to have, income, and bury it out of the reach of your creditors and thereby defraud them of their rights, those creditors being the United States, and the first-mortgage bondholders, and the land-grant bondholders, and the sinking-fund bondholders, and the holders of the floating debt, and everybody else. It provides not that the United States shall take this money out of hand, but it provides that the money shall stand as a security for whoever in the courts of equity and justice is entitled to the preference of taking it of the shareholder. That is all that the bill does, and you tell us that that is a violation of a contract, by which we have agreed to take our money twenty-two years hence when we in the exercise of our sovereign power say what the companies themselves say. Both of them have said that "the time has come when it is apparent that it is totally impossible to pay this debt if we go on spending the money on our stockholders." We say then "You shall do it," and that is a violation of the contract! Mr. President, that confounds all distinctions that I understand anything about. I can only state such a proposition to make the best answer to it I am capable of.

Now I will come back to the amendment of the Senator from Maine and I shall close. The amendment of the Senator from Maine, as I was proceeding to say, besides these intrinsic and unchangeable objections that I have stated to it, that go to the very basis of the whole thing and that no sort of modification could get over, to my mind, has also this effect, or is in great danger of having the effect, to cut off the suit of the United States for the net earnings already due. You will understand that we have not yet had a cent of net earnings paid into the Treasury under the act of 1862, although these roads have now been completed from eight to ten years. Not a penny of this enormous sum of net earnings has been paid into the Treasury, although dividends in large percentages have been made to stockholders. It is true, the companies say, that since the act of Congress stopped the Treasury from paying out the one-half of the transportation account, they being entitled to that, it will accumulate enough to pay the percentage of net earnings when it is found out what is enough to pay them; but they have not paid in a cent yet and they are entitled to this half transportation. The effect of the amendment of the Senator from Maine is, to my mind, and it will be pressed immediately when you come to the court, that as we have tied up our hands in respect of everything relating to these roads on account of the bonds advanced and of the sinking funds to be established, these bonds and these sinking funds shall be taken as sufficient. This provision, as I am saying, makes an end, if they comply with the acts of 1862 and 1864, on account of advances to the United States, that these bonds and these sinking funds shall be taken as sufficient to meet the obligations of the companies on account of such bonds prior to the maturity thereof, a complete wind-up.

This amendment in an ordinary act, which did not take the pains to review the past just where it is, to meet objections, would be, so far as I am now speaking of, not objectionable; but the act proposed by the Judiciary Committee leaves the matter of net earnings in the past entirely behind and only provides for net earnings in the future, what they are defined to be, and requiring them to be paid in. The consequence would be, as would be contended, that in connection with that section of the bill of the committee this provision relieves the companies from the duty of paying any part of the old net earnings, because they have complied with the acts of 1862 and 1864 in connection with this proposed act as to the particulars mentioned.

But there is another thing that is still more doubtful about this amendment and which also is far away from the fundamental objections that I have stated. You are aware, sir, that under the act of 1873 the Attorney-General, in pursuance of the resolution introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] being carried into an act of Congress, was directed to institute suit against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the Credit Mobilier, and so on, for the purpose of ascertaining the true cost of the construction of that road, which by the acts of 1862 and 1864 was to be the basis upon which bonds were to be issued as a first mortgage, and upon which tolls were to be taken and interest paid and all the regulations were to rest;—the cost of the road, the real true actual cost, not the amount of stock on which it might make dividends, but the cost, and also to bring back into the coffers of that company, for the benefit of its real stockholders and the benefit of its creditors all around, any moneys that had been unlawfully taken from it and to require to be paid into the coffers of the company any unpaid stock, because the act which created that company required payments by installments to be made in cash for the full amount of the stock until the capital should all be paid up, it being generally understood that the stock never was paid for in the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and that the Credit Mobilier business, made up of the directors, &c., had, as they say out West, "scooped the whole concern." What is the ground upon which the United States has intervened under these acts of Congress through the Attorney-General and is now prosecuting suits against this company to rectify this enormous fraud, as is charged, and which the Senator from California thinks has been condoned. Notwithstanding his own earnest efforts to prevent condonation, and notwithstanding Congress, in compliance with his resolution, has passed the necessary act to prevent a condonation; it is still condoned, he thinks.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, as our right of intervention is made to depend upon our interest in the fund as the holder of this second mortgage, what becomes of us as to that? What new complication will arise in those suits I should be glad to know, what new defenses will be interposed; but here is a real condonation. That is the spirit of the Blaine amendment, so called, which will be as famous in the future annals of railway and other corporate legislation as the Wilmot proviso, although made to rather a different end. What effect will that amendment have upon it, they will ask. "Why, this is a condonation. You have agreed that you will do nothing for twenty-two years to come in respect of any of this bond business but you try to interpose about the Credit Mobilier and everything after this money is tied up and is nothing to you; if any stockholders want to sue us, let them do it, if they can get an act to authorize them to do so." I do not say that in point of law it will necessarily have that effect although I greatly fear it. I only say it will furnish a rich field for the ingenuity of the very able and ingenious counsel that these companies employ in such numbers to put off to an indefinite date any vindication of the rights of the United States and the other creditors. So much for that.

Mr. President, in view of all this, when you look at the essential character of this legislation, which is sovereign and not a compact, which contains no bargain at all, which does not deal with the past but only deals with the future in a mere administrative way, I ask is it safe and wise for the Congress of the United States to put into this bill a provision that nothing more shall be done for twenty-two years? It does not appear so to me.

The honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. MATTHEWS,] and the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] to a certain extent, have urged upon us that we are invading the province of the Supreme Court, that the court has decided what the rights of these companies are, and therefore we cannot amend their charter. What is the force of that argument? Do the Senators mean to say that you cannot exercise your power to alter, amend, and repeal at all after you found out exactly what the clause means that you want to amend and repeal? That is what the court has done. The court has told us what the law means now, and the Senators say "inasmuch as you have now found out that this law does not mean what you think it ought to mean, your power to change it has gone, because the court has told you what it does mean and therefore anything that was so plain that you did not want the court to tell you what it means, you never can alter and amend." Mr. President, that would do for a justice's court, but it is hardly up, I think, to the status of the Senate of the United States. I may be mistaken. I speak with the utmost diffidence upon that point.

Then my honorable friends have urged upon Senators, and it perhaps has had some effect, the communism of this legislation, that we are assailing corporations; that the communism of this bill in assailing corporations is only furnishing powder and ball for the commune. The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] laid great stress upon that and warned you all, until perhaps your hair stood up as if you had seen a ghost, that you were embracing the commune by undertaking to interfere by the sovereign right of the people with these great monopolies; and the Senator from New York urged that they must have the same justice and the same fair play that the poor dweller in a hut by some river side who sweats for his daily fishing should have. Mr. President, that last is true. So they should. When the dweller in the hut of the Senator from New York comes to control two thousand miles of railway and all the station agents and the millions of income that arise from it, and comes to appropriate that money to his own use when his duty is to appropriate it to the payment of his debts, then I take it that he will be in the attitude of these corporations, and Congress would visit the same justice upon him. The idea that you cannot touch a corporation because it is entitled to the same justice as anybody else is also somewhat muddled, for the same reason that it is entitled to the same justice as other people, although much more difficult to apply it, because private persons cannot exercise the power that corporations do, they have not the money and the agents to repress legislation; but when the same cases occur corporations and individuals stand upon the same grounds, undoubtedly. When, as I have said, an individual comes into this presence in such an attitude as these corporations occupy, I am sure that we shall have the aid of the Senator from New York in administering fair and equal justice to him.

But what is this commune, Mr. President, that we are guilty of promoting? Where is it in this bill? My honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] says this is a grand step toward communism because the representatives of the people interfere to redress their grievances from the overwhelming power and the really moral breach of the present obligations of these companies. Is that communism? I had the impression that the well-regulated administration of law in the interest of justice and equal rights, in the interest of the small stockholders of these corporations, if there be any, in the interest of the unsecured creditors of these corporations, as there are many, was a step far from communism. Every step that we take in legislation in protecting the interests of the people goes toward communism. Every step in getting away from arbitrary power is a step toward communism in exactly the same sense and no other than you, sir, [Mr. OGLESBY in the chair,] building a fire in your small cook-stove on the prairies of Illinois to cook your dinner is a step toward incendiarism. You have taken the first step and where are you going to end? If you have the temerity to boil your beef and potatoes and heat your toddy at night after you have plowed all day on the prairie you are an enemy to the community; you are going to communism; you will be an incendiary and have everything in common to-morrow and burn everything up! That is the danger my friend from Ohio feels about this bill. We are really going to interfere with the private right of these corporations to defraud creditors, and say they shall not do it, and we are to be charged as lending aid to that unhappy sentiment which is to be deprecated in western regions as well as in the eastern, and I hope the returning good sense of free and intelligent society will always secure society against evils of that kind.

Mr. President, I believe I have said what little I had to say, very desultorily; but I only want to say one thing more about this matter. I shall feel bound for one, with a complete sense of the responsibility of it, and I ask everybody who has the same purpose in view that I have, and feels it with the same intensity, to vote against this amendment of my friend from Maine; and if the Senate should please to adopt it, to vote against the bill itself, because I would much rather that the Congress of the United States, the representative of public justice and of public right, should wait for a year or two until "returning Justice lifts aloft her scale," than that we should commit ourselves to a piece of legislation that would be almost certain in the future to be fatal in respect of the very objects that the bill wishes to accomplish, besides being destructive of the sound principles upon which all such legislation at present rests.

Mr. VOORHEES obtained the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator from Indiana give me two minutes of his time? I wish to modify my amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. With pleasure.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to say that every solitary objection which the Senator from Vermont has made against the amendment which I submitted can be cured, and is fully answered, by adding to the end of it a simple proviso which he could write much more quickly than I, but which makes the amendment what I offered a much more conclusive measure than the bill itself as described by the Senator from Ohio who reported it, [Mr. THURMAN.] I have the right to modify my amendment, and all the imaginary bugaboos which the Senator from Vermont has constructed out of his fertile imagination in regard to the road all going to pieces, and the first-mortgage bonds coming into default, and the interest not being paid, and there being nothing but the stock board in its corruption proceeding from it, I propose to cut up by the roots. I also propose to remove utterly that still less well-based imagination that this amendment which I have offered in any wise interferes with any claim now existing of the United States. I venture to say that it takes what I heard Rufus Choate once describe as a double-forty-horse microscopic power of sight, possessed only by the Senator from Vermont, to discover any such waiver in that amendment. If I did not have such great respect for his legal ability, from which I am always glad to receive instruction, I should call it an absurdity, but I cut both those objections and all his objections up by the roots by adding at the end of my amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That the annual payment from each company, in addition to the half-transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings presently applicable to the interest on the bonds, shall never be less than $200,000 for the sinking fund; and that nothing in this act shall be construed to waive any claim of the United States against either of said railroad companies from whatever source arising.

I am obliged to the Senator from Indiana for yielding me the opportunity to modify my amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I do not propose at this late hour, in this protracted debate, to enter upon a general discussion of the subject before the Senate. In fact, until within the last few days it has been impossible for me to give it that close attention which its importance deserves. It has been my earnest desire to support the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. It is conceded on all hands that some measure of adjustment between the Government and the Pacific Railroad Companies should be adopted by Congress, and that it should be one, which, while securing to the Government all its pecuniary interests, would at the same time preserve all the contract rights which have accrued to the companies.

I desire, however, more especially, for the few minutes which I shall engage the attention of the Senate, to speak of the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

If the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee is what its friends claim it to be—a fair solution of the conflicting interests of the Government and the companies, and a guarantee to the Government of all that is due from the companies—then it plainly seems to me that it should be made a final and permanent act of legislation. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maine reads as follows:

But so long as said Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railroad Companies shall faithfully comply with the provisions of the said acts of 1862 and 1864, and of this act relating to payments to the United States on account of the bonds advanced, and of the sinking-funds to be established as aforesaid, such compliance shall be deemed and taken as sufficient to meet the obligations of said companies on account of such bonds prior to the maturity thereof.

This is a declaration on our part that so long as the companies faithfully comply with what we now demand we will make no new demand upon them. It is a declaration that we have faith in the sufficiency of the pending bill to secure to the Government all its rights and dues in the premises. We have been repeatedly assured, in the most earnest and positive manner, during the last four weeks, by the friends of the bill, that it would accomplish this great object. We have been strenuously urged to support it on that ground. If it has this merit and is worthy of our support it is solely because it will accomplish this result.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt the Senator one moment?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. What friend of this bill has said that it would accomplish the payment of the debt according to the terms of the contract?

Mr. VOORHEES. Does the Senator from Ohio say that it will not accomplish that result?

Mr. THURMAN. I have always said so. It will not do it by within $35,000,000. Perhaps more than that will remain due.

Mr. VOORHEES. Why, then, does not the Senator perfect a bill that will protect the Government in its rights?

Mr. THURMAN. Because I cannot pass it through this Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Ah!

Mr. THURMAN. If I cannot pass this measure how could I?

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator should try before making such an assertion.

Mr. BLAINE. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question with the leave of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator from Ohio doubt, and will he state he doubts, that the two railroads are not abundant security for that remaining $35,000,000?

Mr. THURMAN. I do say that they are not, with their first-mortgage bonds on them, security, and they have said so themselves again and again.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg the Senator's pardon, with all due respect; they never said so at all. The Senator is utterly mistaken. They said that unless provision was made and the $150,000,000 of sinking fund went on they could never pay it; but the Senator has a bill that provides for a sinking fund, and by the sinking fund he pays off $120,000,000 of mortgage, which leaves only $30,000,000, and he cannot, without disputing the arithmetic or the rule of three, doubt or deny that the security is more ample than the United States holds for any other obligation in the whole of its ownership.

Mr. VOORHEES. Sir, I was amazed on yesterday to hear the very able and very distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] exclaim that the adoption of the amendment under consideration would kill the pending bill. Can it be that an amendment declaring that a bill, when enacted into a law, should thereby become a permanent piece of legislation, destroys that bill? Can it be that an amendment which gives perpetual life to an act of Congress is, as the Senator from Ohio exclaimed, prussic acid to its existence?

This amendment says that the measure reported by the Judiciary Committee, if it shall become a law, shall live and be perpetual as long as the Pacific Railroad Companies faithfully perform their duties under it. And yet the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] asserts that such an amendment will destroy the life of the bill! The amendment proposes to accept the bill, and to require the Pacific Railroad companies to accept it also, and that when it is thus accepted, and as long as it shall be faithfully complied with, it shall not be disturbed. It proposes that this whole subject shall be taken out of Congress; that a final settlement shall be made, and adhered to.

A few years ago it was the earnest purpose of leading members of this body, I believe, including the Senator from Ohio, that a finality upon this subject should be obtained. It was then thought that a judicial finality was the most desirable. The question as to the time when the Pacific Railroad Companies, under existing laws, were liable for the payment of their debts to the Government, was submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was there decided adversely to the views entertained by many and adversely to my own views and wishes. There is no higher resort, however, than the Supreme Court of the United States to find out what the law is. The subject, however, has been reopened here, and, under a claim of power, on the part of Congress, far-reaching and to my mind questionable, it is now proposed to alter and amend the laws upon which the Supreme Court made its decision, and under which that court determined the time when the obligations of the companies became due. I have had from the first the gravest possible doubts of the existence of this power on the part of Congress, under the Constitution. I am not now about to enter upon the discussion or examination of the decisions of courts upon this point; that has been fully done by others, and as far as in my power I have enlightened my mind by their labors. But it is not in my nature nor has it been a part of my political education to take kindly to the great and unlimited stretches of power which Congress has so frequently put forth in the later years of our history.

During the last seventeen years I have heard this power invoked and seen it exercised to the destruction of every class of reserved and vested rights belonging not merely to corporations, but to great political commonwealths—to States that are sovereign in the control of all matters not expressly granted to the Federal Government. I have seen it rend States asunder; tear down States; reconstruct States; abolish State Legislatures; annul the legislative acts of States; unseat members of State legislative bodies, and seat others in their places. I have seen this unbridled power of Congress roam through the reserved rights of political communities like a wild boar ravaging fruitful vineyards. I have witnessed it act as the obedient servant of fanaticism; of willful, violent, unlawful desire to inflict injury, to strip people of their individual franchises, to destroy their property, and lay waste their homes.

It has run a career of iniquity and crime in this country which no crowned head upon the earth would dare attempt, or would remain crowned for a single day if the attempt were made. It obeyed the call of an enraged and baffled party in this Capitol, when the constitutional acts of a President were sought to be enacted into a crime by which to hurl him from his high office by impeachment. When, therefore, sir, I read the report which accompanies the bill from the Judiciary Committee, and found it there asserted that while the Federal Constitution prohibited States from violating the obligations of contracts, such a prohibition did not extend to the Federal Government itself, I instinctively recoiled from this new, and, to my mind, monstrous assertion of power upon the part of Congress.

I am willing, however, indeed desirous, to go as far as possible—to the very verge of my conscience, as a sworn legislator—sworn to uphold the Constitution according to my own convictions—with the Judiciary Committee. Where I have doubts I have aimed to give the Government the benefit of them. Where my mind has wavered in regard to conclusions, I have striven to follow those arrived at by the distinguished gentlemen who compose that committee. As lawyers, their ability and industry and integrity are all most cheerfully conceded. Their infallibility, however, is not conceded. I believe their bill should be amended. I believe that the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] ought to be adopted.

If we are to admit that Congress has the power to adopt this bill, in my judgment we should say that this power shall not again be exercised as long as the companies gave no occasion for it by their failure to comply with the law.

This subject ought to be removed from Congress; it ought not to be a theme of perpetual agitation in these halls. The great interests at stake should not be made the playthings of stock speculators, brokers, and gamblers. Nor should they be left open for every adventurous, aspiring, restless member of either branch of Congress, to inaugurate a new agitation whenever his interests or his ambition might dictate. The scenes of the last four weeks in and about this Capitol should never be enacted again, if it is possible to avoid them. If the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee is not a sufficient one to protect the Government; if it is not sufficiently guarded; if it is so imperfect that it will be unsafe to declare it a finality, then let the Judiciary Committee do its work over again. It has the ability and experience to accomplish what we all so much desire. If that committee is not satisfied now to make this work of its hands permanent, let it try again; but let us have an end, let us have rest and quiet and repose on this subject.

It is true, of course, that one Congress cannot bind future Congresses, and the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE], if adopted, may be disregarded hereafter. But the question is less likely to be reopened after such a legislative declaration as this amendment makes than it would be if it were not made. The declaration contained in this amendment will have the effect to prevent litigation and to encourage the companies to fulfill the law in the belief and hope that while they do so no future Congress will be so regardless of good faith and of the public interests as to disturb the present adjustment. I have therefore, after the most serious and, in some respects, painful consideration of this subject, determined, for myself, that it is my duty to vote for the pending amendment. No question of public policy ever appeared to me in a clearer or more commanding light. The advantages to flow from its adoption are very great and very obvious to the commonest understanding; while the evils which, in my judgment, will follow its rejection are equally plain and beyond the reach of estimate.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I am not about to inflict upon the Senate a speech, but I shall not be able to vote for the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, of which I happen to be a member. That my reasons for withholding my vote from that bill are so radically unlike the reasons which others have assigned for their opposition to it, is the only excuse that I have for obtruding a remark into this debate. Whether these railroad companies are, as some have contended, great benefactors of the human race or common marauders, may be an interesting question, but it is not one that I shall discuss. Whether they are combinations of thieves or communities of saints might be very pleasant to know, but it seems to me the most interesting fact about these companies is one that nobody can dispute, and that is that they are debtors to the United States in very large sums, and whether they are honest or dishonest, the United States are alike interested in securing the repayment of that money. I say they are indebted to the United States in very large sums. Speaking only of millions, and referring only to a single company, that which is nearest to us, the Union Pacific, the principal of its debt is $27,000,000. The interest on that debt when it shall mature will be $49,000,000. Some portion of that interest will have been paid: no one has told and no one can tell precisely what portion of it. The probability is that it will be somewhere from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 of the interest. That is only one of the companies. The other will owe quite as much. A hundred millions is probably not an overestimate of the amount the two companies will owe the United States in about twenty-two years from this time.

I say that is the interesting fact in this case. How are we to secure the repayment of that interest, the collection of these debts? It seems to me, in spite of what others have said, that if that money is ever to be paid at all, it must be paid out of the annual net earnings of the companies, that the property mortgaged to us will never secure the repayment of those sums. The Union Pacific Company, which will in twenty-two years owe the United States not less than $50,000,000, I do not hesitate to say could be built now for $18,000,000. How does any one hope to realize from a mortgage on eighteen million dollars' worth of property a debt of $50,000,000, when prior to that mortgage there is another one to be paid of $27,000,000? It seems to me that that is a hopeless indebtedness; but nevertheless, though the cost or the intrinsic value of the property mortgaged is so very low, it happens that the annual net earnings of the company are abundant to pay not only the United States, but all the debts the company has yet contracted, enormous as those debts are.

Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee have furnished us with a table showing the net earnings of these companies for each year during the last four years. The Union Pacific Company had net receipts in 1874 amounting to a little more than $5,000,000; in 1875 to something more than $6,000,000; in 1876 to something more than $6,500,000; in 1877 amounting to $8,317,091.58. The Judiciary Committee have concluded from that table that since the average earnings for the past four years were over $6,500,000, we can rely upon the average earnings being hereafter fully $6,500,000. Is that a correct or a probable estimate? If you weigh a boy one year and find that he weighs forty pounds, and the next year at the same date you find that he weighs fifty, and the next year sixty, and the next year seventy, it would show that the average weight for the four years was fifty-five pounds, but it would be a very crude inference to conclude from that that his average weight the next four years would be fifty-five pounds. These Pacific companies are infants; they are lusty but they are growing; they traverse empty empires; it is their office to fill those empires and then to carry for them. They have not yet begun to exhibit what they are capable of doing, what they are capable of earning; but if we were compelled to conclude that they had already attained to the maximum of their earnings, there was last year, as I have already stated, $8,300,000 of net earnings at the disposition of the Union Pacific Company. That is a very large revenue. Many sovereign governments expend less than that in a year. Out of that revenue the Union Pacific Company can discharge all the interest due to all its creditors and still have a very large surplus in its treasury. The Government directors speaking of that company make the declaration that out of that balance a million can be taken for the 5 per cent. and for the half of the charges against the Government for transportation; all the interest due to all its creditors can be paid and 6 per cent. dividend can be declared on $36,000,000 of stock, and still the company would have $1,562,853.58 to spare.

If that company never grows an inch, but maintains the rate of earnings hereafter which it realized the last year, out of those earnings it is amply able to make provision for every debt it owes, whether to the Government of the United States or to anybody else. Now, ought the company to pay its debt? I find no one to dispute that. If it means to pay that debt, why should it not appropriate this surplus of annual earnings to the payment of it, instead of distributing it among its stockholders whom it does not owe? It is the fair thing for any man who owes money to hand his estate over to his creditors rather than to his children, whom he does not owe. It is the fair thing for the company to provide for its debts before it provides for its stockholders, and it is the interest of the company to make that disposition of its net earnings if it means to pay the debt. It is not a just thing to the stockholders to have the assets of the company squandered to the prejudice of the stock, or rather to endanger the stock. Why, then, should not provision be made to meet the whole debt of the companies out of their annual earnings? I have heard it said that they must pay some dividends to their stockholders. Why so? If the stock is earning money, is not that all that the stockholders can ask? If knowing the stock earns money, is it not just as much for the advantage of the stockholder that it should go to the surplus fund as that it should be divided among the stockholders? The Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] who sits near me insists that the property of the company is abundant security for the debts of the company, if I understand him.

Mr. BLAINE. For what remains of the indebtedness.

Mr. HOWE. For what will remain of the debt; that it will be adequate security for the $50,000,000 which will be due the United States and for the $27,000,000 (I am speaking now of the Union Pacific Company) which will be due on the first mortgage.

Mr. BLAINE. Only $20,000,000 will be due the United States, twenty millions by each company, forty on both, forty-seven millions in all on the Union Pacific.

Mr. HOWE. Then it would be $47,000,000 due to the United States and twenty-seven millions due on the first mortgage. Then a road which can be built for eighteen million is considered good security for a debt of $74,000,000!

Mr. BLAINE. How do you make seventy-four millions?

Mr. HOWE. Twenty-seven and forty-seven make seventy-four.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no; twenty-seven and twenty make forty-seven. It is only forty-seven million.

Mr. HOWE. Only twenty millions will remain due to the United States, the Senator means. I have not made these figures myself.

Mr. BLAINE. I took the figures from the Senator from Ohio; I have not made them myself.

Mr. HOWE. The conclusion of the Senator from Maine is that only twenty millions will be due to the United States, principal and interest, of this loan. Is that the conclusion of the Senator?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. It makes a very material difference and only leads us to this result, that instead of $67,000,000 there will be $47,000,000 due. The conclusion of the Senator is therefore that the road will be good security for $47,000,000, though it might not be good security for $67,000,000; and yet I cannot understand how a piece of property which can be duplicated for $18,000,000 can likely be good security for $47,000,000. Understand, the Senator will tell me that it is paying interest. He says it is paying 7 per cent. on $90,000,000. I admit that and it actually paid last year over 8 per cent. on $100,000,000, of net profit, and I firmly believe that if nursed, taken care of, not trampled upon, in five years from this time it can pay 12 per cent. on $100,000,000. But the Senator would not loan money at that rate and on that security, simply because this company cannot be secured forever in the exclusive carrying of the immense tract of country for which it is doing business to-day. I will not say it is unconstitutional, that it is a violation of the Constitution of the United States, but it is a violation of the constitution of American society, to permit anybody for a series of years to reap such enormous profits out of so small an outlay of money.

Therefore I think the Senator will conclude himself, or at least if he does not conclude himself that this is inadequate security, I hope he will be able to convince me that it is adequate; for all I ask for the United States is that we shall take such measures as will secure the repayment of that money. The question of time is with me quite unimportant; but if I were the company, I know I would not distribute these net earnings among the stockholders. It seems to me, I know I would say to the United States, "Let me invest this in the debt I owe you;" and if I were in the place of the United States I would say to the company, "Yes, we are glad to have that investment made in this debt, because we consider this debt insecure, and we will pay you a more liberal interest for that investment than you can realize on your net earnings, let you invest them anywhere else you can." If it be conceded that the company means to pay these debts and that the United States means to ask no more than the payment of these debts, then I cannot for my life see why the interest of the companies and the interest of the United States are not identical. We want not to crush the companies but to encourage them, because they are our debtors, and they want to exhibit their good faith and their determination to meet what their real obligations are, because we are their creditors.

I do not therefore object, Mr. President, to this bill because it asserts a power over the companies which I am prepared to deny. I neither deny nor assert that power. I do not think it the proper time to raise that issue. When we have said distinctly to the companies, "all that we want is that you shall secure us in the repayment of what you owe," and when they shall say "we will not secure you to that extent," then it seems to me it will be time for us to see what are the reserved powers of the Government over these charters. But I would make an honest endeavor and a serious endeavor, as it seems to me, to see whether there could not be an agreement between the companies and the Government before I fell back on that power, and if driven to the assertion of the power at last, it seems to me I would not exert it to enforce the payment of a part of what is due, but I would enforce it to assert the ultimate and full rights of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. OGLESBY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have a few words to say on this amendment, but if there are other Senators who wish to speak now

I will cheerfully yield the floor. I want to get a vote on this bill to-day if it is the pleasure of the Senate to take the vote, as I hope it will be. I am willing to forego anything like a set speech in the conclusion of the debate, but I shall claim the right to be heard before the vote is taken. I consider the amendment as really determining the fate of the bill. If there is any Senator now who would prefer to speak further, I cheerfully give up the floor.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, every Senator unquestionably feels the importance of the bill now before the Senate. In fact there are two bills before the Senate, a bill from the Judiciary Committee and a bill from the Railroad Committee. Under my obligations as a Senator I cannot vote for either of those bills as they now are. The bill introduced by the Judiciary Committee, in my judgment, asserts power that does not belong to the legislative department of this Government. God forbid, sir, that I shall ever subscribe to the doctrine of the omnipotency of Congress, and, with a very high regard for the Judiciary Committee, I do not believe in their omniscience. A bill is brought here and we are told, absolutely told, in words told that the wisdom of man is exhausted; this bill is to be taken with no t's crossed, no i's dotted; the Judiciary Committee is potent enough to require its passage just as it is.

Mr. President, in my judgment this bill is in violation of the Constitution of the United States. There has been a wheelbarrow-load of decisions of courts brought here and not one that sustains the claim of the Judiciary Committee. I do not propose to consume much of the time of the Senate, and therefore I will lay down what I regard as the law as decided by one of the highest courts in the United States, as decided by one of the purest courts in the United States.

In the first place, let me premise by saying that all the power possessed by Congress is by grant, and that grant is to be found in the Constitution of the United States. There is no other power possessed by Congress; and what is that power? It is intimated, more than intimated, that because the States of this Union are inhibited from passing a law impairing the obligation of contracts, Congress can do that same violation of common sense and common justice. I have not heard my distinguished friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] claim that power, for he says he is a strict-construction, hard-headed democrat; I think I use his own language.

Now, then, can Congress pass a law impairing the obligation of a contract? They seek to do it. The bill of the Judiciary Committee seeks to impair the obligation of a contract, as I will try to show before I get through. First, then, what is a contract? That is the first point in the legal propositions to which I direct the attention of the Senate. "A contract within the Constitution of the United States is one relating to property or some object of value"—mark the language—"which imposes an obligation capable in legal contemplation of being impaired." That is a contract, relating to some object of value which imposes an obligation capable in legal contemplation of being impaired. Now, I assume that there is an executed agreement between the Government of the United States and these two railroad companies. I assume that that agreement is executed. I assume that there are objects of value connected with that contract.

Let me see whether I am right or not. If I am not right, I shall vote for the bill. If any Senator will disprove these propositions of law, I shall vote for the bill. No man has yet disproved them. Now, let us see what this agreement was. The United States said this—of course I have not the charter in my hands—the United States said to these Pacific Railroad Companies, "If you will transport the munitions of war of the United States, taking half our transportation as payment presently, build this road, keep it in absolute repair, with all its material in order, then we will loan you so much money, to be paid on a given, certain day, we in the mean time taking 5 per cent. of your net earnings and half the cost of the transportation you do for us."

There is an obligation of value: first a service to be performed by these companies, next a sum of money to be paid annually or semi-annually for these companies. There is your contract executed. Have I not stated it correctly? If I have not I should like to be corrected, because I have said that if these legal propositions fail me I shall vote for the bill.

One other legal point I direct the attention of the Judiciary Committee to. "A legislative enactment equivalent to a contract or agreement, which is perfected, requiring nothing further to be done in order to its entire completion, is a contract executed, and whatever rights are thereby created subsequent legislation cannot impair." I desire an answer to that legal proposition.

This is the argument of the supreme court of Connecticut when giants occupied her bench. No greater or purer men than Williams and Johnson and Huntington and Storrs ever sat on a bench anywhere. I commend this law, for it runs on all fours with my claim.

One other proposition. "A legislative act in the nature of an executory contract, which is supported by valuable and sufficient consideration, creates an obligation which a subsequent legislature cannot impair."

These three propositions I submit to the Senate as the positions upon which I stand, and as an honorable man, as a man standing by the constituted rights of the people and of the corporations created by the Government, I cannot avoid these positions. "Ah," but says the Judiciary Committee, "do you deny the right to do" what? To repeal? It is in the charter. To amend? It is in the charter. "Do you deny it?" Certainly not. Whenever a corporation, the creature of a legislative body, violates the agreement which it has made with its creator, then the creator will take from it the power which he has given it, and never under any other circumstances. It never has been done in the United States and never will be done.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the use of the reservation?

Mr. EATON. I am glad my friend has interrupted me without rising. The use of the reservation is simple and easy: first, the right to amend, the right to alter, the right to repeal. The right to amend is absolutely necessary for the well-being of the corporation itself. The right to alter is necessary to the well-being and the proper carrying on of the corporation itself. Everybody knows it; everybody that has served, as I have, in the Legislature of a Commonwealth that is certainly a corporation-ridden as any Commonwealth ought to be, knows that without that power to amend not infrequently corporations themselves would be stopped. Let me ask my friend who just interrupted me, does he claim that without any fault on the part of one of these railroad companies, or any other corporation chartered by Congress, Congress possesses the absolute power to repeal the charter in despite of its vested rights? I ask if he claims any such right?

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know what the Senator means by "vested rights."

Mr. EATON. Suppose you let me tell, or guess, either.

Mr. THURMAN. I can say this, that Congress has the right to take away every franchise of that corporation at its pleasure.

Mr. EATON. I do not believe that. I do not believe that is the meaning of the right to alter, amend, and repeal. It would destroy any government on the footstool of the Almighty that undertook to exercise a right as violent to common sense and common justice as that. It is put there to alter when it becomes necessary either to the well-being of the public or for the necessities of the corporation. It is put there to amend when it is necessary to amend either for the well-being of the public or for the weal of the corporation, to secure the purposes of the grant as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] suggests. It is put there to repeal and take away the charter when that corporation violates itself the contract it entered into. It means nothing else, and there is not a one-horse court in the United States anywhere that has ever taken any other view. You of the Judiciary Committee have brought here a wheelbarrow-load of decisions that do not come within a thousand miles of touching the question.

I should be very glad to have somebody answer the legal propositions which I have had the honor to submit, and in submitting them I have stated that they come from a court renowned among the high courts of this country.

Sir, a great deal has been said here that I have been sorry to hear. Intimations have been made here—Senators have not dared to say on this floor that these roads were bribing Senators; that they did not dare to say—but they have thrown out intimations so that the public press have said that there has been something in that nature. Intimations have been made that the lobby has come here and chased men to their private doors and houses and libraries. Sir, I have not been troubled with any lobbyists. There are but two gentlemen who are connected with this railroad that have ever spoken to me and that but once apiece. It has been more than intimated—for the language has been used here—that those who ventured to differ from the Judiciary Committee in regard to this bill were the friends of the roads. What does that mean? I ask what it means? Is there anybody here who is an enemy of these roads? Is my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY?] I trow not. Is my friend from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN?] I trow not. Am I more a friend of the roads because I cannot see the constitutionality of the bill which was born of the Judiciary Committee than any other man ought to be? Sir, I stand by my own convictions always, here and everywhere else. Here is a bill that in my judgment destroys the constitutional rights of a corporation, the rights given it, and rights which by law cannot be taken from it except by its own default. Believing that as I do, am I to be called a friend of the roads as against my country?

Mr. President, figures have been submitted here—I do not know by what computation of interest payable semi-annually—showing that there will be $200,000,000 due, more or less, by the time this loan becomes due, and the roads cannot pay it, and therefore we are to violate the contract and make them begin to pay it now! Good law! Sound morals! Now let me make a few figures. I beg to say in advance that it is a sorry business for me to make figures of this character. It is said—my friend from California [Mr. SARGENT] can tell me if I am correct—that the United States by the chartering of these companies has saved from two and a half to four million dollars annually since the roads have been in operation. Now, a little figuring. Suppose it should be from two and a half to four millions annually from now till the year 1900, at 6 per cent. interest, computed semi-annually, this would be more than $500,000,000. When you make figures one way, take them the other way. The arithmetic I care nothing about, but it is simply as sound upon the one side as it is upon the other. If the Government, to illustrate, saved $1,000,000 last year by means of this railroad, then if you put it at 6 per cent. interest, as you must, and it is an outlay of the Government for thirty years, what would the amount be? And so for every succeeding year from now until 1900.

But, Mr. President, that is not the question; and it is not the question either whether I would have voted to charter these roads, for I know I would not if I had been a member of this body. I would not have voted to give these powers to these companies. I do not believe the policy was a wise one at the time; but it was adopted; the contract was made; the agreement was entered into; the valuable consideration passed; it became an executed contract, and I have learned that it is best to stand by your agreements.

When were they to begin to pay? They ought to have begun to pay their interest when it was due, according to my view. The Supreme Court thought differently, that interest ought not to be paid until the thirty years had run. I confess that my opinion runs on all fours with that of the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] in that particular, doubtless wrong because the Supreme Court has said we were both wrong; but it has struck me that if the Supreme Court had happened to be able to have seen the law as I did, it would have saved us all this trouble. But one branch of the Government, the Supreme Court of the United States, has laid its hand upon what I believe to be the law and made a law for us all; and because the Supreme Court has said that this interest is not due, and need not and shall not be paid until a certain day when the bonds become due and payable, the Judiciary Committee say they will begin now and they do not even call it payment, they dodge, they call it putting it into a sinking fund. The difference between that and payment is not so great that a man cannot see it unless he has his spectacles on. I owe my friend from Maine a thousand dollars which is payable five years hence. He comes to me and says "Now I cannot make you pay this, but it will not be payment if you let me take $100 a year and put it into a sinking fund; I will give you 5 per cent, interest on it and it will not be payment." "Oh," but I say to my friend from Maine, "Why, my brother BLAINE, I can make 10 per cent, by this money." Is it not payment? Is it not taking from me what I have a right to by law and appropriating it to pay a debt that is not due for ten years. It is not anything else. You may get around it by calling it any name you please, but it is payment, and forcing payment of money that is not due.

Mr. President, one of the desires of my heart is that these companies should proceed to do this thing. They can do it better now than they can twenty years hence; but it does not follow that you have got the power to make them do it. My eloquent friend from California, the Senator who sits farthest from me, [Mr. BOOTH,] drew a picture of graphic power—indeed it was eloquent, that here were two high contracting parties, the Government of the United States on the one side and these corporations on the other, that they were to meet diplomatically—I do not pretend to give his words—and they were to treat as two great powers. Well, why not? Strip it of its verbiage and use the language of a common-sense man, a plain man like I am, why not? It is done every day in every State in this Union where there are any corporations. Not once, but more than a hundred times in the Legislature of my State has a charter been altered and amended, to become the law when the corporation agrees to the amendment. The only way to get it is by agreement. The corporation desires to have its charter amended in a particular manner. What is to be done? The Legislature must authorize it. What next is to be done? In its corporate capacity, in its office, it must agree to the amendment and have the amendment entered upon its records. It is done everywhere. My friend from New Hampshire, my friend from Maine, every man that represents a manufacturing community, knows that this is the way in which the charters of corporations are always altered, and I know no reason—my friend from California may—why the Congress of the United States shall not agree with one of the railroad corporations, its own children, to alter and amend the charter so that it may begin to pay a debt that is not due for twenty years. On the contrary I know that it is good sense and wise statesmanship to do it. Nobody will gainsay it.

If my good friends here who now entertain no doubt of this power did entertain a doubt, they would not exercise it; if like me they entertained a doubt of the power, they would go with me in order to effect such an arrangement as that this debt might begin to be paid before it is due. That I shall try to do; that I shall not fail to do; and so far as any amendment can be added to this bill that will make a suitable bill for the acceptance of the people who are corporators under the laws of the United States, so far it will get my support. If this bill was defeated, I certainly could not vote for the bill of the Railroad Committee, unless great amendments were made to it, and because it does not strike me as a proper business bill. I will not talk any further on that subject at this time.

Now, Mr. President, but a word more, for I have already spoken longer than I intended when I rose. I desire to exercise all the power that I believe the Federal Legislature possesses in order to effect a good object so far as the payment of this debt of these railroad corporations is concerned. Further than that, I cannot, will not, go—cannot go without dishonor to myself. In the grant of power that governs me as a member of this body, I find no authority to take a corporation that is in default by the throat and violate the very contract and agreement which I entered into with it. I see no such power. Senators who do will exercise it. I do not. Therefore I must look to the next best thing, and that is to make an arrangement; and, as I said before, I repeat there is nothing dishonorable in it any more than there would be if it was a transaction between my friend from Kentucky [Mr. McCREERY] and myself of $20,000, no part of it being due for twenty years; if he and I could make an arrangement by which I could pay a portion of that debt before it became due, we ought to do it. As guardians of the public weal, having in hand the best interests of the people of this whole country, we ought to do that. To that I will direct myself at all times and in all places. If it is necessary I shall not hesitate to speak to the president of the railroad—I never saw him in my life that I know of. I may have seen him but not to know him. I may have passed him. I do not know that he has invaded the lobbies; I do not know that he has followed me to my home; but I never have seen him to know him. But, Mr. President, I shall not hesitate, as a Senator of the United States, to speak to the president of one of these corporations at any time and suggest to him what would be wisdom for him as well as for the United States. To use an ordinary expression, it would not let me down any. It is a duty that I owe to my people, to the State which has honored me with a seat on this floor, to do all that I may honorably to adjust the matters between these two companies and the United States, and so believing, so I will do; and while I will stand firm as a rock, firm as granite, against what I believe to be unconstitutional legislation, I will devote myself, heart and soul, to effecting a compromise between this Government and these corporations that shall be alike honorable to both.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech, but I do rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which I believe to sustain fully the very doctrine enunciated by the Senator from Connecticut who has just taken his seat, [Mr. EATON.] This opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States has not been quoted at length nor has it been commented on very much by the able lawyers of the Judiciary Committee who have sought to sustain the bill reported from that committee by their able arguments. I refer to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the interest case, in the case of The United States vs. The Union Pacific Railroad Company, reported in 1 Otto.

It will be remembered that in that case the Supreme Court of the United States held, all the judges of that great court concurring, on the point which had been disputed so long and so ably by the very members of the Judiciary Committee that now report this bill, that the interest that the Government of the United States is paying semi-annually for the benefit of these companies was not refundable by the companies to the Government until the maturity of the bonds. That had been a disputed question in the Senate; that had been a disputed question before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. It is true the great body of that able committee held as the Supreme Court of the United States has decided. It is also true that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the honorable Senator from Vermont who addressed the Senate at length to-day, did not agree with that committee at that time, but held to an opinion entirely different from the majority of the Judiciary Committee and to an opinion moreover in direct conflict with that afterward announced by the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

But what I desire to call attention to now is this, that in that opinion reported in 1 Otto, the Supreme Court of the United States not only decided the question before them, which was simply the question whether the interest was payable before or not until the maturity of the bonds, but they intimated in the very strongest possible manner that under the contract as it existed under existing laws there was no power in Congress to create a sinking fund without the consent of the companies out of which and with which to meet the payment of these bonds at their maturity, and the Supreme Court in that decision placed the question as to the security that the Government had retained in its hands with which to meet the payment of these bonds, upon precisely the same plane, the same footing as a part of the contract as they placed the provision in relation to the payment of interest. They regarded the provision in the one case precisely similar to the provision in the other case; that is to say, the provision in the law which when construed by the Supreme Court of the United States was to the effect that interest was not to be refunded to the Government by the companies until the maturity of the principal of the bonds had the same relation to this contract as the other provision which stipulated what the security of the Government should be for the payment of the principal of the bonds at their maturity. And now I call attention to the language of the court upon that point to see if it is not just precisely as I state it. The court in speaking of this matter say:

They created no obligation to keep down the interest, nor were they so intended. The provision for retaining the amount due for services rendered, and applying it toward the general indebtedness of the company to the Government, cannot be construed into a requirement that the company shall pay the interest from time to time, and the principal when due.

Now I call attention to what follows:

It was in the discretion of Congress to make this requirement, and then, as collateral to it, provide a special fund or funds out of which the principal could be discharged. This Congress did not choose to do, but rested satisfied with the entire property of the company as security for the ultimate payment of the principal and interest, and in the mean time with special provisions looking to the reimbursement of the Government for interest paid by it, and to the application of the surplus, if any remained, to discharge the principal.

It was in the discretion of Congress to do what? "To make this requirement."—What requirement was the court referring to? The requirement that these companies should refund to the Government the interest semi-annually. That was the requirement they referred to; and then the court proceeds:

As collateral to it—

To do what? To—

Provide a special fund or funds out of which the principal could be discharged.

Congress could not only have provided that the interest should be refunded semi-annually but they could have gone further, neither of which they did do, the court say. What further could they have done? They could have gone further and as the court say—

As collateral to it, provide a special fund or funds out of which the principal could be discharged.

But the Government did not do that. Congress did not do either of those things. It neither provided that the interest should be paid semi-annually, nor did it provide collateral to that, as the Supreme Court say, that "a special fund or funds" should be provided with which to meet the principal of the bonds at maturity. The Supreme Court say that Congress might have done either of these things, and then go on to say that they did not do either, place them both as twin provisions in this contract, place them precisely upon the same footing as part and parcel of this contract made between the Government and these companies, and then, after laying down the law in that shape, the court proceed to say:

This Congress did not choose to do, but rested satisfied with—

With what? What did Congress rest satisfied with? What was a part of the contract and one of its principal stipulations? Was it that the interest should be refunded semi-annually? Not at all. Was it that "a special fund or funds" should be provided with which to meet the maturity of the bonds? Not at all. What was it, then. Why, Mr. President, it was this, as stated by the Supreme Court of the United States:

This Congress did not choose to do, but rested satisfied with the entire property of the company as security for the ultimate payment of the principal and interest, and in the mean time with special provisions looking to the reimbursement of the Government for interest paid by it and to the application of the surplus, if any remained, to discharge the principal.

And now hear what the court say in addition upon the question as to what the companies might have been willing to do or not been willing to do under this contract:

The company, for obvious reasons, might be very willing to accept the bonds on these terms, and very unwilling to make an absolute promise to pay the interest as it accrued.

That is to say, while when the act of 1864 was passed originally the companies might have been willing to accept that act when the provision was not that they should create a fund with which to meet the maturity of the bonds, but that they should give security upon the entire property of the company to meet the maturity of the bonds, while, say the Supreme Court, the companies might have been willing to accept a charter containing these terms, they might not have been willing to accept a charter which provided that the interest should be refunded semi-annually or that they should create a fund or funds from year to year with which to meet the payment of the bonds at maturity.

And, Mr. President, no man, I care not how good a lawyer he may be, can successfully contend that the Supreme Court of the United States did not decide, so far as it had power to decide anything, that one of the essential terms of the original contract, one of the vital parts of the charter—I mean the act of 1864—was that the companies, instead of being compelled to provide a fund from year to year to meet the payment of the interest, were simply called upon to give security upon their entire property with which to meet that payment when the bonds should mature. The court say:

The company, for obvious reasons, might be very willing to accept the bonds on these terms and very unwilling to make an absolute promise to pay the interest as it accrued.

And does my honorable friend from Ohio believe for one moment to-day that if the charter, instead of providing as it did provide, had provided that the companies should pay into the Treasury of the United States 25 per cent. of their net earnings every year with which to meet the payment of the bonds at maturity, it would be the same kind of a contract or that the companies would have accepted that kind of a contract? It seems to me not, Mr. President. The court say further:

If it were in a condition, either during the progress or on the completion of the road, to earn anything, there would be no hardship in applying the compensation due it; but, as can be readily seen, if it were required to raise money every six months to pay interest when all its available means were necessary to the prosecution of the work, the burden might be very heavy. Congress did not see fit to impose it and thus place the company in a position to incur a forfeiture of all its grants in case of failure to provide the means to pay current interest. Besides, it is fair to infer that Congress supposed that the services to be rendered by the company to the Government would equal the interest to be paid. That this was not an unreasonable expectation is shown by the published statistics of the vast cost of transporting military and naval stores and the mails to the Pacific coast by the modes of transit then in use.

It has been said, and will be said again, that this point as to the power of Congress to create a sinking fund was not before the court in that case, and that the only point before the court was as to the extent of the payment of interest. However that may be, I have undertaken to show, and I think have shown, that the Supreme Court through its organ, Associate Justice DAVIS, in giving the opinion in that case, intimated in the clearest possible manner that there was no power now, without the consent of the companies, to create a fund or funds with which to meet the payment of these bonds at maturity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will you read the clause in which that intimation appears?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have read it, and I will read it again. I have read this opinion carefully and I cannot come to any other conclusion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to hear just that point you were speaking of, that we have no power.

Mr. MITCHELL. The court say:

The provision for retaining the amount due for services rendered, and applying it toward the general indebtedness of the company to the Government, cannot be construed into a requirement that the company shall pay the interest from time to time, and the principal when due. It was in the discretion of Congress to make this requirement—

What requirement? To refund the interest. That is what they were talking about there. But what follows?—

and then, as collateral to it, provide a special fund or funds out of which the principal could be discharged.

What I said a moment ago while the honorable Senator was out was this, that the Supreme Court of the United States treats of these two provisions as parts of the contract, treats them as twin provisions of this contract, namely, first the payment of interest, which was not to take place until the maturity of the bonds, and second, the kind of security that the Government retained in its hands or provided for when it passed this law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But may I ask my honorable friend, if I do not disturb him, if the constitutionality of the acts of Congress that the court was called upon to expound was drawn in question? He will say of course that it was not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course I admit that the point before the Supreme Court for decision was simply as to whether or not the interest that the Government was to pay semi-annually for these companies should be refunded to the Government by the companies semi-annually or not until the maturity of the bonds. I admit that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then will not my friend also admit that all that the court was undertaking to do, so far as its effectual judgment was concerned, was to expound the meaning of the statutes on which the question arose?

Mr. MITCHELL. I admit that anything they may have said outside of the direct point in issue may be regarded as an obiter dictum in one sense, but they did go on to construe these statutes. It was necessary to give construction to these statutes in order to decide the actual point before the court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MITCHELL. "Undoubtedly" my friend says, and in doing that, after referring to the different clauses of the statutes, they say:

It was in the discretion of Congress to make this requirement.

That was to require the interest to be repaid semi-annually, which Congress did not do. Say the court: "It was in the discretion of Congress * * as collateral to it" to do something else. What was that something else? It was to "provide a special fund or funds out of which the principal could be discharged." But Congress did not do that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now does the Senator mean that that shows that the Supreme Court meant to say or had in their heads the notion that Congress had no power in future to make a provision of that character?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do most unquestionably believe that the Supreme Court of the United States in the language used there intimated, in the strongest manner that they could intimate in giving construction to these statutes, that there was no power in Congress to create a fund or funds, without the consent of the companies, with which to meet the payment of these bonds at their maturity, and the court gave a reason for it in the very same opinion, and that reason I will read:

This Congress did not choose to do, but rested satisfied with the entire property of the company as security for the ultimate payment of the principal and interest, and in the mean time with special provisions looking to the reimbursement of the Government for interest paid by it and to the application of the surplus, if any remained, to discharge the principal.

Congress did not choose to do what? Congress did not choose to provide for the creation of a fund or funds, to use their language, with which to meet the payment of these bonds at their maturity. They did not choose to do that, but they did choose to do something else.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Therefore they cannot choose now!

Mr. MITCHELL. They did choose to do something else. What was that something else? They chose to take a legislative lien upon the property of these companies. That was what Congress chose to do in the passage of the act of 1864, and then the court go on to say: "The company, for obvious reasons, might be very willing to accept" a charter when the security was that kind of security stipulated in the act of 1864, while they might not be willing to accept a charter that fixed some other kind of security, or, to use the language of the Supreme Court, which would compel them to provide a special fund or funds out of which to pay these bonds at maturity.

That is all I desire to say, Mr. President.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, if the Senate is ready to vote upon the question I will not ask leave to make a report from a committee of conference. If not, I should like to submit a report and have it acted upon.

Mr. COCKRELL and others. Let us go on with this.

Mr. WINDOM. It will take but a moment.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator merely wishes to have a committee of conference appointed of course it will take but a moment.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask leave to make a report from a committee of conference in order that another committee may be appointed.

Mr. THURMAN. To that I do not object.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DETECTING TRESPASSES, ETC.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3102) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriations for detecting trespass on public lands, and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

WM. WINDOM,
S. W. DORSEY,
JAS. B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

M. J. DURHAM,
J. H. BLOUNT,
J. H. BAKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WINDOM. A single word in explanation. The committee of conference agreed on every provision of the bill except that which was inserted by the Senate appropriating $20,000 for postal clerks and agents. Upon that the conference committee were unable to agree. The report is a general disagreement, however, and I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and ask for another conference.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the committee.

Mr. WINDOM, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. BECK were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3064) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. EATON.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4245) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, a brigadier-general in the United States Army on the retired list, was read the first time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the present consideration of that bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To which I object, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is well taken. The bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In making that objection I wish to say that I do not intend to be made a party to picking out one gallant soldier from thousands who stand on the same ground to ease any party in either House of Congress from a bad scrape.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Commissary-General of Subsistence, urging that the clerical force recommended in his annual report for 1877 be provided for by an appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 15) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to modify the amendment as I gave notice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment, as modified, will be read.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator cannot modify his amendment after the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator make that objection?

Mr. THURMAN. He can offer it as an amendment to his amendment, perhaps.

Mr. BLAINE. I think there is nothing in the rules that would prevent my offering this as an amendment. I offer the following amendment, which, I think, will get around the exceedingly critical point of the Senator from Ohio. I offer it as an amendment to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported at length.

Mr. THURMAN. An amendment to the amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. A separate amendment at the end of section 12.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is another amendment pending.

Mr. BLAINE. That is all true, but I offer this as an amendment. If Senators will not permit me to modify it, I can offer it in a certain place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But you will have to wait for the proper time to come.

Mr. BLAINE. Now is the time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But there is an amendment pending.

Mr. BLAINE. But I can offer it as an amendment to another section of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to a point of order that the Senator has a right to modify his amendment at any time.

Mr. BLAINE. The yeas and nays were ordered yesterday, and the Senator from Ohio makes the point that I have not the right to modify it, which under a strict construction of the rule is probably true, if the Senator desires to hold me to that.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that. That is the very point of order I make, and I should like to have a decision of the Chair on it, whether the Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. It cannot be withdrawn; whether it can be modified or not I am not sure. It is not a very large point anyway, the Senate will observe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Rule 44, as follows:

Any motion or resolution may be withdrawn or modified by the mover at any time before a decision, amendment, or ordering of the yeas and nays, except a motion to reconsider, which shall not be withdrawn without leave of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point is well taken by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BLAINE. I want—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This not being an amendment to an amendment—

Mr. BLAINE. I understand; the point is well taken; I make no objection to it at all, but—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment first offered by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, if one of the pages will hand me back that, I can make a remark and get the other amendment before the Senate. The reason why I do not put in the proviso separately is that I want a vote on my amendment as a whole, and I want it to come in at the end of the twelfth section because there are certain words in the twelfth section after the word "mentioned" which this was originally written to follow that seem to some members to be worth while preserving; and, as I intimated yesterday, if any Senator is better satisfied with the amendment at the end of the twelfth section, not striking out any of the words in the section, I am entirely willing that it shall be so placed. As the Senator from Ohio objects to my perfecting it, I suppose he will object to my withdrawing the amendment. It is my desire to let the amendment which I have already offered go by and to have the vote of the Senate, the test upon it, come on the amendment which I have modified to meet every possible criticism which the Senator from Vermont this morning leveled against it; and as a whole my amendment will read thus:

But so long as said Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railroad Companies shall faithfully comply with the provisions of the said acts of 1862 and 1864, and of this act, relating to payments to the United States on account of the bonds advanced, and of the sinking funds to be established as aforesaid, such compliance shall be deemed and taken as sufficient to meet the obligations of said companies on account of such bonds prior to the maturity thereof: Provided, That the annual payment from each railroad company, in addition to the half-transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings presently applicable to the interest on the bonds, shall never be less than $500,000 applicable to the sinking funds herein established, and that nothing in this act shall be construed to waive any claim of the United States against either of said railroad companies from whatever source arising.

I think those two provisions effectually dispose of all the wind-mills which the Senator from Vermont has constructed and then proceeded to fight. I do not think they add anything of strength to the amendment beyond the original text, except in the amount of money which they require; and if the Senator from Ohio stated the point correctly, as I presume he did the other day from his calculation, then this proviso exacts more money at least from the Union Pacific Railroad Company, if not from both, than the bill of the Senator from Ohio does. Instead of reducing the money payment into the Treasury of the United States for a sinking fund, this would increase it, and the moment the companies should go into default upon the 5 per cent. or upon the half transportation or upon the $600,000 in addition to both, then the power of Congress to step in and do just as it pleases with them would be restored in its fullest possible vigor. The only possible dispute that could grow up out of it would be in the matter of the 5 per cent., for possibly the Supreme Court might decide that 5 per cent. net earnings to be different from that which is embraced in the Judiciary Committee bill, although I do not know that they would, nor do I probably think much that they would, but they possibly might. But on the half transportation the Government has that in its own hands, and the $600,000 is certainly very easily counted. I think the Senator from Ohio had better not put the Senate to the trouble of voting upon an incomplete amendment, but let the vote come directly on mine as I have now perfected it.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Maine, as I understand his amendment now, does not propose that $600,000 shall be in addition to the half transportation.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Provided, That the annual payment from each railroad company, in addition to the half-transportation account and the 5 per cent. of net earnings presently applicable to the interest on the bonds, shall never be less than $600,000.

Mr. THURMAN. Well, the half transportation and the 5 per cent. coupled together are those things which are now payable under the law.

Mr. BLAINE. That is what I said—"presently applicable."

Mr. THURMAN. They are presently applicable, and now all that the Senator requires in addition to that is $600,000 a year.

Mr. BLAINE. I say it shall never be less in any event. The Senator will see that it leaves all the requirements of his bill intact.

Mr. THURMAN. No, it does not.

Mr. BLAINE. Everything in his bill is left intact.

Mr. THURMAN. No.

Mr. McDONALD. I would call the Senator from Maine's attention to the report of the committee. From the Union Pacific the amount of cash payment, as stated there, if the provisions of this bill are realized, would be $850,000.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the very highest to which it may go; this does not interfere with that in the slightest degree.

Mr. McDONALD. This says it shall not be less than $600,000 as to the Central Pacific. The amount there required to be paid in is $1,200,000. Your proposition allows it to be reduced just one-half.

Mr. BLAINE. No, it does not.

Mr. McDONALD. It may be.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will pardon me. The Senator from Vermont was drawing a great picture here of all this concern going into eternal smash, that the stockholders were going to be a parcel of irresponsible men bent on ruining the whole property; they were going to sacrifice the first-mortgage bonds and going to sacrifice the sinking-fund bonds, and going to make the stock worthless and valueless, and they would go to default on the first-mortgage bonds, and then he says the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine has so tied up our hands that we cannot touch the thing at all. I answered him by putting in a proviso that, in addition to the 5 per cent. and the half transportation, they should in no event ever pay less than $600,000 a year for each company. The Senator from Ohio himself stated that the first year the Union Pacific would pay less than $600,000 under the bill, only $100,000 I think he said, in addition to the half transportation, which is not applicable to interest. So the very minimum that is contained in the proviso that I offer is more than the Senator himself proposes. It was in answer to this lugubrious picture of the stockholders having hold of a property worth $100,000,000 who would just for the fun of the thing ruin it to see if they could not fight the United States. That was the picture that the Senator from Vermont brought before us, that for the sake of spitting somebody and making the United States have trouble, they would ruin their own property. I think if there is any possible instinct to be relied upon, I think if there is any possible instinct in mankind that it is safe to legislate upon, it is that men will take care of their own interests and look after their own money. All the hypothetical cases presented by the Senator from Vermont went upon the supposition that these men would set to work deliberately to destroy their own property to see if they might not incidentally do some harm to the United States. I meet him with an amendment which puts that beyond the power of any possible construction. If the Senator from Ohio insists on having a vote on the original amendment, I hope nobody will vote in favor of it for the simple reason that I want the vote to come from any gentleman who may happen to sympathize with my views on this amendment if the Senator will not permit me to have it voted on directly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment first offered by the Senator from Maine, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, if there is any Senator who desires to speak, I do not wish to take the floor.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me to make one remark I shall be content.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well.

Mr. HILL. The other afternoon, in a colloquy with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] I stated that I endeavored to draw a distinction between the charter and the contract, which I tried to set forth. I referred to the case of Miller vs. The State, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 15 Wallace. I referred to the decision of the majority of the Court and the reasons given by the dissenting judges for their dissent in that case, and if it does not make clear this point, then I am sure I cannot understand plain law. I desire the Senate to remember that this point is applicable here, because the controversy arose there upon a contract which it was claimed was independent of the charter, was not a franchise, though contained in the charter or the act granting the charter, just as here this contract of loan is authorized by the same act that creates the Union Pacific Railroad Company; and the able Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] insisted that the words "to alter, amend, or repeal," being general, necessarily applied to everything in that act. I have been endeavoring to show to the Senate that those words could only apply to such portions of the act as they were properly applicable to in the nature of the thing. Now I simply want for a moment to call the attention of the Senate to that case of Miller vs. The State, and I want to read, in addition to the constitutional provision in New York, the provision of their general code. It is much stronger, I submit to the Senate, than the language of the reservation contained in either the act of 1862 or the act of 1864. Let us see the reservation under the laws of New York:

First. The charter of every corporation that shall hereafter be granted by the Legislature shall be subject to alteration, suspension, and repeal, in the discretion of the Legislature.

That is the New York law; it shall be subject to alteration, suspension, and repeal, in the discretion of the Legislature. You say here that the reservation in the acts of 1862 and 1864 gives Congress discretionary power to alter, change, and repeal everything in these acts. What you claim as the construction of the acts of 1862 and 1864 is the very language of the law of New York. In spite of that language, when the Legislature of 1851 in New York amended the charter of a certain railroad company by which it changed the number of directors to which the city of Rochester was entitled, increased their number and lessened the number of directors to which the other stockholders were entitled, a point arose, and what was it? As to whether the Legislature had a right to make that change under this reservation which said they should have discretionary power to make changes. That was the very controversy. Now, then, what was the decision of the courts? It was decided by a divided court in New York, and it came here and was decided by a divided Supreme Court of the United States. The majority of the court say this in pronouncing the opinion:

These last stockholders—

The general stockholders—

regarding the act of 1851 as making a contract that they should have nine directors and the city but four, and that the act of 1867 violated that contract, elected their, old nine.

This is the syllabus of the court:

Held, on a quo warranto, that the act of 1867 did not, in view of the State constitution and the act of 1828 making charters subject to alteration, suspension, and repeal, make such a contract, and that the act of 1867 was constitutional.

That court held that the change made by the act of 1867 was not a contract outside of the franchise, but was part of the franchise, and therefore was constitutional. This is made clear by the dissenting opinion. Judge Bradley pronounced a dissenting opinion in that case, and Judge Field concurred.

Hear what they say:

I dissent from the opinion of the court in this case on the ground that the agreement with respect to the number of directors which the city of Rochester should elect was not a part of the charter of the company, but an agreement outside of and collateral to it.

That is the very point. If the whole court had believed that this change made by the act of 1867 was not a change in the franchise of the corporation, was not a change in the corporate authorities of the company, but affected an agreement which, though contained in the charter, was outside of and collateral to it, the court would have concurred and pronounced the act unconstitutional. The minority judges distinctly put their dissent on that ground; they believed that this contract in the original act authorizing the city of Rochester to have four directors and the other stockholders nine was an agreement, not a franchise, not a part of the charter, but an agreement outside of and collateral to it, and therefore was not subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal under that sweeping provision of the law of New York which gave the Legislature absolute discretion over the charter.

One more remark. The decision of Tomlinson vs. Jessup has been referred to; that came up from South Carolina, Mr. Justice Field pronouncing the decision. Here is the law stated in a nutshell, and it takes the very distinction that I draw and which I have been endeavoring to enforce upon this body:

The reservation—

A reservation like the one now under consideration. Says the court:

The reservation affects the entire relation between the State and the corporation, and places under legislative control all rights, privileges, and immunities derived by its charter directly from the State.

Not other matters outside, not agreements that are not made directly by the charter, that are not granted directly. I concede here that this reservation reserves under legislative control all the rights, privileges, and powers of these corporations which they derived by direct grant from the State; but it does not keep within legislative control agreements that are not franchises in their nature, contracts for the loan of money, debt contracts. The Senator from Ohio the other day insisted upon using the general word "contract," and as the Legislature had the right to create a corporation, and as the creation of the corporation and the acceptance of the charter made the contract, he asked me if the Legislature did not have the right to change that under such a reservation. Certainly, but the difference is between a charter contract and a debt contract. A charter contract is a grant directly from the State, without money consideration; it is a grant solely for the public good. A debt contract is not a grant from the State. The State may be a party to it, but a debt contract exists by agreement, not by grant in the proper sense of the word "grant." It exists by agreement, agreement between two parties able to contract, willing to contract, and who do contract. That is a matter of legislative control. It takes two parties to change a contract, and it takes two to make it. A debt contract and a grant stand on a different footing. The grant of charter privileges, the grant of franchises directly from the State as authority stand wholly on a different footing. This loan is not a grant from the State. You call it so. It is an agreement between the Government and the companies; it is an agreement founded on valuable consideration, and therefore it is beyond the power of legislative control.

